EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the opinion of the Attorney General in relation to the conflicting claims of Randolph Coyle, John Delafield, and the city of Cincinnati, to the unsold parts of fractional section No. 11, in fractional township No. 4, of fractional range No. 1, in J. C. Symmes's purchase, in the State of Ohio; which was read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PETITIONS.

Mr. MANGUM presented the memorials of Thomas K. Hall, of Brunswick county; E. H. McClure, of Buncombe county; J. C. Smith, of Alexander county; John Clayton, of Henderson county; James J. H. Russ, of Randolph county, and Samuel M. Hughes, of Stokes county, assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in North Carolina, praying additional compensation; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BELL. I present the memorials of twenty-four assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in the eastern district of Tennessee. They represent, in positive and strong terms, that the character and the formation of that country, being generally mountainous, and the population, except in the valleys, being very sparse, they have received nothing like an adequate compensation. I move that, without reading, they be referred to the Committee of Claims. They were so referred.

Mr. BADGER. I have, sir, the memorials of R. C. Miller, assistant marshal of Caldwell county, and J. M. Taylor, assistant marshal of Nash county, North Carolina, both complaining of losses and grievances arising from this same root of bitterness, and I move their reference to the Committee of Claims. They were so referred.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I have certain resolutions, or rather two or three series of resolutions, adopted at the last session of the Legislature of North Carolina, which, for reasons not necessary to be now mentioned, were transmitted to me so late that the opportunity was not afforded me to offer them to the Senate at the last legislative session; and in consequence of their having been left at home when I came here this winter, with certain papers to be transmitted immediately, and some delay in their transmission, I have not had the opportunity heretofore to present them to the Senate. As I do not wish to be any longer considered negligent of that duty, I present the resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, in relation to the encouragement of home industry, and requesting their members of both branches of Congress to vote against any increase of tariff duty.

I present, also, a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, in favor of the reopening of the inlet at or near Nag's Head, between the ocean and Albemarle Sound.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of North Carolina, in favor of opening a communication between Beaufort Harbor and the waters of Pamlico Sound; also, in favor of a hydrographical survey of the waters between Pamlico Sound and Beaufort Harbor, known as Core Sound. As my colleague suggests, I ask that they be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, presented a memorial of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in the eastern district of Tennessee, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BRIGHT presented three memorials of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Indiana, praying additional compensation; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. MASON. I present a petition which has been addressed to me, postmarked from New York, of Margaret Shields and Mary McDermitt, in behalf of themselves and many others.

They represent that the Secretary of State is about to interpose for the relief of certain Irish prisoners in Van Dieman's Land, and asking that their husbands, who they say are in like exile, may be included in such interposition. I do not quite agree with all the positions of the memorialists, but as the memorial is a respectful one, I have felt it to be my duty to submit it to the Senate; and I ask that, without being read, it may be laid upon the table. I have no idea, however, that the Secretary of State will ever make such interposition.

The memorial was laid upon the table.

Mr. HUNTER presented a petition of sundry merchants of New York, praying the correction of errors in the practice of the warehouse laws; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WADE presented a memorial of A. Raymond, an assistant marshal for taking the Seventh Census in Ohio, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the memorial of William Hollinshead, praying compensation for reporting and preparing for publication the decisions of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Minnesota; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DOWNS presented a petition of the curate, president, and members of the board of trustees of the Cathedral of St. Louis, in the city of New Orleans, praying that certain marble altars and other articles ordered in Europe for the use of that Cathedral may be entered free of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHASE presented a memorial of the trustees of the Miami University, praying a donation of land for the benefit of that institution; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, three memorials of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Ohio, praying additional compensation; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. UPHAM, it was Ordered, That the petition of Samuel White, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Michael Nash, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the documents on the files of the Senate relating to the claim of Franklin Hardin be referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That William E. McMaster have leave to withdraw his memorial.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the petition of James Higginbotham, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the petition of John A. Batin, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Frances E. Baden, reported a bill for her relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which the subject was referred, reported a bill to prevent unnecessary delays in the discharge of the cargoes of steamers; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Richard Mackall, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of R. D. Sewall, as executor of R. Sewall, deceased, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief the heirs and representatives of the late Robert Sewall; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. STOCKTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Ursula E. Cobb, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the message of the President of the United States of the 18th instant, reported a joint resolution extending the time of the commission under the convention with Brazil; which was read and passed to the second reading.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FELCH, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Michigan, in trust for the Zilwaukee, Grand Traverse and Mackinaw Plank Road Company, in aid of the construction of a plank road from Zilwaukee, on the Saginaw river, to Grand Traverse Bay, thence to the Straits of Mackinaw; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIGHT, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to create additional collection districts in the Territory of Oregon, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

CONTRACTS FOR DRY DOCKS, ETC.

Mr. BRODHEAD submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be directed to communicate to the Senate copies of the contracts under which the dry docks, basins, and railways have been built or are building at Kittery, Philadelphia, and Pensacola. Also, a copy of the contract for the construction of the dry dock, without the basin and railway, at San Francisco, and a copy of the advertisement inviting proposals for said work. Also, copies of all bids or proposals to construct said dry docks, basins, and railways. Also, to inform the Senate whether a board of officers has been appointed to select a site for a navy-yard or depot, or to locate the said dock, in California; and if said board has made a report, to communicate a copy thereof.

MILEAGE OF THE DELEGATE FROM OREGON.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will put on its passage a bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to regulate the mileage of the Delegate from the Territory of Oregon."

The bill was read a first time by its title and ordered to a second reading. It was also read a second time with a view to reference.

Mr. GWIN. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BADGER. This is a bill which concerns the mileage of one of the members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GWIN. It is the Delegate from the Territory of Oregon.

Mr. BADGER. Yes, sir; and the object is to take his case out of the operation of the proviso tacked to a former appropriation bill and let it stand on the general law. Now I wish to suggest whether it is worth while to have this bill referred.

In this case we need not exercise any revision over the proceedings of the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope not. I hope this bill will not be referred, but that it will be taken up and acted upon immediately. There is no necessity for a reference.

Mr. GWIN. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I hope that bill will be referred. It introduces an important principle, and I have no doubt it will be discussed when it comes up. I renew the motion that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. BRIGHT. I take issue with the Senator from Ohio. It does not introduce a new principle.

Mr. BADGER. Not at all.

Mr. BRIGHT. The object of this bill is to place the Delegate from the Oregon Territory exactly in the same position with every Senator and Representative and Delegate from the States and Territories of this Union. By a special enactment in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, at the close of the Congress before last, the Delegate from the Territory of Oregon was allowed but $2,500 mileage; while if his travel had been computed upon the principle by which the mileage of Senators and Representatives and other Delegates was calculated, it would have been $3,452. The limitation contained in the bill to which I have referred has expired, and this bill is designed to place the Delegate in the same position with all other Senators, Representatives, and Delegates.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly, to put him on a footing with all others.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope this bill will not be referred, but that it will be acted upon immediately.

Mr. CHASE. I am still of the opinion that this bill ought to be referred, and that it ought to be considered before it is acted upon. It is not exactly in order to discuss the merits of the proposition now but inasmuch as the Senator from Indiana has stated that the object of this bill is simply to place the Delegate from Oregon in the very same position which is occupied by Senators and Representatives from the west of the Rocky Mountains, I think it is due to myself, and due to the Senate, to say that I believe the Senator from Indiana is mistaken.

If I recollect right, at the conclusion of the session of 1850, a proviso was added to the appropriation bill, or rather to a bill for supplying deficiencies in appropriations, which restricted the mileage of the Senators and Representatives from California and the Delegate from Oregon to the land route. That proviso was construed as a temporary provision in the House, and the Representatives from California in the House were considered by the Committee on Mileage, and without the action of the House, as I believe, entitled to receive full mileage for the route by the Isthmus, without the limits of the United States. The honorable Senator from California presented that subject to the consideration of the Senate at the last session, and it was then referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee reported that the provision in that bill was a permanent and not a temporary provision. He therefore received his mileage by the overland route, while his colleagues in the House of Representatives received their mileage by the Isthmus route. This bill now proposes to repeal the clause of the act organizing the Territory of Oregon, which restricts the Delegate from that Territory to $2,500 mileage; and it will make two rules of compensation in mileage to the Senators and Representatives from the territory west of the Rocky Mountains—one rule for the Representatives and the Delegate in the other House, and another rule for the Senator in this body.

I merely say this in order to show that this is a question which it seems to me to deserve some consideration; and while I am for a liberal provision, I am for something like equality in this matter of mileage.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should like to hear the bill read.

The Secretary read the bill accordingly. It provides that so much of the act entitled "An act to establish the territorial government of Oregon," approved August 18th, 1848, as limits the mileage compensation of the Delegate from the said Territory, be repealed.

Mr. BRIGHT. The law organizing the Territory of Oregon limited the mileage of the Delegate from that Territory to $2,500. If there had been no clause in that bill restricting his mileage, he would clearly have been entitled to be paid according to the computation of the distance as the Senators and Representatives of the States and Territories generally. I regarded that limitation, as I think every Senator here must regard it, as unjust. At the last Congress an amendment was appended to the civil and diplomatic bill, giving to the then Delegate from the Territory of Oregon $3,452, which, as I stated before, was the amount of mileage he would be entitled to if computed according to the distance traveled. The object of this bill is to give the present Delegate from that Territory the same rate of mileage—nothing more. Hence I say that I think there is no necessity whatever for referring it. If Senators are willing to award justice to the Delegate from Oregon; if they are willing to measure out to him the same rate of compensation that they measure out to themselves, they can do it immediately. If they desire to single him out, and say that his travel is worth less than that of Senators and Representatives of California and other States and Territories, they have a right to do so; but I must say that, in my opinion, it would be very unjust and oppressive towards him. For that reason I oppose the reference of the bill.

Mr. BADGER. When I threw out the suggestion that I thought there was no necessity for a reference of this bill, I did not do it because I meant to intimate any opinion whether the House of Representatives ought or ought not to pass a bill for the purpose of repealing that restriction. It was sufficient for me that it concerned a Delegate in that body, and that the object of the bill was to put that Delegate on a footing with other Delegates and members of that House. I therefore thought it would not be exactly gracious to discover any disposition to revise what the House has done. I am satisfied that were the case reversed, we would not think that the House was treating us properly if it were to hesitate in adopting a bill we had passed for a like purpose. But the Senator from Ohio has called attention to another matter. If I understood his views on that subject—if his object is to amend this bill so as to produce an equality between the Senators and Representatives, I think it would be well, whether this bill is referred or not, to allow it to lie on the table until an amendment can be prepared. He has stated the action there was on the appropriation bill, and the terms of the clause which applied as well to Senators as to members of the House of Representatives from the State of California in respect to mileage. In the House that was interpreted as being a temporary provision. The regulation in the Senate was interpreted as being permanent; the consequence of which has been, that the Senator from California receives less compensation for mileage than the members of the House from California. Now that cannot be right; and if the Senator from Ohio proposes to move an amendment which shall declare the law, either the one way or the other, so as to give it the sanction of Congress, and to apply it to the members of both Houses, then either a reference or a postponement of the bill, in order to allow him to propose his amendment, would be proper; but otherwise it seems to me we ought to pass the bill at once.

Mr. CHASE. I did not propose to introduce any amendment to the bill; but I did think that either the Committee on Territories or the Committee on the Judiciary, having this bill under consideration, should introduce some provisions which would equalize the mileage, either in the way suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, or in some other mode. For myself, I am very willing to say that I have always considered that restriction upon the mileage both of the Senators and Representatives from California, contained in the deficiency bill of 1850, as in the nature of a temporary provision, and applicable only to the mileage for that year. That has been my opinion on the question as one of law merely. It was, however, submitted to the Judiciary Committee, who decided otherwise, and the Senate acquiesced in its decision.

Mr. BRIGHT. I respectfully submit to the Senate, whether it is proper, whether it is just towards the Delegate from Oregon, to embarrass this measure with so embarrassing a question as the mileage of members generally? The Delegate from Oregon is the only member of either House who has not the right to go to the proper officer and demand mileage for the distance he has traveled. This restriction is imposed upon him by previous enactment, and it requires some legislation to give him that amount of money to which all admit he is entitled. I hope the Senate will not embarrass the bill by any other question.

The motion to refer was not agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANGUM. My attention has not been called to this bill, nor to the principles involved in it. I have usually been on the liberal side of questions of this sort, but I would ask that it may be allowed to lie on the table for the present, that we may have an opportunity to look into the measure, and of considering the principles which are involved in it. I do not mean; by any motion of that sort, to indicate anything like opposition to it. I do not know what it is, and therefore I move that it do lie upon the table for the present.

The motion was not agreed to, the vote, on a division, being 15 in the affirmative and 16 in the negative. There was, however, no quorum voting.

The Senate having been counted, 33 Senators were found to be present.

Mr. MANGUM. My simple object is to gain a little time to look into it. My motion is made with no hostile purpose towards the measure itself. I have no desire to oppose it.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask the Senator from North Carolina, if he was in his place at the time the bill was read? The object of my inquiry is to ascertain whether he heard the statement of the facts of the case. If he had, I am sure he would allow this bill to pass.

Mr. SEWARD. If the Senator from North Carolina will withdraw his motion for a few minutes I will renew it.

Mr. MANGUM. I withdraw it.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to say, that I have no opinion made up against this bill. I am not prepared to vote either for or against it. I want time to think of it, and that I suppose is the object of all the Senators who desire that the bill shall be laid upon the table. Their object is not to defeat the bill, but to have an opportunity of considering the question which it presents. I mean no more, when I make the motion to lay the bill on the table for the present.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the honorable Senator will withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. SEWARD. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGHT. I would dislike very much to press this bill against the sense of the Senate, but I am quite sure that every Senator present, who understands the question, is prepared to vote upon it. It is a very plain question, and is within a very small compass. Any Senator who will take time to refer to the 16th section of the law organizing the Territory of Oregon, will see that the Delegate from that Territory is restricted to $2,500 as mileage. The first Delegate elected from that Territory was allowed, under an amendment to the civil and diplomatic bill, $3,452. Why was he allowed that amount? Because the distance he traveled would, under the general law, entitle him to that amount. I know there is not a Senator on this floor who will refuse to allow the Delegate from Oregon to receive the same amount which was given to his predecessor. That is all he asks, and all admit that he is entitled to it. If he be paid, as Senators and Representatives are paid, according to the distance traveled, he would be entitled to receive $3,452. But, I repeat, he is the only member of either House who is not entitled to go to the proper officer and draw mileage according to the distance he has traveled. That is on account of the fact, that a law is in force which prohibits him from doing so. The object of this bill is to repeal so much of the law as limits his mileage to $2,500, and proposes to give him $3,452.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to know by what law he would be limited to $3,425?

Mr. BRIGHT. By the general law which provides that the members shall receive their mileage according to the usual traveled route from their place of residence to the capital of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. That is across the Isthmus.

Mr. BRIGHT. If he travels across the Isthmus he ought to be paid for it, but it is not. It is according to the overland route, and it has been so decided in the other branch of Congress.

Mr. GWIN. The honorable Senator is mistaken. The fact is directly the reverse. The House has decided that the members from California are entitled to be paid according to the Isthmus route, and they have received mileage according to that route. This bill proposes to put the Delegate from Oregon on the same footing as members of the House.

Mr. BRIGHT. As I said before, the object of the bill is to pay the Delegate from Oregon as other Delegates and members are paid. It is wholly immaterial by what route he travels. I know he would not charge by any other than the route recognized by law. I hope the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MANGUM] will not single out this individual from all others, and apply a rule in his case that is clearly unjust.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senator from Indiana will permit the bill, without being referred, to lie over until to-morrow. There is misapprehension about it, and I hope he will give Senators an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will not press the matter if Senators desire to examine so important a question.

Mr. MANGUM. In reference to the remarks of the Senator from Indiana, I have to say that I am not prepared at this time to make any invidious discrimination between this Delegate and any member of the House. Not at all; but I really think it is not according to the regular process of legislation to force the determination of a question about which even the friends of the measure differ as to the amount to be paid, and the principle upon which it is to be paid. I renew the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State.

Mr. UNDERWOOD resumed and concluded the speech which he commenced yesterday in opposition to the bill and in favor of his amendment. His speech will be found in the Appendix.

The PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment reported as a substitute by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. One or two Senators stated to me that they wanted to make some amendments to my amendment, which would make it more agreeable to them. They thought it would be better to let the amendment proposed by the committee be acted upon first, and then I could renew my amendment, which would be subject to amendment. I will, therefore, withdraw my amendment until the question is taken on the substitute of the committee. When that is adopted, I shall renew my amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn; though, in the present state of my health, I shall probably be unable to address the Senate on the subject, and I do not move the adjournment for that purpose; but there are a number of Senators who have spoken to me, and said they presumed no vote would be taken to-day. They are therefore absent, and hence I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 19, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business before the House is House bill No. 104, being a bill granting the right of way and making a donation of public lands to the State of Missouri, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein.

Mr. MACE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his question?

Mr. MACE. I sent to the table on yesterday two memorials and petitions, which I did not hear read by the Clerk this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remark, that such matters are journalized and printed, but are not read to the House. I understand such has been the practice of this body ever since the adoption of the rule allowing of the filing of petitions without presentation to the House.

ATTENDANCE OF COUNSEL.

Mr. ORR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill to facilitate the attendance of counsel residing at a distance from the Capitol, by classifying the docket of the Supreme Court," which was read a first and second time by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent of the House, introduced a memorial from a portion of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon; which was ordered to lie upon the table and be printed.

Mr. LANE. I have two other memorials—
Mr. GOODENOW. I object to their introduction, and call for the orders of the day.

GRANT OF LANDS TO MISSOURI.

The SPEAKER. The order of the day is called for, which is House bill No. 104, and upon that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLER] has the floor.

Mr. MILLER addressed the House for an hour in favor of the objects of the bill, which had already been discussed, he said, by the ablest minds of the country; called attention to the resources of the Western States, and the aid they afford to the commerce of the Eastern—to the increased settlement of lands in the vicinity of the great rivers; from which he inferred that by encouraging internal improvements, a similar effect would be produced.

[See Appendix for Mr. M.'s Speech.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. Is there a motion pending to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. There is.

Mr. HARRIS. Believing, as I do, that this House is as well prepared to act at this moment upon this subject as it will be at any future time, I move the previous question.

Mr. RANTOUL. I ask the gentleman who has made that motion to withdraw it. So far all the speaking upon this bill has been made by gentlemen coming from one section of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will not withdraw. I want this subject disposed of.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask my colleague to withdraw for one moment, in order to allow me to make a suggestion, by which this subject can be gotten over for the present, and allow the other committees to be called. It is not competent for any other committee to report so long as this subject continues before the House.

Mr. CARTTER. Let us send it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; that will get it out of the way.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee not to withdraw his call for the previous question. We are as well prepared now to vote upon this bill as we ever shall be. If the friends of the bill can carry it through, I want to give them a chance.

Mr. HARRIS. I have not much feeling in relation to whether the previous question be now pressed or not. I called it in deference to what I conceived to be the wishes of the House.

Mr. JONES. If the friends of the bill wish to press it to a vote now, I am ready. I will not object to the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table. The bill before the House will then lie over till to-morrow.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no! let's dispose of it now.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. What will be the effect if the House proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table? Will this bill come up again in the morning?

The SPEAKER. It will come up as unfinished business.

The question was taken, and decided in the negative, and the House refused to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

The House was then divided, to ascertain whether there was a second to the demand for the previous question; and there were—ayes 38, noes 116. So there was not a second.

Mr. RANTOUL. Mr. Chairman, I desire—

Mr. JONES. It is not my purpose to make a speech, but it is evident, that while this bill is continued before the House that no other committee can be called for reports.

Mr. HALL. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] has addressed the House once upon this question. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANTOUL] now claims the floor, and, according to the rules of the House—the gentleman from Tennessee having spoken once—I think he is entitled to it.

Mr. JONES. I do not propose to make a speech. I only desire to make the proposition, that the business be passed over until all the other committees shall be called for reports, and then, when the call reaches the Committee on Public Lands again, that this subject will come up as unfinished business. All I want is to allow the other committees to report. I have no report to make, but I think that is due to the other committees of the House.

Mr. HALL. I have no objection in the world to the postponement of this business, provided it is postponed in such a way that it shall come up again. And if the gentleman from Tennessee will modify his proposition so that this subject shall be postponed till some day certain, and made the special order for that day, so that it will come up precisely in the same condition which it now occupies, I have no objection. But I do not want it postponed to go on to the Speaker's table again, for if it does, we shall never reach it.

Mr. JONES. My proposition does not carry it to the Speaker's table. It only provides that it shall go over until the other committees shall be called for reports. Then, when the Committee on Public Lands is called, it will again come up, and will occupy precisely the same position which it now holds. I am in favor of having this matter go over, but I am opposed to making it a special order.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee requires unanimous consent.

Mr. ORR and others objected.

Mr. RANTOUL said that, in his opinion, the old thirteen States have certainly a great interest in determining what shall be done with the public lands, in some respect equal with the new; and the question is, what use can be made with the public lands until some general measure shall be agreed upon beneficial and equally advantageous to the old and the new States.

A general plan of railroads, he said, has been commenced, (not confined to any particular State or section,) forming a portion of a great and well-contrived system. The commerce of the nation is destined to be an interchange between the valley of the Mississippi and foreign countries to a great extent. It is a matter of interest, then, that additional channels of intercourse shall be constructed, open and convenient. So far as this bill proposes to aid Missouri, it does so without the loss of a dollar to the General Government. If the Atlantic States would have a great commercial and navigating interest, they should look to the agricultural productions of the West, which keep that interest alive. He would say to the people of the Northeast that cotton, woolen, and iron must some day or other be manufactured hundreds of miles west of where they now are. The precise year cannot be given; but the West will cease to buy those things of the Northeast, and make them just when it shall think that it will be to its advantage. Therefore, the Northeast should encourage the West in agriculture, opening roads to the Northeast and Southeast, connecting the Atlantic slope with the valley of the Mississippi in the cheapest and most practicable way. So sure as a course shall be taken to depress western agriculture, so sure will manufacturing depart from the Northeast to the West.

[See Appendix for Mr. R.'s speech.]

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana, next obtained the floor, and said: I have but a few words to say on this subject—

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) I would suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana, that as he will have the floor in the morning, and as this will be the first business that comes up, it would be better, with his consent, to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union now.

[Cries of "No, no!" and "Let him go on!"]

Mr. MOORE. I should be happy to oblige the gentleman from Alabama, but I will remind him that to-morrow is Friday, and private bill day.

I should much prefer speaking to-morrow morning, if I was sure of getting the floor; but as it is private bill day, I know I shall have no opportunity of being heard, and I shall therefore retain the floor now.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman would be entitled to the floor in the morning in preference to anybody else, or to any other business. My object is to get into the committee, and finish up a special order there which is hanging in the way of all other business. We have time to dispose of it to-day, and I should be glad if the House would so indulge me.

Mr. MOORE. If I was sure I could get the floor to-morrow, I would yield to the gentleman's suggestion.

[Cries of "Go on now!"]

Mr. ORR. If I understand the rules of the House correctly, the gentleman from Alabama has a right to take the floor from the gentleman from Louisiana, the morning hour having expired.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Not after the floor has been assigned to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have certainly a right to take the floor from the gentleman, as the morning hour has expired.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand the rules.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Such is not the rule.

Mr. HOUSTON. Any member has a right, at the expiration of the morning hour, to move to proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table. If the gentleman from Louisiana had been in the midst of his speech, I could have committed that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Alabama to submit such a motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I submit that motion now. The question was put, and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. I shall not detain the House, Mr. Speaker, for the full hour allowed me by the rules, in the discussion of this question. But as I had the honor to introduce a bill kindred to the one now under consideration, I feel it incumbent upon me to say a few words.

The whole subject of the policy of making these grants may as well be discussed now, and on this bill as on the other bills which will probably come before us. I had the honor of introducing a bill to grant to the State of Louisiana the right of way through and a portion of the public lands, which is now before the Committee on Public Lands, and will, I hope, be reported in a few days. But as I may not then have an opportunity of giving my views upon this subject, I embrace this opportunity to do it.

I was sorry, the other day, to hear a gentleman upon this floor endeavor to connect this subject with the question of internal improvements by the General Government. Now, I maintain that this cannot fairly be done. This is simply a donation for public purposes. By looking over your statute-book, from the very commencement of this Government, you will find that the very first law that was ever passed regulating the public lands, made large donations of public lands for public purposes. The very first bill upon the subject of lands, passed before even the adoption of the present Constitution, made large donations of the public lands for the purposes of public education. I will state to the House a few of the grants of this description that have been made. We find by reference to the statute-book, that large grants of the public lands have been made to cities, to towns, to counties for county-seats, and to States for seats of government. A grant of land was made to build the city of Detroit—not only a portion of the old town, but 10,000 acres besides. The city of Natchez also has had a grant. Four sections of land were granted to the State of Indiana for the purpose of fixing a seat of government. Thirty-six sections and 1,620 acres besides, were granted to the State of Alabama for the same purpose. I find that grants have been made even to the old States. For instance, a grant of land was made to Connecticut for a deaf and dumb asylum—and very properly, I think. Illinois also had a grant of lands for a seat of government.

I find that the first grant of lands for purposes of internal improvement was made in 1823, when a grant was made to the State of Ohio, to construct a road from the Lower Rapids of the Miami to Lake Erie, one mile on each side of the road—for in those days it was all wild country, and the United States thought proper to make a grant of the whole land and not of the alternate sections as we now do. Another grant of a like nature was made to the State of Ohio in 1827, for a road from Columbus to Sandusky. In 1827, these grants for railroads and canals were commenced. The first grant was to the State of Illinois, for the construction of a canal, alternate sections of five miles on each side; and in the same year a similar grant was made to the State of Indiana, for a canal from the Wabash to Lake Erie. In 1828, another grant was made to the State of Ohio, and in 1830, further time was granted to the State to locate those lands, and they were authorized to apply the grant either to the canal or to a railroad. I will remark here, to my Democratic friends, that this bill was approved by General Jackson, who was the first to put an end to improper appropriations for the purposes of internal improvement. A grant was made to Florida for a canal, and 400,000 acres of land were granted to Alabama for improving the rapids in the Tennessee river, known as the Muscle Shoals. James K. Polk, who was as much opposed to internal improvements as any man in this nation, advocated and voted for those two bills.

Now, sir, I contend that the bill now before us cannot connect itself with the subject of internal improvements by the General Government. It is simply a donation of public lands for public uses—a donation which I hope and trust will be returned to the Government, not only once, but twofold, or threefold.

Now, let us lay all abstractions aside and take a plain, common-sense view of this subject. The fourth section of the bill provides—

"That the said lands hereby granted to the said State shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature thereof, for the purposes aforesaid, and no other; and the said railroads shall be and remain a public highway, for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charge upon the transportation of any property or troops of the United States."

Most certainly the General Government has a right to contract for the transportation of troops and their supplies. Here we say to the State of Missouri, make this road through your country, transport our troops and supplies, and we will give you every alternate section of land, but with the proviso that the remaining sections shall bring double the usual price.

Again, by the 6th section of the bill, we require the State of Missouri to carry the mails along these roads at such price as Congress may stipulate.

Now, we may suppose that Congress will not ask that the mail shall be carried at a lower rate than is paid for other and similar routes in the United States. But you must provide for carrying it over that route as rapidly as it can be carried by private express, otherwise the mail matter will decrease and letters will be carried by private conveyance. Now, we promise to transport whatever you have to transport free of charge; and I ask gentlemen if it is not a fair and liberal proposition, and whether we have not the right to ask that aid shall be given us to construct these roads for the considerations mentioned?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of the United States gives to Congress full power to dispose of these public lands, and to make all needful rules and regulations in relation thereto, and therefore, in accordance with this provision of the Constitution, the power of Congress to make these grants cannot be questioned.

But this question may be considered in another point of view. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHILLIPS] on yesterday alluded to the fact, that the State of Missouri is prohibited from taxing the lands sold by the United States for the space of five years; and she is also prohibited from taxing the lands given to soldiers for the space of three years. Now, a like clause has been introduced into the constitution, or rather into the act admitting the State of Louisiana into the Union. But that act goes further. It provides that "the river Mississippi, and the navigable rivers leading into the same, or into the Gulf of Mexico, shall be common highways and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said State as to other citizens of the United States, without any tax, 'duty, impost, or toll therefor, imposed by the said State.'" So that if the people of Louisiana should wish to-morrow to make an expenditure of money for the purpose of making any of these rivers navigable, they could not impose any tax, or impost, or toll upon any citizen of the United States for traveling through that channel. Now, it will be perceived that the old States have a kind of guardianship over us. They keep the new States in a sort of pupillage, although they are full grown. Very well, we do not complain of it, but we wish the old States, as good fathers of families, to act liberally, generous, and kind towards us.

I now beg leave to call the attention of the House to one of the projects for a railroad, which I had the honor of presenting to the House, and for which we ask that a grant of the public lands should be made. The road is to run from the bank of the Mississippi river, opposite New Orleans, to Opelousas, and from thence to Texas. The whole distance is from two hundred and fifty to two hundred and sixty miles. The first fifty miles will run from New Orleans to Lafourche, through a swamp country, where the United States are not in the possession of one foot of land, as a letter from the register of the land office, which I hold in my hand, will show. Upon the route from Lafourche to Berwick's bay, there are about 3,200 acres of land belonging to the Government, as will appear from a letter from the Surveyor General of Louisiana, which I now have before me. The rest is either land granted before the change of Government, or ceded to the State, as swamp land. This route goes through swamp lands which are susceptible of being reclaimed, and we trust it will soon be done. The whole route from New Orleans to Berwick's bay has been surveyed, but no company has been organized, because under our constitution, no special acts of incorporation can be passed. It requires that all laws shall be general; and it was found, when we endeavored to get up this company, that the general act of incorporation then in force, would not answer for a corporation for railroads, and therefore we were obliged to defer it to the present session of the Legislature of the State.

From Berwick's bay to Opelousas, a distance of about ninety miles, the road will run principally through a prairie and over lands which were granted before a change of Government; and the United States will not be required to give any lands at all, except it may be a spot here and there in the prairie. The six miles may extend so as to cover some small tracts of land from Opelousas to Bayou Chicot, a distance of twenty-seven miles. A large portion of the lands on the route were also granted before the change of Government, the inferior portions only remaining from Bayou Chicot to the Sabine river, a distance of about fifty-seven miles. It will run through a pine forest now of little or no value to the United States. Indeed, I will venture to say, that if the whole of this portion of these lands were to be put up at public auction to-morrow, they would not bring ten cents per acre. But once run a railroad through them, and you make them valuable for the lumber to the prairie country, in the vicinity and below, and also valuable to the prairie country in Texas. For I hope and trust that if we ever get this road through to the Sabine river, that it will be continued on through Texas. The subject is now before the Texas Legislature, and I feel certain that if we can once get this road completed to the border of Texas, it will be continued on through that State to El Paso.

According to a hasty calculation which I have made, the grant which we ask for for the whole line of the main road will not exceed 230,000 acres of land belonging to the United States, and nearly all of that is land which is now entirely worthless to the Government. As I have remarked, it is not worth ten cents per acre. But run your railroad through it, and you will make every alternate section worth $2 50 per acre for the timber; the two branches contemplated will take but a small additional quantity.

A MEMBER. What is the length of your road?

Mr. MOORE. About two hundred and fifty or two hundred and sixty miles. I say the grant will be small when compared with the length of the road. The public lands do not lie along the route of the road for more than fifty or at most sixty miles.

Now, to show you that it is probable that this road will be made, in a series of addresses which I made to the people along the route upon this subject, I calculated the produce of seven of the parishes between Lafourche and St. Landry for the year 1849. I will here remark, that when I went there a great portion of that country was a wild prairie, on which cattle were pastured, and a little corn made. But in the year 1849, those seven little parishes produced 72,000 hogsheads of sugar, which produced about 36,000 hogsheads of molasses. They raised about 20,000 bales of cotton, and sent to market about 40,000 head of cattle, all of which was then worth about $5,400,000. I showed that by making this road they—the inhabitants and productive classes of those parishes—would save in freight, insurance, and passage in one year, at least $300,000. Now, if the people of those parishes have intelligence enough to raise that amount of produce so valuable, they will certainly have intelligence enough to take this matter up, and make this road. I take it for granted that this road will be made, at least as far as Opelousas; and if this Congress will make us the grant of land which we desire, I feel no hesitation in saying, that it will go as far as the Sabine, or Texas line. And if it ever gets that far, just as sure as I stand here, it will be extended through the State of Texas. In relation to this route through Texas, I will quote from Captain R. B. Marcy's report of a survey of the route from El Paso to Red river, in which he says, page 224, "Our road passes over uniformly level ground, crossing no mountains or deep valleys, and for five hundred miles on the eastern extremity runs through the heart of a country possessing great natural advantages." "I conceive it to be the best overland wagon route to California." Speaking of the practicability of a railroad along that line, he says, (page 226:) "There are as few difficulties to encounter as any other route that can be found in our country." Page 224: "We found a smooth road over gently undulating country of prairie and timber, and abounding with numerous clear spring branches for two hundred miles, and in many places covered with groves of musquitto timber." "The soil cannot be surpassed for fertility." Page 226: "It would appear to have been designed by the Great Architect of the universe for a railroad. From El Paso to Red river is about seven hundred miles."—See Etc. Doc. Sen., 31st Cong., 1st sess., No. 64.

I have not the least doubt that if this grant is made by Congress, that the road will be continued on to El Paso.

The other day a discussion arose in reference to the immense expenditures of money for supplying our Army upon the southwestern frontier. Now if this road is made we will transport your supplies to the Sabine river free of charge. We will carry your mails through at the lowest possible prices; and instead of being weeks in carrying it to the Sabine river, as is now the case, we will carry it through in twelve hours. Then is it not something worth looking at, when we see these supplies, which have cost the United States so much money, carried free of cost? General Jesup states that the opening of the Red river alone would save $45,000 a year in supplying the fifth regiment of infantry, now stationed on the northern frontier of Texas. Now, if we will put down all your supplies and troops upon the borders of Texas free of charge, I ask what the United States would then save? Can there be a doubt but it would save double $45,000 in a year? I venture to assert that these lands, from Bayou Chicot to the Sabine, could not be sold now for $50,000 if put up at auction, unless there was a prospect of a railroad through them, in which case I admit they would become valuable.

There is another subject to which I desire briefly to allude. It is well known that Congress have passed laws in relation to the inspection of steamboat boilers; and for what reason? Principally to save life. It is also a well-known fact, that the danger in traveling upon a railroad is much less than by any other mode of traveling. It is less even than traveling by private carriage. If I were to state the returns of the railroads in New England, and in England, you would hardly believe me when I say that in upwards of 20,000,000 persons who traveled by railroad, less than 200 were killed, and most of them on account of improper conduct of their own. In New England, out of 19,000,000 passengers and employes, only 190 odd were killed and wounded, and less than one half of them were passengers.

Now, does not this enter into the consideration of the legislation of the country? If we have a right to appoint inspectors to inspect steamboat boilers, have we not the same right to contribute to the means of lessening the dangers of traveling, and making it a hundredfold less? I trust that this House will make these grants of land. Yesterday the subject of homesteads was brought up. If that is thought to be the best thing for us to do, I hope this House will adopt it. I think that any mode which will keep these lands out of the hands of speculators, is a judicious and proper one for this Congress to adopt. I think that the greatest curse that can befall a country is to have large bodies of land come into the hands of speculators. For many years past I have been in a situation to speculate in lands, if I had chosen to have done so. But I have such a horror, such a detestation for that traffic, on account of its injurious influence in the prosperity of a country, that I have never bought a single acre of land for speculation, alone. It is because, in my younger days, when I was poor, and strove hard for a living, I saw the impropriety of such a course. This subject of granting the right of way and making grants of land for railroads has been so thoroughly discussed here, and so much more ably than I can expect to discuss it, that I will say nothing more upon the subject, but I will merely give to this House some little experience of my own. Fifty-one years ago I descended the Mississippi. I was then young, but the scenery of that river, as it then appeared, is most vividly imprinted upon my mind. At that time there was not a white inhabitant upon the bank of that river, from above the mouth of the Ohio to a place then designated as Walnut Hills, but now known as Vicksburg, save a few at New Madrid and environs. At that period the now great, fertile, and flourishing Valley of the Mississippi contained but a few thousand souls. Then a few flat and keel-boats transported the whole produce of that valley to a market. In 1812 the first steamboat that ever plied the waters of that river, landed at the Levee of New Orleans. I was fortunate enough to be there and see it land, and to be one of the first passengers upon that boat on its first departure from the wharf of New Orleans.

Now look at the change that has taken place upon those waters. In the place of one solitary steamboat, you have thousands of floating palaces stemming the current of that mighty stream as if it were by magic. Now there are ten millions of souls in that great valley. Now, instead of a commerce which required only a few flat-boats to accommodate it, you have a commerce which amounts, according to the estimate of 1851, at $220,000,000. The exports of domestic products from New Orleans, then merely nominal, now amount to upwards of $67,000,000 per annum. And all this mighty change has been brought about by American industry and American enterprise, and I am enabled to stand here, through the partiality of my constituents, and say that I am proud of having been one of the pioneers of that far southwest—proud of being a citizen of this glorious Union. Who would not be proud? Ah, I hear a still voice saying that there are a few who, with sacrilegious hand, would tare down this fair fabric. May God in his mercy forgive them—they know not what they do. Well, if in my short life I have seen all these changes, and brought about mostly by the effect of steam applied to boats by the invention of the great Fulton, what may we not expect to see in the next fifty years by these railroads, when brothers and sons living in the far West upon the Pacific ocean, will be brought together as neighbors! I have within these fifty years seen all of Louisiana purchased, and now that purchase contains four States. Since that time Texas has been annexed and New Mexico and California have been acquired. When these railroads shall be completed, which are now proposed, we shall have an intercommunication from the eastern shores of our country upon the Atlantic to the Pacific on the west. Shall we not make some small grants of our public domain towards the accomplishment of so great an object? I hope if we live a few years longer we shall see these railroads reaching to the far western limits of Texas, and the day may come possibly, when those who are now here in this House, when in three times forty-eight hours, persons can go from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Then consider the effects upon this great nation and upon this great western country.

I take it that no man can doubt that the very instant you put these railroads through the public lands, you make every inch of that public land three fold more valuable than it now is. I know in my own State, along the roads that I propose, it will have the effect to make the public lands along them ten times more valuable.

In the bill which I had the honor to present, there is another railroad, which it is proper for me to mention. It is a road from Vicksburg, across the country, to Shreveport, and thence to Texas. I will only say to the House, that this route is considered of sufficient importance for a survey to have been ordered by Congress, or the Senate, and that a survey and estimate has been made by W. H. Sidell, civil engineer. He has made an able report upon it, and says there are no difficulties to encounter that cannot easily be surmounted. The estimate of the whole cost of the road is at the rate of $15,000 per mile. I will say, that although the whole length of that road is one hundred and eighty miles, yet this grant of land to aid in its construction will be small in proportion to its length. And why? Because a large portion of it will go through lands already ceded to the State of Louisiana, and granted before the change of the Government, and therefore the grant by Congress will not be so great as its length would suppose. The public lands along this route, are principally poor land; very little or none have been sold for more than the minimum price, a dollar and a quarter an acre, except upon the borders of the Red river, where they have been disposed of long ago. I estimate that the grant by the bill will not exceed 400,000 acres. So that the whole grant which I apply for to this Congress, will not amount to more than, as near as I can now estimate it, from 630,000 to 650,000 acres of land. And for that we propose to carry your troops gratuitously, and to carry your mails, and to give every facility to the Government, which will make these lands ten times more valuable than they now are. I feel that I can contribute nothing further to aid this question, and that so much has already been said, that little or nothing has been left for me to say.

Mr. FICKLIN. This subject has already been so ably discussed by gentlemen who have preceded me, that it is with much of diffidence and distrust of my ability to interest the members of this House, that I now attempt to add anything to what has been said. When I hear members from the older States complaining that the grants of land which have been and are likely to be made by this Government, are extravagant; when I hear them say that the Congress of the United States is squandering the public domain; and when I hear the representatives of the people from the twelve land States and from the Territories characterized and denounced as land pirates and robbers, it causes me to reflect, and ask if it is possible that that judgment to which we have all, in the new States, so unanimously come, can possibly be wrong—to ask myself if it is necessary that that decision should be reviewed. And I confess that the more I reflect upon the subject, the more I examine this land question, the more thoroughly, and the more decidedly am I convinced that the course and policy of this Government should be more liberal in the future than it has been in the past; that instead of acting in a parsimonious manner, instead of holding in the miser's gripe the 1,400,000,000 of acres of land which belong to this Government, it should be dealt out liberally wherever a donation of this land can be made to subserve the public interest. Will gentlemen of this House adopt the selfish policy, that, because these lands cannot be granted alike to the new and old States, they will vote against grants to the new States because, forsooth, they may locally benefit the new States more than they do the old? Assuredly not.

If I understand the reports which have been made by the present and former Commissioners of the Land Office, the amount of public land in the twelve land States, whose names it is not necessary for me to repeat, because they are familiar to every member upon this floor, was 386,000,000 of acres, within a fraction. Of that 386,000,000, including all that has been set apart for common schools, all that has been granted for seminary purposes, all that has been granted for purposes of internal improvement, less than one sixteenth part of the whole public domain in the twelve land States has been donated for these purposes to those States. Is that liberal? Is it extravagant? It does not strike me in that light. What should be the policy of this Government? In what does the wealth of a nation consist? Does it consist in holding hundreds of millions of acres of land for the deer and wolf to roam over? Is it not rather, sir, in planting upon every section of that land a tenant—a man who is able to till and cultivate it, and to bring it into that use for which nature's God had designed it? Of what avail are the millions of acres lying west of the Alleghany mountains to any person—when does their value commence? When do they begin to be useful to the country and its people? Not until there is placed upon it, to subdue its wild nature, to bring it to cultivation, and to subject it to the arts of industry, a husbandman who will make it of benefit to the Government. I acknowledge my indebtedness to the member from Massachusetts, [Mr. RANTOUL,] who has taken so large, enlightened, and liberal a view of the land question. I think it was probably as far back as 1838 that Mr. Calhoun, now no more, presented his project with regard to the final disposition of the public domain. It was then that he foresaw that the present land system would not continue for a great number of years. He then foresaw that the proprietorship of the General Government of the public lands of the United States would soon cease—that in a few years, or a few score years, it would depart from it. With that view of the system, he presented a plan by which the lands were to be granted to the States in which they were situated, to be disposed of by those States, a portion of the proceeds to be paid into the Treasury of the General Government. It has been intimated also to-day, by the honorable member from Massachusetts, [Mr. RANTOUL,] that in a series of years this must be the result. It is certainly so. That is to be the ultimate destination of these lands. We all know that the weight of population is rapidly passing to the West. We are all aware of the rapid growth of that section of the Union, and those of us who live there feel that the new States are not placed upon a footing with the old States in regard to population. And why, it is asked, are we not placed upon a footing with the old States? The old thirteen States, together with those added since, except the twelve land States, are the proprietors of the soil within their limits. They possess the right of eminent domain. The power of the Legislatures of the thirteen old States, to which may be added Tennessee, Kentucky, Vermont, and probably others, to tax the lands within their limits is absolute and unquestioned. Is that the case with the new States of the West? Of the contrary we are all aware. We all know that but a very small portion of the lands situated in the new States are subject to taxation. We might go back further, and inquire why this distinction has been made. We might inquire how the title to these lands was originally acquired. Those granted by Virginia and Georgia were lands originally belonging to the British Crown, and acquired as the consequence of the Revolution; and they were claimed by the States within whose limits they fell. In consequence of difficulties springing up in regard to the title, these lands were ceded to the Federal Government. Nothing was paid originally in dollars and cents by the General Government to any one of these States for these lands.

The new States coming into the Union upon an equal footing with the old States, each one of them would have obtained the right of eminent domain to the lands situated within their limits. They would have had that right but for the provision which was contained in the ordinance of 1787, restricting and limiting the new States in that respect. That was an act of might, I contend, against right; because I hold whenever a State comes into this Union, it should be with all the rights, privileges, and immunities of the old States. With the Western States, however, it is not so. They came in under certain restrictions. That limitation was extended to the acts of admission by which Ohio, and other Northwestern and Southwestern States have come into the Union. This provision having been ingrafted upon the ordinance of 1787—these conditions were imposed upon the new States when they were admitted into the Union, when they were not able to assert and maintain their own rights; it should not be thought hard and strange that when they have the power to maintain them that they should exercise it. I tell the gentlemen who prophesy that the new States will own the lands within their limits, that he most probably will live to see the fulfillment of his prophecy. I have not made the calculation, nor is it necessary that I should do so, as to the precise amount which a tax of a half cent per acre would have yielded since they have been owned by the Government, yet, suffice it to say, that there would have been furnished a sum of money greater than that is asked for any railroad improvement. It would cover everything in connection with the alternate sections—placing them at $1 25 per acre. We are told, in granting these lands, that they are all to be estimated at $1 25 per acre—that in granting 1,000,000 of acres you grant $1,250,000. That has been the estimate of gentlemen upon this floor. Is that correct? The way to ascertain if it is correct is, to turn to their own States, and see if it applies there. The honorable member from Tennessee, [Mr. WATKINS,] who addressed the House upon yesterday, gave us data which I was very glad to hear from him. He gave us information in regard to the grants made to his State. I will say to him, that many of his views developed in the portion of the speech to which I have reference—for the provision of a homestead for the actual settler, met with my hearty approval. Members, by looking to their own States, will see that the estimation of all lands at $1 25 per acre, is a fallacious calculation. Take, for instance, the State of Tennessee. North Carolina, in 1789, made a most munificent grant to the State of Tennessee—of lands within her limits, subject, however, to the satisfaction of North Carolina military land warrants.

It turns out, as I understand it, that not one cent was ever realized by the General Government out of that grant; and what was not taken to satisfy North Carolina military land warrants, was offered for sale at twelve and a half cents per acre from year to year, and would not bring that sum even at the present time. Afterwards, in 1846, land was granted free of charge to the State of Tennessee, and I understand that even now any person may obtain a title to a tract of these lands transferred to him, by paying the clerk of the county in which they lie his fees, (seventy-five cents,) for his services in preparing the papers. A portion of these lands are bestowed upon settlers free of all charge, except the fee of seventy-five cents to the officer, and yet, when we come to talk about the new States of Missouri, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, and others of the new States and Territories, every acre of land granted by the General Government is set down at $1 25 an acre. I repeat, there is not a State in this Union, and never has been at any time, when the wild lands would be worth, taken together, $1 25 per acre. How is it with Illinois? I believe it is not denied, that Illinois has the largest proportion of agricultural lands of any State in the Union. She does not compete with her sister State Missouri, in the variety and abundance of ores, but in respect of her farming land, her fertile and productive soil, not one of the States of this Union can compare with the State of Illinois. Is the land in that State worth a dollar and a quarter? Not so. I doubt whether, upon an average, it is worth fifty cents an acre. We have prairies there that would astonish a man who had been raised in a timbered country, and used to clearing his farm by cutting down large trees, rolling logs in the spring, and getting off dead timber from his fields. We have very large prairies there, extending one hundred and fifty to two hundred miles in length, interspersed, to be sure, with timber. You may travel from Chicago, upon the lake, south, for one hundred and fifty miles through a prairie country, and it is one vast body of land, and for richness and fertility of soil, is not to be surpassed upon this continent. The prairies in this section are some of them fifteen, twenty, and thirty miles in width. How long, in the course of ordinary settlement, will it be before these lands are sold at $1 25 per acre, without extraneous aid. I venture to say, that they would not be settled within one hundred years.

The last Congress granted to Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama, alternate sections of land for the construction of the Mobile and Chicago Railroad. That road passes through this prairie country, and will run from fifty to sixty miles, and in some places much greater distances, without having any considerable elevation or depression to overcome, and across the most beautiful country for a railroad that can be found in the Union. The passing of that railroad from north to south, will bring into market those lands which would not be sold for a century to come, and gives to this Government $2 50 per acre for land which could not be sold for fifty cents per acre without the road. That is the effect which that railroad will bring about. That railroad will be made, and it will enable the people of the North, and of the Northwest, to exchange the products of that country for the products of the Southwest. It will enable the people of Illinois, in other words, to exchange corn, beef, and pork, with the people of the Southern States for their cotton, rice, and sugar.

Now, I will say a word in regard to my friends from Ohio. I find from indications heretofore made upon this floor, that some of our friends in that State intend to vote against these Missouri and Iowa roads. I am astonished to find that any representative from the State of Ohio would for a moment entertain the proposition of voting against these projects. These bills, as far as I have examined them, and as far as I can judge of the geography of the country, are well conceived, and the roads are judiciously located. They are roads pointing to the Atlantic and Pacific, and which, therefore, connect themselves in an eminent degree with the interests of Ohio.

Mr. MEACHAM (here interrupting) made an inquiry, which was inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. FICKLIN, (resuming.) I was remarking, that I was astonished that any one from the State of Ohio should think of voting against either the Missouri or Iowa railroad bill. The eastern connection of these roads must pass, of necessity, through the State of Ohio.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If the gentleman from Illinois will give way, I will move that the House adjourn.

[Cries of "No! No! No!"]

Mr. FICKLIN. There seems to be a general disposition that I should go on with my remarks, and it accords with my own feelings to do so. I was about to remark, in regard to the State of Ohio, that she has had for internal improvements some lands, but not to a very great extent, considering the wealth and character of the State. She has, however, had a considerable amount. The feelings of the people of Ohio, it seems to me, must be coincident with the feelings of the people of Illinois. I would as soon have expected to have found my friends around me from Indiana opposing this road, as my friends from Ohio.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I wish the gentleman would particularize.

Mr. FICKLIN. Two gentlemen [Mr. SWEETSER and Mr. CARTER] have already indicated their opposition by speeches upon this floor.

Mr. STANTON. I am in favor of the bill.

Mr. FICKLIN. I am glad to learn this fact.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not like to be considered among those who are said to be opposed to these grants for internal improvements in the Western States, and I will avail myself of the courtesy of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FICKLIN,] to make one statement, which I think is due to Ohio, which I have the honor in part to represent. It is frequently mentioned in debate, that Ohio has had a larger proportion of the public lands granted to her for internal improvements than any other Western State. This is not so. I understand that Illinois has had a grant of about 2,000,000 for internal improvements; and I had much pleasure in voting for it. Indiana has had more than Ohio. I am perfectly willing to state to the gentleman that I am ready to vote for these appropriations to aid Missouri in her internal improvements. I only wish the policy of the majority of this House would so modify the present bill as to allow a grant to the railroad from the western portion of the country, through Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, to connect with the great internal improvements of the State of Maryland, by which we might have a great national work, from the western limits of the United States to the east, worthy of the nation. Such a work shall have my hearty approval.

Mr. FICKLIN. I thank my friend for his expression of interest in this matter, and am glad to find that he is right. I hope he will obtain the floor before the discussion is through, and give us the benefit of his eloquence.

Mr. CARTER, (interrupting.) If the gentleman from Illinois is anxious to find a member from Ohio who will oppose this system of appropriation, perhaps I can accommodate him.

Mr. FICKLIN. Oh no. I know a couple already, and that is sufficient for me. I have no wish to wake up any more of them.

The State of Ohio is a star of the first magnitude—one of the first States in this Union. Her internal improvements are progressing with a steadiness and rapidity which do her credit. I do not place her vote for this bill upon the ground that she has received large grants of land from the Government, but upon the ground that the provisions of the bill are right, and that Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New York, Massachusetts, and most of the New England States, are directly interested in it, and cannot oppose the bill without voting against their own interests. That is the ground upon which I expect their votes. Now, when I see Massachusetts extending her roads west, in order to invite the trade from the great valley of the Mississippi; when I see New York extending her railroads to Buffalo and Dunkirk, and enlarging her canals for the purpose of getting a share of that trade; when I see the struggles that were made by Pennsylvania in 1846-'7 to extend her road from Philadelphia to Pittsburg; and when I see the efforts that are being made by Maryland and Virginia to reach the Ohio river at Wheeling and Parkersburg, it seems to me that there is a blending of interests between these Atlantic States and the Mississippi valley which must ultimately give us their votes for these railroad bills.

Now, how is it in regard to the State of Indiana? Any gentleman who will take up the history of that State for the last few years, will find what gigantic efforts she has made in laudable and praiseworthy improvements. They will find that five or six railroads, which are now in active operation, concentrate in her capital.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] seems to think that the railroad connection between this and the Wabash valley will not be complete. He cannot be aware of the fact, that the railroad from Madison by Indianapolis to Terre Haute, in the State of Indiana, is now completed, and that the portion first completed, from Madison to Indianapolis, has been doing a very heavy business and yielding very fair profits. Before the frosts of another winter shall have visited us, the railroad connection between Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore on the east, and Terre Haute on the Wabash, will be completed, if not by direct lines, sufficiently so for all commercial purposes. The honorable members from Ohio on this floor could not, if they would, resist those enterprises which are being carried on by the energy of their own State, and of the neighboring and adjacent States.

Mr. Speaker, this is no sectional question. The bills reported to this House asking grants of land for the States of Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi, have been well considered, and the roads therein mentioned connect themselves with vast and great interests in this country. You start by railroad from the city of Charleston, in South Carolina, passing through Augusta and Atlanta, in Georgia, to Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee, the main trunk continuing on to Nashville, Tennessee, and a branch extending to Memphis, on the Mississippi river. There is to be, and must be, a connection between Charleston, in South Carolina, and Louisville, in Kentucky; between Charleston and Memphis, and between the remotest points in New England and the great Valley of the Mississippi, by Boston, Albany, Buffalo, Chicago, and Cleveland. There is, then, a unity of interests in regard to these works that must command the support of our friends in the East, and of our friends in the South.

Sir, it was well said by the gentleman from Massachusetts—much better said than I can say it—that the opening up of these great thoroughfares enables the people of the West—an agricultural people, to have their produce transported to the Atlantic seaboard, either for consumption there or for further transportation to European markets. It enables the people of the South to pursue their sugar and cotton planting, regardless of raising, provisions; because they can be furnished with all the provisions they need at cheaper rates, from the grain-growing States of the West.

Corn usually sells upon the Atlantic seaboard, I believe, at from sixty cents to one dollar per bushel. It frequently sells in my district, in the State of Illinois, at ten cents per bushel. Hundreds of thousands of bushels of corn are raised there, and used in stall-feeding cattle in winter, which, in the spring, are driven to the Boston, New York, and Philadelphia markets. What you want, then, gentlemen, is cheap transportation. As you cheapen transportation, you give to the consumer the food necessary to sustain him at a lower rate than he can otherwise get it. It is cheaper to send produce a thousand miles by railroad than to send it a hundred miles on wheels by horse-power.

Let it be understood that I do not advocate this bill upon the ground that the State of Missouri has not received quite as much as another State. But I place it upon the broad ground that these roads are for the benefit of all; that the granting of alternate sections of the public lands does not cost anything to the General Government, because the reserved sections—the price of which is increased to $2 50 per acre—will yield as much money, and in less time, than the whole would if the improvements were not made.

Gentlemen from New York are more familiar with this subject than I am, but statistics which I have seen convince me that much of that portion of New York lying between Buffalo and Dunkirk, on Lake Erie, and Albany, would have been still a wild country but for the canals and railroads that have been run through it. As soon as those railroads and canals were in successful operation, lands went up at once to a higher price.

I have spoken of the immense value of the opening of these great thoroughfares to the States of Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Ohio. Let not the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MEACHAM] suppose that there is one link in this great chain from the Green Mountains to St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri, that will be wanting. The energies of the American people are alive to this question. If this connection is not made by public lands, it will be made out of the private purses of capitalists. This undertaking will be completed. There is no doubt of that. And the only question now is, will gentlemen from the old States, who have a faint hope that by holding back they can advance the tariff interest, or that they may possibly get a portion of these lands for the old thirteen States, gain anything by so doing? It is not probable that any portion of those lands will ever be granted to the old thirteen States. The new States will never submit to it—the measure would be fraught with much evil and no good.

Mr. CHANDLER. Are we to understand the gentleman, that whether or not gentlemen from the Eastern States support these measures, they will get neither the advantages of a tariff nor any portion of the public lands?

Mr. FICKLIN. So far as I am concerned, I will candidly say to the gentleman that I cannot vote for his tariff.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no tariff. But I heard the gentleman talking some time since about cutting down trees and rolling logs, and I want to know who it is who has been log-rolling in connection with this measure.

Mr. FICKLIN. I must say to the gentleman that I cannot join him in log-rolling.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not ask it.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I come from one of those old States, and I should like to understand whether the gentleman from Illinois, who says that these lands should be dedicated to a system of internal improvements, would be willing to vote the Virginia and Tennessee Railroad, or the Central Railroad of my State, a portion of these lands, if this general system prevails?

Mr. FICKLIN. I answer the gentleman by saying, that we propose to grant alternate sections along the line of the roads named in this bill, and I would be willing to grant alternate sections along the line of the roads which the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. LETCHER. We have no alternate sections of public lands along the line of the road.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I want to ask the gentleman if he proposes to bring the lands into the State of Virginia?

Mr. FICKLIN. It is about as probable that these lands will be transferred from the new States and placed, section by section, along the lines of the roads in the old States, as to suppose that they will be ceded to them. It is out of the question. It is bad enough for the General Government to be the proprietor of the lands in the new States; but they would not for a moment tolerate the idea of a sister State exercising similar powers.

I will say to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that the old States once owned these lands, and gave them up; and now I ask, does it come with a good grace from them to ask them back again?

Mr. AVERETT. I ask whether Virginia ever gave up her interest in these lands as one of the United States?

Mr. FICKLIN. She has ceded them away once, and now it would look childish for her to come here and ask them back again.

Mr. AVERETT. She has ceded them to the United States, but she has not ceded her right to them as one of the partners of the firm.

Mr. FICKLIN. The deed of cession of Virginia conveyed to the General Government all of her right to the Northwest territory, and all questions in regard to them are, of necessity, between the General Government and the States in which the lands are located. How long it may be before these twelve land States, with California, assert and maintain their right to these lands, remains to be seen. It will not probably be long. I will not detain the House longer.

Mr. ORR obtained the floor, but yielded it to Mr. ROBBINS, on whose motion the House adjourned until to-morrow.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following memorials, petitions, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. MACH: The memorial of John M. Hill and John Field, of Fountain county, Indiana, asking additional compensation as assistant marshals in taking the census.

FRIDAY, February 20, 1852.

Prayer by Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, it was Ordered, That the order of the Senate, assigning Friday of each week to the consideration of private bills, be suspended until one o'clock this day.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That one thousand of the additional copies of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the finances, heretofore ordered to be printed, be for the use of the Treasury Department.

PETITIONS.

Mr. SEWARD presented the memorial of David Hull, praying the establishment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WADE presented four memorials of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Ohio, praying additional compensation; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented a petition of citizens of Iowa, and the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Salem, in that State, in favor of donations of land to the Dubuque and Keokuck, and Davenport and Council Bluffs Railroads; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FOOT presented the petition of Eliza Ann Ellison, only child and heir of David Lund, praying a pension for the services of her father in the last war with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a remonstrance of citizens of Rutland county, Vermont, against the further extension of Woodworth's patent; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. MILLER presented a petition of citizens of New Jersey, praying that the introduction of foreign convicts, felons, and paupers, into this country may be prohibited by law; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SMITH presented a petition of citizens of Waterbury, Connecticut, praying the construction of a ship canal around the Sault Ste. Marie; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JAMES presented a petition of journey-men cigar makers of Providence, Rhode Island, praying an increase of the duties on cigars; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAWSON presented the memorial of Captain L. McLaws, of the United States Army, praying the difference between the pay of a lieutenant and that of a captain in the staff, the duty of which he performed; and the same additional compensation for the time he served in New Mexico as was allowed to officers in Oregon and California during the years 1849, 1850, and 1851; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a resolution of the Common Council of the city of Jefferson, Indiana, communicating information in relation to the Louisville and Portland Canal; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. DOWNS presented a memorial of underwriters of New Orleans, praying the enactment of a law to prevent needless detentions and expenses in proceedings in admiralty; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of passed midshipmen in the Navy, praying that a separate grade may be established by law, with an increase of pay for that class of officers; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a memorial of Henry Grinnell and others, citizens of New York, praying that another expedition may be fitted out to search for Sir John Franklin; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BRADBURY presented a memorial of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Somerset county, Maine, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Also, sundry documents in relation to the impositions practiced upon passengers by steamers to California; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a communication from citizens of Brunswick, Maine, complaining of the treatment received by passengers going to and from California; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FELCH presented two petitions of citizens of Michigan, praying a grant of land to the State, to aid in the construction of the Oakland and Ottawa Railroad; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

WHEELING BRIDGE.

Mr. HUNTER. I present the memorial of thirty-six members of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, stating that the Wheeling bridge, in their opinion, is not such an obstruction to navigation as to make it a nuisance, and praying that Congress will protect it. I have no doubt that similar movements will be made in portions of the States of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and perhaps Ohio, calling upon Congress to protect this bridge, by making it a mail route, as, according to the opinion of the Supreme Court, might be done. This is one of the gravest and most important commercial questions that has ever been raised by the decision of that or any other court, for it involves nothing less than a question as between the rights of those who prosecute commerce over navigable streams by bridges and railroads, and those who prosecute it along the water line in boats and vessels. If I am correctly informed in relation to that decision, it will be left to the pleasure of that court to say whether the bridges which are erected by all the States, not only over rivers which pass through more than one State, but over rivers which flow entirely within the limits of one State, are to remain or not. These are some of the gravest questions certainly which could be presented, and involve a jurisdiction which, I must be here permitted to state, a Marshall has refused to take and a Taney has pronounced a grave error. I move that the petition be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have the joint resolution of the Legislature of Pennsylvania upon the same subject, which resolution expresses a determination to persist in the suit which has been instituted. I agree with the honorable Senator from Virginia, that the question is a very important one, and I therefore hope that the Committee on the Judiciary will give it very great consideration. I move that these resolutions be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. BRIGHT, it was Ordered, That the petition of John Spencer, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the petition of Elisha W. B. Moody, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Avery Downer, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions. It was so referred.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the memorial of sundry merchants of New York, praying for correction of errors in the practice of the Warehouse laws, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. It was so referred.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Cornelius Oakley, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of the representatives of Henry King, praying compensation for services rendered by him in the war of the Revolution, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Jas. Glynn, praying to be reimbursed moneys lost while in his charge, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, submitted adverse reports on the following petitions, which were ordered to be printed: on the petition of Abigail Brown, the widow of Ebenezer Brown; on the petition of Nathaniel Motherhead; and on the petition of Esther Scollay.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill for the relief of William Bedient, late a sergeant in the fourth regiment of Artillery, reported back the same without amendment, accompanied by a report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the memorial of the widow of William Riley, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; which was agreed to.

SISTERS OF VISITATION.

Mr. SEWARD, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to incorporate the Sisters of Visitation, of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

SALARIES OF DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES.

Mr. COOPER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the district judge of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, so as that it shall hereafter be the same as that of the district judge of the United States for the southern district of New York.

Mr. RHETT submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salaries of the circuit judges of the District of Columbia.

RECESS.

On motion, it was ordered, that when the Senate adjourns it be to Monday next.

CONTRACTS FOR DRY DOCKS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. BRODHEAD, in relation to contracts for dry docks; and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. P. BARRY HAYS, Chief Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill for the relief of the heirs of John Jackson; also, a bill for the relief of Gustavus A. De Russey, late an acting purser in the Navy, and requesting the concurrence of the Senate therein.

The above-named bills were severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

MILEAGE OF THE DELEGATE FROM OREGON.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to ask leave of the Senate to take up the bill regulating the mileage of the Delegate from Oregon; and I move to suspend the order of business that the Senate may take up that bill.

Mr. CLARKE. I beg leave to suggest to the honorable Senator from Indiana, that the honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MANGUM,] who made the motion to lay this bill upon the table, is not now in his seat, supposing, as I believe, that the day would be appropriated to the consideration of the private bills. I have an amendment to offer to the bill in regard to mileage when it shall come up, but not supposing that it would come up to-day, I am not now prepared to offer it. I hope, therefore, that it will not be taken up, but that the day will be devoted to private bills.

Mr. BRIGHT. I shall not insist on my motion if any Senator objects, saying he has an amendment to offer; but I had hoped that this measure would not be embarrassed with amendments. It relates merely to the mileage of one gentleman, General Lane, the Delegate from Oregon. I am sorry that he is singled out and followed with such opposition. It presents a novel case, and I am entirely unprepared to meet it. I cannot divine in my own mind the reason why it is so. However, if the Senator has an amendment which he desires to offer, not general in its character, but intended to reach the case of General Lane alone, I shall not object to allowing the bill to lie over. But if he intends to offer an amendment bringing up the question generally as to the equalization of the mileage of members, I shall object.

Mr. CLARKE. I have an amendment to offer, which is not of a general character to be sure. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to take up this bill, I will prepare that amendment and offer it to-day, but I should be very sorry to see to-day consumed in the discussion of this bill in preference to private bills. I hope the bill will be suffered to lie until Monday, and then I will be ready with my amendment. By pursuing that course the private bills before the Senate will not suffer. It is of very little importance whether this question is settled to-day or Monday. I hope it will not be taken up.

Mr. BRIGHT. As I do not wish to interfere with the private business which is set apart for this day, I withdraw my motion.

THOMAS H. LEGGETT.

The Senate resumed the consideration, as in Committee of the Whole, of the bill for the relief of Thomas H. Leggett.

Mr. SEWARD. This is a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Commerce, for the relief of Thomas H. Leggett, survivor of the firm of Thomas H. Leggett & Co. The facts are contained in the report, which I ask may be read.

The Senate read the report, a synopsis of the contents of which has already been published.

Mr. SEWARD. This case can scarcely be submitted more simply or more fully than it is stated in the report; but I will, perhaps, be able to present it more distinctly in a few words. Thomas H. Leggett & Co. were, in the year 1828, merchants in the city of New York. This firm, in the fall of 1827, made a contract for the manufacture of certain goods in England to be delivered in the ensuing spring. The cost of the goods was $6,786. In the month of May, the tariff act of 1828 was passed. The duty on these goods was raised so much that it amounted to the sum of $5,467, being within $1,319 of the entire cost of the invoices. The duty under the previous act would have been $2,200 only. The goods were shipped within three or four days after the passage of the act, before the news of that event could have been received in Liverpool, or before the order for the goods could in any way be countermanded. The petitioner, under these circumstances, applies for relief. It appears that Congress has in a similar case, that of John F. Lewis, in 1836, refunded the difference between the duties under the different tariffs, under similar circumstances.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that this bill will not pass. Although, perhaps, an isolated act may be found to have been passed, involving the same principle as this, I apprehend that if we could trace the history of petitions of this kind, we would find that they have been almost unanimously refused. I know that since I have been a member of the Committee of Finance, to which such petitions have been generally referred, it has been the invariable rule to reject them. And if I am not mistaken, this petition has been several times referred to that committee, and they have refused to act upon it. When we come to consider the nature of the application, we shall find that it would lead to innumerable demands upon the Treasury Department—demands in which, if we are to take the decisions of Congress, and the legislation of Congress, there is no equity, at least no such equity as would ever induce the Government to grant them. Why, it must be remembered that if we pass this bill, we shall have to go back to all the cases which have occurred under all of our tariffs, for in none of them has there been a provision for those cases in which the cargoes were ordered before the bill was passed. In the tariff act of 1842, it was especially provided, that it should take effect upon its passage; and I know that it was one of the arguments against its passage—for I was then a member of the House of Representatives—that it would operate with hardship upon outstanding cargoes, upon ships having cargoes brought over under orders which had been made before the passage of that tariff act. The matter was then argued and considered, and Congress determined that that was one of the risks which the merchant had to take in the prosecution of his trade. Congress then refused to insert any provision in order to meet these cases, and if we now begin to legislate on them, how many petitions will be sent to us from persons who ordered cargoes before the passage of the act of 1842, and had to pay duties under that act?

We should have thus to reverse the whole policy of our Government in relation to this subject; and not only that, but we should open the door to innumerable frauds; for observe, this case goes behind the tariff of 1828; and if this be a good case, every demand which is based upon a similar principle, either in relation to that tariff or any other, may be presented here, and we shall have to act upon it. It was suggested on a former occasion, by a Senator, that if there be equity in returning to the merchant duties which he has had thus to pay because he ordered goods before the legislation under which they were entered, would it not be a good rule to work it the other way, and say that those goods brought in under the tariff of 1846, when the duties were reduced, ought to pay under the tariff of 1842, under which they were ordered? Why would not that be a good rule? Because it would be impossible to ascertain exact justice in these cases or the precise state of the facts. It would lead to more mischiefs, to more frauds, more difficulties, than we should ever remedy if we should attempt to legislate upon this subject. I am free to say that, in relation to the tariff of 1842, I would have voted for any provision which gave the merchant notice; but such was not the pleasure of Congress; such was not the action of the Government. They determined that they would not; and I am not now for opening the matter in this piecemeal way, when it cannot be remedied, but when it may lead to very great and serious mischief. I hope this bill will not be passed; for my word for it, if it is passed, you will have numbers of such cases presented for consideration.

Mr. SEWARD. It seems to me that the objection of the learned and honorable Senator from Virginia amounts to just this: If we do justice and equity in this case, we may be called upon to do so in some other cases. That argument does not commend itself either to my judgment or to my sense of what is right on the part of the Government. I will briefly state again the peculiar facts of this case. These importers were merchants in the city of New York in the years 1827 and 1828. They contracted in Liverpool, in the fall of 1827, for the delivery of invoices of goods, among which was an article called "bocking baize," and their contract was, that these goods should be delivered in the spring following; that is, the spring of 1828. Congress, in the month of May, 1828, revised the tariff. By the tariff, as it stood at the time the contract was made, the duties, when levied, would have amounted to $2,200 50, while the cost of the articles in Liverpool was $6,786 15; so that the duties, at the time the purchase was made, were about one third of the cost of the articles. By the revision of the duties then imposed, the effect of which, and of course the design of which, was to prohibit the importation of these articles, and to induce the manufacture of them in this country, the duties were raised fifty per cent., and amounted when the goods were received, to $5,467; being within $1,319 of the cost—in other words, about four fifths of the cost of the invoices in Europe. This tariff act, which was passed in May, was directed to take effect on the 30th of June following. Pursuant to the original contract, the goods were shipped from Liverpool within three or four days after the passage of the act. Being so shipped they arrived here just three or four days after the act took effect. There was no possibility of anticipating such a change. There was no possibility of giving notice to rescind the contract, or preventing the exportation of the goods from Liverpool. They came here in time to be subjected to the increased duty; and by that change in the policy of the Government the importers lost some $3,000. It is said that there is no equity in requiring the Government to pay damages which result to its citizens from the change of its laws. I agree that it is the duty of every citizen to know the laws of the land; but in making laws affecting revenue, such as laws for the imposition of duties, there is an equitable obligation on the part of the Government to give reasonable notice of the change of the system of revenue before the law goes into effect. In all the tariff acts except one, this timely notice has been given. The tariff act of 1832 was passed on the 14th of July of that year, but the time at which it was to take effect was postponed to the 3d day of March, 1833. The act of 1833 was passed on the 2d of March of that year, and was declared to take effect on the 31st of December, 1835. The act of 1846 was passed on the 30th day of July, but it did not go into effect until the first of December following.

Mr. RHETT. Will the Senator state when the act of 1842 went into effect?

Mr. SEWARD. The act of 1842 went into effect immediately, as the honorable Senator from Virginia has stated; and it is suggested to me that the reason for that was, that at the time it was passed it was supposed there was no existing revenue laws in force; and therefore that case was an exception. As I have said, it is the duty of the citizen to take notice of the laws of the land, but it is not the duty of the citizen to take notice of the laws before they are passed; and he has an equitable and just claim upon the Government if they levy assessments which shall affect contracts which he has made without giving him adequate time to provide for a change of his business so as to meet the change in the policy of the Government. As I have said, an act like this has already been passed, and the principle of that act is the same as that involved in this bill. It is now a long time since the year 1828. If this consideration addresses itself to the Senate, then I will say that there is no reason to apprehend a great number of applications of this sort; and if there were, justice would require that they should be considered and disposed of upon principles such as would prevail between private individuals.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Were the goods consumed in the country?

Mr. SEWARD. They were. The cost of the goods was $6,786: the duties paid upon them amounted to $5,467. It is a difference more than $3,000 between the duties existing at the time the contract was made and the duties the parties paid when the goods were entered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to make a suggestion. I asked the gentleman from New York, whether these goods were consumed in this country; and he gave an affirmative answer. Now it seems to me, that when the importer brought goods here and paid the duty, he must have indemnified himself by putting the duty upon the price paid for the article when it was sold. If he has done that, and obtained his indemnity in that way, it would be strange if we should pay it to him again. If he brought the goods here, and found a change in the tariff law, it would be very strange indeed if he would not put on the enhanced price resulting from the increased duty. I think a merchant would hardly neglect doing that, hence it strikes me that he must have been indemnified for the increased duty which he had to pay. I am not prepared to say that importing merchants should not always risk the legislation of the country. I do not know that the basis upon which this gentleman asks relief ought to be conceded. I do not know that we ought to change our legislation, because an individual may say that he made a contract for goods in a foreign country, and expected to have them entered at the custom-house here, under the old law. It seems to me that the Government cannot act in its legislation on views of that sort, although it might be well in passing a tariff law, to let it go into operation prospectively, with a view to provide for such cases. But if the Government has not chosen to postpone the operation of the law, so as to give the merchant notice—which I admit would be in general a good rule—and has allowed the act to go into operation immediately, it is most manifest that a merchant, whose goods arrived in the country under the increased rate of duties, would indemnify himself by increasing the price of the goods. In that point of view, it seems to me, according to the information communicated by the Senator from New York, this individual must have been already indemnified.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from New York says that my argument is, that if we pay the claim in this case, we might perhaps pay many more equally just. Not at all. My argument is, that if we attempt to do justice with the imperfect information and imperfect means which we have of ascertaining what the case is, in the attempt to do justice in one case we may perhaps do injustice to the Government in sanctioning a hundred frauds. I said also, that we should fail in doing justice, because it would be impossible to ascertain the facts on which these demands were made, even if we were to admit the principle which Congress has heretofore refused to admit, that we are bound to rectify all the losses to individuals which may have been occasioned by our legislation on the subject of duties. Congress has determined that that is a risk which the merchant must take. Whether they decided rightfully or wrongfully, I do not now pretend to say; nor is it necessary for me to say. If the subject was brought up at the time when the transaction was recent and fresh, when everybody was informed in relation to it, the claim might have been allowed if it was thought that justice required it. But if they postponed it, and at this late period of time we come to act upon an isolated case, we cannot do justice. What is the evidence in this case? How do we know that these goods were ordered beforehand, and without a knowledge of this legislation? I suppose there is no other evidence as to that than the words of the importer. How do we know that he did not remunerate himself, if not for the whole, at least for a portion of the duties, by the additional price which he charged the consumer? How can we ascertain that? And if he did put on the additional price, as suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, surely he ought not now to have this money returned to him by the Government. How can we undertake to act upon the principle, that when the interests of a private individual have been injured by general legislation we will ascertain the amount of his damages and remunerate him? Why, there was a large class of persons in this country who believed that they were injured by the passage of the tariff act of 1842, who planted large quantities of cotton, expecting to get more than they did get for it under that tariff, and upon whom that financial measure came with almost ruinous force. Are they to come here and say to us, We lost so much by your legislation: we planted so much cotton, and would have had such prices for it but for the tariff of '42, and therefore we claim indemnity? Are any class of persons to come here and say that our general legislation has inflicted this or that pecuniary damage upon them, and claim relief? If we once open the door to inquiries of that sort, it will lead to innumerable frauds. I say it is the duty of the Government not to embark in any system of legislation which will perhaps lead them into the practice of a hundred frauds, without in a single instance obtaining justice.

Mr. SEWARD. The argument of the learned gentleman now is, that there may have been no loss sustained. It will be found, on looking at the documents accompanying the report of the committee, that such is not the fact. Document No. 3, shows that a heavy loss was sustained. I will read from that document:

"Fourth question.—Did the goods sell for profit?
Answer.—No; but a heavy loss. It would have been a great saving to have reshipped the goods; but it was generally supposed that the duty would be refunded, or they would have been reshipped. The change of duty was enormous; on some things from thirty per cent. to two hundred per cent. It was the time of square yard minimum duty."

According to document No. 6, the following facts were shown:

"In the report made to Congress last winter, the committee said that we do business with the full knowledge that Congress has power to raise or lower the duties at pleasure—meaning, I suppose, at any moment. But is this so? Has Congress ever acted upon or justified that principle? On the contrary, has it not always been considered right and proper that ample time should be given to the merchant? Otherwise he might be ruined, as we might have been, if all our importations had been bocking baize. The two invoices on which we claim was for twenty-five bales blankets, eight bales bocking, and eight bales flannel."

"Since my last, I have calculated the loss on three bales of the flannel, which were all of the same kind, low priced: First cost in England, £167..... $742 50
 Duty paid by the new tariff..... 832 00
 Shipping charges, exchange, &c. 245 00

Sold then for..... $1,819 50

Lost on eight bales bocking..... $1,460 00

Lost on three bales flannels..... 569 00

$2,029 00

"The amount lost on the finer flannels and blankets it would be impossible to say exactly. The amount we claim is the difference of duty, $3,360."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the party's own statement.

Mr. SEWARD. It is; but it was submitted to the Committee of the House of Representatives twice or three times. Those who know Thomas H. Leggett would have no doubt at all as to the truth of his statement. I will observe further, that these papers were originally submitted to the Committee on Commerce in the House of Representatives, when Mr. Cambreleng was chairman. He reported a general law; but which was not passed. They were afterwards submitted, at two different sessions, to the Committee on Commerce in the House, who reported a bill in favor of Mr. Leggett; and those reports are here. The claim was first presented immediately after the transaction occurred. There was a report in favor of it. Then there was a general law recommended, the parties expecting relief under that general law, when it should have been passed, did not then press their claim. But they renewed it again before Congress; and it has been renewed in the House of Representatives from time to time. So that the further argument which was advanced by the honorable Senator from Virginia falls; which was, that this claim has become stale, or ought not to have due consideration, because it was not presented in due season.

Mr. BORLAND. The Senator from New York, I understand, bases this claim upon the ground of equity; and he says it ought to be allowed, because these individuals, under a prior law of Congress, would have been able to realize much more money by that commercial transaction than they have done under a subsequent law. According to my understanding of equity, if accounts are settled upon that principle, the equity should extend to the Government as well as to the individual citizen, whether the parties are entitled to the advantage they would obtain under the operation of the principle. Now, have we ever had a claim before Congress, or does any one suppose that these individuals would come before Congress, if they had ordered goods under a high tariff, and received them under a low tariff? Take an instance in the operation of the tariffs of 1842 and 1846: Suppose an individual—as many undoubtedly did—ordered goods under the tariff of 1842, and did not introduce them into the country until the act of 1846 went into operation, which greatly reduced the duties: would he, would any reasonable man, have come forward and tendered to the Government the difference which he would have had to pay under the tariff of 1842, while it was in force, and that which he actually did pay under the act of 1846? If we are to legislate in this way, equity requires that if we pay back to an individual any excess which he had to pay in consequence of the tariff being raised, we should also exact from individuals the difference between the amounts which they would have had to pay under a tariff in operation at the time the goods were ordered, and that in operation at the time they were brought to the country. Then, taking any series of years in the commercial operations of this country, the balance would be in favor of the Government, because the tendency has been gradually, with occasional exceptions, to reduce the rate of duties. Therefore, in the long run, more goods will be found to have been ordered under a high tariff, and come in under a low one, than were ordered under a low one and come in under a high one. The balance would be in favor of the Government.

The honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] while speaking upon this subject, brought to my mind a speech delivered in the House of Representatives the other day, and which is published, and laid on our desks, in this morning's Globe; and I think the facts it sets forth present a very strong case in point. The Senator from Virginia suggested that there might be a loss sustained by another interest in this country by a change in legislation upon the subject of duties; that there might be a loss to the agricultural interest by raising the duties affecting their productions. Here is a case in point. Here is a table to which I would call the attention of Senators, which is very important in this view. The speech to which I refer is one delivered in the House of Representatives by Mr. RANTOUL, of Massachusetts, in which he submits a series of tables, showing the effect of the tariff acts of 1842 and 1846 upon the prices of agricultural products for a series of years. I will not go through the whole of the tables, but merely refer to the tables marked A and B, presented in the body of the speech. It is here shown that the aggregate loss upon agricultural productions, for a series of five years, under the operation of the tariff of 1842, was $126,340,639. The loss on cotton alone was $89,661,531; the loss on tobacco was $16,786,197; the loss on vegetable food was $8,519,803; the loss on provisions and animal products was $4,373,108; the loss on other exports, estimated in part, $7,000,000; making a total of $126,340,639. Well, sir, if an individual who had ordered goods under a low tariff, and introduced those goods under a high tariff, has any equitable claim before Congress for relief for the difference between the amount he would have had to pay under the one, and actually did pay under the other, would not the agriculturists have precisely the same equitable demand for this immense difference between the prices they would have received under the operation of one tariff, and the low prices they actually received under the operation of another tariff? I think no one can deny that. But the legislation of this country, so far as is presented by these tables, seems to be compensating in matters of sort. Thus we find that, under the tariff of 1846, which was intended to do justice to the agricultural interest, which had been greatly depressed under the operation of the tariff of 1842, the prices of agricultural productions were brought up; and upon these same productions, for another period of five years, there was a gain by the rise of prices, under the tariff of 1846, to the amount of $148,486,274. So the fact is, if an equitable settlement of accounts is desired between the Government and its citizens growing out of its revenue system, it will be, as it has been, most easily and certainly attained by general legislation. Such legislation, I am aware, has been and may again be somewhat fluctuating, but in the long run it will be as nearly equitable as it will probably be in our power to make it. No such legislation as this, therefore, is required to do justice to the parties, or to give them equitable relief. In the view presented, general legislation seems to have been sufficient for the relief of the agricultural interest; and I am for leaving the settlement of accounts between the Government and merchants, and other operators in the same mode and measure of relief, and would withhold special legislation, particularly in old cases like this, the precise merits of which the Senator from Virginia has very clearly shown cannot be ascertained, especially at so long a period after the transaction has taken place.

Mr. RHETT. Mr. President, the position taken by the Senator from New York is, that the petitioner has lost money by the operation of our tariff laws. If the principle is good, I think it will apply to most of our legislation. It is next to impossible to make a law that will operate equally upon all classes and all individuals in the country, especially when you interfere with the property of the country. For instance; take the case of making roads. You set up a railroad: it is immediately followed by the dissolution and ruin of every turnpike and canal that comes within the reach of its influence; and in this way thousands are ruined. You set up a steam factory, and those who manufacture by water-power may be ruined. A friend of mine purchased on the south side of the Arkansas river, sixty miles of land: we admitted Texas into the Union, and he was a ruined man. It is impossible to lay a tax which does not operate unequally upon the producers of the country. If you lay down the proposition, that, whenever your taxation operates unequally, you are to compensate the individual whom it affects, in order to put him on an equality with all other citizens; then it is impossible for you to lay a tax, without having brought before you for legislation, a large class of claimants exactly like this case which the Senator from New York has brought forward. If you lay a tax upon any particular production, you must affect those engaged in it, and must operate on them injuriously. Thus, if the principle which the Senator from New York contends for, be correct, not only in this instance, but in almost every other instance in which we legislate, affecting the material interests of the country, and especially all its taxation, must necessarily be followed with a flood of petitions, to produce what he calls equity under the legislation of Congress. The principle upon which legislation always takes place is this: The Legislature endeavors to legislate for the good of the great bulk and majority of the people; and, although evil must necessarily be done to a portion of the citizens, yet, inasmuch as greater good is done to the greater part, the law goes into effect; and, consequently, in all the legislation affecting the material interests of the country, it never has been pretended, and it is impracticable to attempt to do perfect equity to those who may suffer unequally by the operation of such laws. Therefore the broad proposition is not applicable simply to the tariff, but to all the legislation of Congress; and the application which the Senator from New York has supported, it seems to me, ought to fail.

Mr. SMITH. I do not propose to discuss the merits of this bill at any length. It seems to me, however, to be an extraordinary case, and one in which we can grant relief without the violation of any principle. It is totally impossible to make a change in the revenue laws of a country without producing some degree of inequality in the operation of those laws, and without doing some degree of injustice to this man or the other. In most cases it would be totally impossible to ascertain whether the party who presents a claim of this kind had sustained any serious damage or injury. Considerations, such as were adverted to by my honorable friend from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] would come into view, and it would be necessary to have regard to them in our decision. And in many cases, if we could say that there had been some degree of injury sustained, it would be very difficult to ascertain the full extent of that injury, or determine what should be the measure of relief.

Here is an extraordinary case, Mr. President, in which Congress, without giving any sufficient notice, or what may be termed an adequate notice in point of time, passes a law which is just as injurious to the citizen as though no notice whatever were given. Congress imposes suddenly, and without available notice to the party, the most enormous duties—duties which, by their operation, will take out of the pockets of these parties several thousand dollars. Now, while I would not interpose in a doubtful or ordinary case, yet when we have presented to us a case of this character, where nearly a hundred per cent. in regard to some articles, and more than a hundred per cent. in regard to others, is suddenly imposed, the party having had no available notice, it does appear that the party is fairly entitled to come to Congress for redress. Nor do I think that the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is entitled to any great weight when he says that the importer might have added the duty to the price of the articles; for even suppose he did so, those articles might remain on his hands unsold. The mere addition of the duties to the original prices of the goods would not make them marketable. The party must sell according to the market price, and that price will unquestionably be regulated by the relations of demand and supply, which will again be affected in their turn by the operations of a tariff as it may be increased or diminished. Here the market was made under a low duty, and without any notice, while in this case, before the parties could receive their goods, the law was so changed, and such an exorbitant duty imposed as to amount almost to a confiscation of the property of the importer.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the merits of this bill at any considerable length, but chiefly to make an explanation in regard to the tariff of 1842, for which I voted, as a member of the House of Representatives, as well as many other gentlemen who are now members of the Senate. Ordinarily, it will be admitted on all hands, that revenue bills should be prospective; that a considerable period of time should intervene between the passage of the law and the period at which it is to come into operation, in order that sufficient notice may be given to the mercantile community. I know that the tariff of 1842 was passed without any such provision, and of course it took effect immediately on being approved by the President. And, sir, the reason of that may be found in what is ordinarily denominated the compromise tariff—that of the 2d of March, 1833. By the first section of that bill, provision is made for the gradual reduction of duties in all cases where they exceeded twenty per cent. of the invoiced value of the goods. Ten per cent. was to come off biennially from all articles on which a high duty was imposed, until all duties should be brought down to an ad valorem of twenty per cent. I will not say a word, sir, in regard to the wisdom or folly of such a law; but by it everything was to be brought down to the dead level of twenty per cent. ad valorem. Then, sir, comes the third section of this law, in the following words:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That until the thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and forty-two, the duties imposed by existing laws, as modified by this act, shall remain and continue to be collected. And from and after the day last aforesaid, all duties upon imports shall be collected in ready money, and all credits now allowed by law in the payment of duties, shall be and are hereby abolished; and such duties shall be laid for the purpose of raising such revenue as may be necessary to an economical administration of Government; and from and after the day last aforesaid the duties required to be paid by law on goods, wares, and merchandise, shall be assessed upon the value thereof at the port where the same shall be entered, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law.

So that by this section of the act of the 2d of March, 1833, there is a general provision that the existing laws shall remain in force until the time specified. It then goes on in words of the future tense, and provides what shall be the character of the subsequent legislation of Congress. Now, I know that it was considered exceedingly doubtful whether there was any existing law that would authorize the collection of one penny of duty. The then existing Administration, however, decided, that upon a proper construction of the law the Government was entitled to collect twenty per cent., and no more. But this was regarded by members of Congress as being exceedingly doubtful—so doubtful, indeed, that it was carried to the Supreme Court; and that court decided that the construction which was given to the law by the Administration was the true and proper construction, and that under the provisions of the law the Government was entitled to take twenty per cent. Now, the law of 1842 was passed in such a form as to take effect immediately upon its enactment, and this, simply on account of the doubts and embarrassments of members of the two Houses of Congress in regard to the then existing state of the revenue laws of the country, and was not wantonly passed in a manner to entrap and ensnare the commercial community, or to impose upon them burdens which ought not to be imposed upon them without due notice.

Mr. President, I will not dwell further upon this subject, regarding the case as very extraordinary—one, in point of fact, amounting almost substantially to a confiscation of the property of this party by the Government of the United States; and entertaining this view of it I am prepared to vote for his relief.

Mr. DAWSON. I have voted against measures of this kind before, and I have done so on principle. The act of 1842 went into immediate operation. There were all the iron establishments of Pennsylvania, and other States of the Union, with a protective duty of twenty-five per cent., and with a large quantity of iron on hand—

Mr. COOPER. The duty was twenty-five dollars per ton.

Mr. DAWSON. The Senator from Pennsylvania informs me that the duty was not twenty-five per cent. on the value, but twenty-five dollars on the ton; and now, I believe, it is reduced to seven dollars on the ton. The operation of that tariff by which this was done, was destructive to that interest everywhere within our limits. They lost immensely by it. Many of the largest furnaces were closed, and their proprietors ruined. And what, sir, was the occasion of it? What but the operation of our legislation here and in the other branch of Congress? If this bill is to pass on what is here called a principle of equity, would we not be compelled to go to the relief of those who have invested their capital under the laws, and who, by their sudden change, have sustained ruinous losses? Why should we interfere in favor of the merchant and not in favor of the manufacturer? I am like a Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] who has told us that he thinks we cannot go properly into such a measure as this. If we undertake to open a court of equity here on such a principle as is implied in this bill, in consequence of the loose character of our legislation, I do not think that this Government could meet the claims which would be brought against it. The friends of high tariffs usually pass these tariff laws for the benefit of particular interests. By changes from these high tariffs, these interests are subjected to loss, sometimes to ruin—the manufacturing and agricultural more than any other—and if parties are to be compensated for losses accruing under these changes, then the agriculturist and the manufacturer should be compensated, and, in many instances, we know that these losses are immense. I merely make this comparison with the view of showing that I am unwilling to vote for the bill in consequence of the enormous principle it involves, and to give us caution hereafter in our legislation to give sufficient time whenever we undertake to alter a tariff, so that no injustice may be worked which can be avoided. It is said that this is usually done. True, it is; but it was not done in 1812.

Now, to show the difference between the cases of the merchant and the manufacturer in these cases of sudden changes of a tariff, it should be remembered that the latter has to invest an immense capital in buildings and machinery for carrying on many businesses which may be ruined any day by a change in the tariff. His business is thus destroyed, his machinery and buildings become worthless in consequence, and thus his whole capital may be irrecoverably gone. Widely different is it with the merchant, whose market is only changed or modified, and who is seldom confined in his business to one particular kind of article which may thus be affected. While, therefore, I would desire to vote in every case where equity is the foundation, I cannot do so in this case. I cannot vote for this bill unless the principle involved in it is to be extended to every interest which has been affected by these changes; and to do so would be ruinous to the treasury of the wealthiest country under the sun.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill indefinitely.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope the Senator from Virginia will withdraw that motion.

A SENATOR. The motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator is wrong. The motion is debatable.

Mr. SEWARD. I have but a word more to say, and that is, that any one can see that to make revenue acts prospective, is not only equitable but just; and that when they are not prospective they operate as a surprise; and when an act has been passed which is not prospective it produces a surprise. It may be vindicated, perhaps, upon the ground of necessity. The act of 1842, then, is not applicable to the present case, because there was no necessity for this act to take effect immediately, and so as to confiscate the property of merchants which had been contracted for in England a few months before. It is no answer to this to say that another act was passed which was made to take effect immediately, and produced similar results.

And in regard to the manner in which the claim is made, so far as it goes to show that other acts have operated in a similar manner upon other interests of society, I submit that that is no answer. It may be, possibly, that we cannot reach the cases of the oppressive operation of a change of revenue laws; it is enough if we can reach this. As I have said, the passage of the act of 1828, without giving any notice before it went into operation, was unnecessary, and it operated as a surprise.

Mr. COOPER. If this were a hypothetical case, a doubtful case as to the loss sustained by the importing merchant, I certainly should not vote for it. But I think the case presented by this bill is very different from the cases which have been, or seem to have been, regarded as analogous by the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] and the honorable Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. BORLAND.]

The increase of duties by Congress on foreign goods is to benefit immediately the merchant, and for a very obvious reason. I do not pretend now, sir, to enter into a discussion of the question, whether the mercantile classes of the community are benefited by high duties, or by duties ordinary in their amount and character upon imported goods; but I say the immediate effect of an increase of duties is to benefit the merchant, and for an obvious reason. The goods which the merchant has on hand at the time—

[The honorable Senator was, at this point in his remarks, suddenly seized with vertigo, and was compelled to take his seat.]

Mr. SEWARD. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. COOPER. I will not now proceed. I am not able.

Mr. CLARKE. I move that the question be postponed, in order to give the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania an opportunity to present his views on another occasion.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on an indefinite postponement.

Mr. HUNTER. I withdraw that motion of course, if the Senator from Pennsylvania desires it. I will agree that it shall be laid over informally.

The PRESIDENT. To move to postpone it will be the same thing.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to, and the further consideration of the bill was postponed to Friday next.

[Mr. COOPER retired from the Senate Chamber, but in a few moments returned to his seat, and remained in attendance during the day.]

RALEIGH AND GASTON RAILROAD CO.

Mr. BADGER. There is a bill which was reported by the Committee on Finance something like a fortnight or three weeks since, which I hope the Senate will indulge me in taking up for consideration at the present time. It is a bill to give a credit to the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company on the payment of duties on their iron. I mention as a reason for taking up the bill now, that it is to give relief to this company by extending the time for the payment of duties on iron imported by that company, and because it is a bill which differs from every other which is to come before us. The iron is already ordered, and if the bill is to pass at all, so as to afford them any relief, it must pass immediately. I hope the Senate will agree to take it up.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to extend the time of the payment of duties upon all iron rails now or hereafter to be imported by said company for their use, so as to make the duties payable in four equal annual installments, said installments to be reserved by the Postmaster General for the use of the Treasury, out of any moneys which may be due said company for mail service to be performed by them. It provides, further, that before the delivery of any portion of the iron rails, the payments so deferred shall be secured by the bonds of the company, with good personal security to be approved of by the United States district judge for the State of North Carolina, and such authority, given in writing, to secure the reservation and payment by the Post Office Department, as may be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, provided, that this act shall extend only to iron already imported, or to be imported within two years from its passage.

Mr. HUNTER. I feel bound to say, in relation to that bill, that if there were any bill for which I would vote, either to extend the time for the payment of duties, or to remit them, it would be precisely such a case as has been presented. But as it has been my habit to vote to keep the tariff of 1846 inviolate, I shall vote against this bill.

The bill was then reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

SAMUEL BRAY.

Mr. MORTON. It will be recollected by you, Mr. President, that some time since I presented a memorial to the Senate, numerously signed by the citizens of Apalachicola, in Florida, asking that relief may be afforded to Samuel Bray, the keeper of the light-house at Dog Island, for losses sustained by him in a tempest on that coast, in the summer of 1851. That memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and with commendable promptness they have reported a bill for his relief for losses—I say for losses, I ought to say pecuniary losses, for some of his losses were beyond the relief of the Congress of the United States. That committee has promptly reported a bill, affording him a small pecuniary relief. He is now in a destitute and distressed situation; and if relief is to be afforded him, it should be done immediately. I ask, therefore, that I may trespass on the kindness of the Senate so far as to have this bill considered now.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope we shall proceed with the Calendar. There are other cases as important as that mentioned by the Senator, which we should take up; and I can see no reason for thus mixing up the business of this body. We have a Calendar, where these cases stand in their order, and I hope the Senate will adhere to the Calendar, and not take up business out of its order.

The motion to take up the bill was not agreed to.

IRA DAY.

The PRESIDENT. The next bill in order is the bill for the relief of Ira Day, of Vermont. It has been read twice, and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUNTER. The honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] desired to speak on that question, and as he is now absent, I move that its consideration be postponed till next Friday.

Mr. UPHAM. This bill was postponed last Friday for the accommodation of the Senator from Delaware; but if it can be ascertained that the bill can be settled next Friday, I am willing it should be passed over.

The bill was accordingly passed over informally.

MRS. E. A. McNEILL.

The PRESIDENT. The next bill in order is the bill for the relief of Mrs. E. A. McNeill, widow of the late General John McNeill, and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUNTER. Is there any report accompanying that bill?

The PRESIDENT. There is no report.

Mr. BORLAND. I will state that I reported that bill from the Committee on Pensions. There is no written report in the case. We did not make a report, because we considered the case so plain, and one in which most of the facts were known to the Senate and the country, that a very little explanation would be sufficient to satisfy the Senate of its merits. It is proposed to pay to the widow of the late General John McNeill, a very gallant officer in our Army, what we consider arrears of a pension. General McNeill was severely ly wounded, and lost his leg; but he continued in the service a certain length of time, and then resigned his commission in the Army. He received his pension from the time he resigned his commission, although he believed all the while that he was entitled, and as we think clearly entitled, to a pension from the time of receiving the wound by which he lost his limb. Since his death, his widow applies for the arrears of a pension, due from the time he was wounded up to the time he resigned his commission in the Army. It is but to pay arrears from the time he lost his leg up to the time he left the Army.

On the motion of Mr. BORLAND, the blank in the bill was filled with the word "thirty," so as to make the bill read "thirty dollars per month."

Mr. CLARKE. I should like to know why the committee put in the time so as to extend back to 1813? This gentleman was in the service till within a year or two.

Mr. BORLAND. If the Senator had listened to my remarks, I think he would have understood the reason. It is to pay arrears of a pension from the time he lost his leg till the time he resigned his commission in the Army.

Mr. CLARKE. I beg to say he never lost a leg. He was wounded in the knee. He had a stiff knee; but he had as many legs to be buried with as he was born with. I do not know why we should go back. He never asked it.

Mr. BORLAND. He did consider himself entitled to a pension from the time he was wounded till he resigned. He did not get it. He was put upon the roll only from the time he left the Army. But he always considered and asserted his right to be put upon the pension roll, and his widow now reasserts that right.

Mr. ATCHISON. I do not intend to oppose this bill. I do not intend to make war upon the widow of a gallant officer, but I would like to know what was the grade of General McNeill while in the Army.

Mr. NORRIS. He was a major.

Mr. ATCHISON. At the time he left the Army what was his grade?

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin. That of a colonel.

Mr. ATCHISON. He then received his full pay as an officer, of the grade he held in the Army, up to the time he resigned; and from that time forward he received his full pension. Now, this is an additional amount of pay; not an arrearage of a pension, but an increase of pay while an officer in the Army. I am perfectly willing to vote for it as a special case, but to adopt such a principle as a general rule, it strikes me would make a very great inroad into the public Treasury of the United States, to an amount of millions perhaps. I want it clearly understood that I vote for this case as being a special case, and without reference to any principle whatever. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS said: If this is a special case, there have been other special cases before. But I contend it is not a special case. I was in hopes that this bill would have passed without objection. Having introduced it into the Senate, it becomes my duty, under the circumstances, to give some further explanation of this bill, and to state the grounds upon which I think it ought to pass. In doing this, sir, it is not my intention to enter into a detailed account of the services of General McNeill. A very brief summary will show the true grounds upon which this bill stands.

That he was a brave, distinguished, and skillful officer—that he received permanent and severe disabilities while in the line of his duty, in the public service—is well known to every Senator here. That he suffered severely and almost constantly from these injuries, from the time of their reception up to the time of his death, is equally well known to every person who had intercourse with him.

Sir, General McNeill entered the Army of the United States in March, 1812, as a captain of the 11th infantry—a regiment constituting a part of the forces raised under the act of the preceding January. So meritorious was his conduct as an officer, that he was promoted to the rank of major in August, 1813. It is unnecessary for me to state to the Senate, here, that he discharged the duties of his advance-rank with singular abilities, with distinguished credit to himself, and honor to the country. On the 5th of July, 1814, his regiment constituted a portion of the forces engaged in the battle of Chippewa. After the fall of the gallant Colonel Campbell—early in that contest—the command of that regiment devolved upon General McNeill; and such was his bravery and military skill and daring courage on that occasion as to receive the applause and approbation of all his distinguished compeers in arms, and for these distinguished and gallant services on that occasion he received the brevet rank of lieutenant colonel. Now, sir, only twenty days after—on the 25th of the same month—a day which shed so much renown upon American valor and American arms—he led the same regiment to the bloody and triumphant battle of Bridgewater. It was here, in the heat of the contest, while at the head of the column, urging it on by his example and by his voice, in the face of a most galling and destructive fire from the enemy's battery, that he was struck in the right knee by a cannon shot, shattering and rending it in the most terrible manner, and nearly severing the limb. From the effects of that wound General McNeill never recovered. True, he did not lose his limb, as my friend from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] supposes; but the knee was rendered ever afterwards entirely stiff; and such was the shattered and broken condition of the limb that it was ever afterwards subject to a neuralgic affection, pervading the whole system with the most excruciating suffering, and which finally undermined and destroyed his once herculean constitution. For his gallant and distinguished conduct in this battle he was breveted a colonel.

Sir, at the close of the war, such were the distinguished merits and skill of General McNeill that, notwithstanding his injuries, he was retained upon the peace establishment as major of the 5th regiment. In 1818 he was advanced to the rank of lieutenant colonel of the 1st infantry. Again, sir, in 1822, when in command of the post at Chicago, while leading a detachment of his men to the relief of a vessel in distress—having on board supplies for his troops—he was severely injured in the right arm, rendering that limb almost entirely stiff and greatly impairing its use. In 1824 he was breveted a brigadier general for faithful service. In 1826 he was still further promoted to the advanced rank of colonel in the army. In 1830, on the 23d of April, he resigned his commission in the army; his constitution having been broken down and his health impaired by reason of severe sufferings from injuries received in the public service. From that time he has received a pension from the Government for full disability. And, sir, I would here state that in 1815, as soon as the nature of his wounds would permit, he applied to the War Department to be placed upon the roll of invalid pensioners of the United States, under the contract that he alleged he had made with the Government when he entered its service. He made also an application in 1819. Upon both occasions his application was refused. And why, sir? Was it because he had not been seriously and permanently disabled while in the line of his duty in the public service? No, sir; for that was apparent to all. But he was told that the War Department had made a rule that no officer, while he retained his commission in the army, should be placed upon the roll of invalid pensioners. To that act, and against that decision, General McNeill then, and ever afterwards, protested. He claimed that under the law of 1812 he had a right to be placed upon the pension roll of the United States from July, 1814.

Sir, I have made this brief and true statement of facts to show the ground upon which this bill rests. This bill proposes to give arrears of pension thus claimed by General McNeill in his lifetime to his aged widow, who is now in straitened circumstances, who for thirty-five years watched over and cared for the veteran with that soothing attention and care which no other hand could administer. Sir, I will not invoke the sympathies of the Senate—I never did such a thing; but if there ever was a bill in which such feelings would be justified, this is one. But, sir, I place this bill upon the ground of his legal rights, upon the broad principle of the equity and justice in the case; and if I do not show the Senate that he is entitled to the pension, I will allow the bill to fail, so far as I am concerned. Sir, what was the contract under which General McNeill entered the Army?

The 14th section of the act of the 11th of January provides "that if any officer, non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, shall be disabled by wounds or otherwise while in the line of his duty, he shall be placed upon the roll of invalid pensioners of the United States." That is the whole of it; that was the contract under which General McNeill entered the army. Sir, this act was passed in anticipation of a war with Great Britain. It was published to the whole country by authority of Congress. And for what purpose was it published? It was published to induce brave and patriotic citizens all over the land to enroll themselves in our army. It was in view of the provisions of that act—in view of the bounties and promises therein set forth, that thousands of brave men rushed to their country's standard, and among them General McNeill, there to brave the dangers of war, and even death itself, in defence of their country's rights and honor. How did they understand this act? How did they understand this language? Why, as every other unsophisticated and sensible man would understand it. They understood it to mean what it said—nothing more and nothing less. The language is plain, direct, and imperative. The conditions upon which the disabled soldier was to be placed upon the invalid pension list were plain and unmistakably set forth. The claimant must be an officer, non-commissioned officer, musician, or private; and must have been disabled, and that disability must have been inflicted while in the line of his duty in the public service. That was all—all the conditions precedent; and I maintain that when they concur in behalf of the soldier, that his claim to be placed upon the pension roll of the United States is complete. It becomes an absolute right, a vested right, and the Government cannot absolve itself from performing its part of the contract without a gross violation of the rules of justice and plighted faith.

Sir, I maintain—and with great confidence before this body—that the only legitimate inquiry here is, does the claimant come within the description of persons named in the 14th section of that act? Was he an officer? Was he disabled? Was he so disabled while in the line of his duty—while in the public service? If we have a right to go further than this, and place constructions and raise implications upon a law nowhere suggested in the law itself, so as to make the right to be placed upon the pension roll dependent upon employment, profession, or occupation, whether the claimant be in the army or out of the army, where will you stop? What limits are there to all sorts of constructions and implications which the Government may see fit to raise in regard to their contracts? None, sir; none at all.

Sir, I maintain—it having been established that General McNeill was wounded while in the line of his duty in the public service—that it is a breach of the plighted faith of this Government to say to him, "Why, your right to a pension is not secure; it depends upon your profession, whether it be arms or civil life." Sir, whence did such a construction arise? It has arisen, as I have suggested, from the rule in the War Department declaring, "that no officer, so long as he remains in the army, shall be placed upon the pension roll of the United States." Sir, what is a disability, if that is a test? Why, by the provisions of that rule a disability is nothing more nor less than this: It is no matter how severely an officer may be wounded or disabled while fighting the battles of his country—no matter if he has lost an arm, a leg, or an eye—no matter, though literally riddled from head to foot, if he only survives—yet his right to a pension does not accrue to him. He must resign his commission in the army in order to make him a disabled man!

Now, sir, I am curious to know by what system of logic or process of reasoning a proposition so monstrous as that, so unnatural in its character, can be established? Am I told—for this is the only argument upon the other side—am I told that so long as a man remains in the army he receives all his pay as an officer, and thereby is enabled to obtain a livelihood, although disabled, but so soon as he resigns his commission he is unable to do so? Sir, this is presumption altogether—that an officer is not enabled to gain a livelihood, although disabled and out of the army.

No doubt, sir, that this law did contemplate a pension in the view that a disability would detract from the ability of an invalid to gain a livelihood. True; but did it contemplate anything more? Is that all that it contemplates? Are stiffened joints and shattered limbs nothing? Is a decrepid and deformed frame nothing? Are severe sufferings and pains nothing? Are all the extra expenses which every officer so disabled must incur, from day to day, nothing? Does not the statute contemplate these things as a disability? Most surely, sir, in my opinion—most surely; and the most material part of the disability.

Sir, disability consists, in my judgment, as much in the deprivation of the enjoyments of life and the power of retaining property which an officer already has, as it does in the loss of physical strength and the power to acquire property. If I am right in this—and I should like to have this argument noted—then do not these disabilities apply with equal force to an officer while in the army as it does while out of it? Is it the policy of this Government—was it ever its policy—to say to the brave and gallant soldiers of your army, so soon as you are wounded, so soon as you become disabled in consequence of fighting the battles of your country, however desirable and important it may be to retain your services there, yet you cannot receive the bounties provided for the disabled and wounded soldier until you resign your commission and retire to private life? Are these brave men, in the face of an unconditional statute, to be thus told? I hope not.

I will ask the attention of the Senate for a moment to another view of this case. I have said that the rule of the War Department, to which I have alluded, has not been a universal rule. While it has been enforced in some cases most rigidly, it has been dispensed with in others. The first class of cases to which I will call the attention of the Senate is that of officers who were disabled in the war of 1812—who were dropped temporarily from the peace establishment, placed upon the pension roll of the United States, and afterwards restored to the army. The Department says, in regard to that class of officers, that having once been placed upon the pension roll, the Department does not feel at liberty to strike them off, and so they have received both their pay and their invalid pensions. I do not complain of that. It is all right. They have received, in my judgment, nothing more than their legal rights. But what I complain of is this: that other officers, equally meritorious, who have been disabled, and who have not been dropped from the army at all, have been refused pensions for their disabilities and wounds. My judgment is, that if this rule means anything, it should apply equally to both classes. This construction of the statute—this rule—is either a legal and true construction of that statute, or it is not. If it is the true construction, then it is the statute itself, and it cannot be suspended by the Executive except by a violation both of law and duty. If it is not the true legal construction of the act, then it is no part of it, is repugnant to it, and cannot be enforced without a like violation both of law and duty.

I will call the attention of the Senate for a moment to a case directly in point. It is that of the gallant Colonel Preston. I call the attention of the Senate to it for two objects: first, to show that Congress has interfered, and has granted arrears of pensions in a case precisely similar to this; and, secondly, I refer to it for the purpose of showing that this rule, which has been construed one way to-day and another way to-morrow, which has given pensions to some disabled officers while it has refused them to others, was claimed by the Executive to be nothing more nor less than an executive regulation, not necessary to the original pension law, but a regulation which the Executive could at any moment suspend. Colonel Preston was an officer in the same war as General McNeill. He was wounded in November, 1813. He continued in the service until the army was disbanded, June 15, 1815. He was allowed by the Department his invalid pension from that time, but was refused it from the time he was wounded until the time he left the service, because, in the first place, he was an officer in the service, and received his pay as such from the time he was wounded, in November, 1813, to the time of his discharge, in June, 1815; and, in the second place, because he had made no application for a pension until after his discharge. He appealed to Congress to pay him the invalid pension for the period intervening between the time he received his wound and the time he left the service, although he had received full pay as an officer during the same period. What did Congress do? On the 14th of July, 1832, they passed an act, the sixth section of which provided for his relief. What was the decision of the War Department thereon fully appears in a correspondence which took place between the then Commissioner of Pensions and the head of the War Department—the latter officer being my distinguished friend, the present Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] which I will read, because it goes to show that what I have stated in regard to this rule and the whole case is true:

WAR DEPARTMENT, }
PENSION OFFICE, January 3, 1833.

SIR: The act of 14th July, 1832, chapter 260, section 6, directs the Secretary of War to place the name of J. P. Preston on the invalid pension roll, as an officer of the late war, and to allow him the amount which would have been due him had he made his application at the time he received his wound. In November, 1813, when Colonel Preston was wounded, the practice of this Department was not to allow a pension to any officer while in the service. If Colonel Preston had, therefore, at that time applied, he could not have obtained a pension, agreeably to the existing rule, unless he had first resigned his commission, in which case the pension would have commenced at the time of his resignation.

Upon the principle adopted by the Department, Colonel Preston's pension was allowed from the time when his pay as an officer ceased. The Colonel remained in the service till the army was disbanded, on the 15th June, 1815, from which period his stipend has been paid.

JAMES L. EDWARDS.

HON. LEWIS CASS.

To this letter the Secretary of War replied as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF WAR, January 3, 1833.

In the case of Colonel Preston, presented by Mr. Mason, I am of opinion that the pension allowed by the act of Congress of July 14, 1832, should commence from the day Colonel Preston received his wound, and in this opinion the Attorney General coincides. From the phraseology of the law, it is evident to me that Congress considered the day of the disability as the proper period for the commencement of the pension. He is allowed "the same amount which would have been due to him had he made his application at the time he received his wound." If the practice of the office, which did not allow the granting a pension to an officer while in service, could control the above provision, the period fixed by the legislature would be inoperative and useless.

[I call the attention of the Senate to this portion which I shall next read, to show that I have stated this matter correctly:]

That practice was not required by the original pension law. It was a matter of Executive regulation, and might at any time have been dispensed with by Executive authority. If Congress had intended it should have been adhered to in his case, the provision would naturally have been, Colonel Preston should receive his pension from the period when he quit the army. The reference to an earlier period must have had some meaning; and the only rational construction I can put upon the clause is, that Colonel Preston's pension should commence when his disability commenced—the object of the act being clearly to dispense with the application, and to fix itself the time from which the pension should be drawn.

It may be added that, subsequently to this time, instances occurred in which pensions were granted to officers of the army while they continued in service.

LEWIS CASS.

Here is the verification of all I have said: that the rule has not been an invariable one, but that it has been adhered to and suspended at the Executive discretion. But I have said enough upon this point to show that this case is precisely in point, and that the rule has been vacillating and not uniform. A few words more, and I have done.

I contend that this bill ought to pass, upon the ground of even-handed justice. I contend that disabled officers of the army should be placed upon the same footing as the gallant and disabled officers of the navy. Can any reason be assigned why a pension should be given to the officers of the navy from the date of their wounds, and not to the officers of the army? The same rule, I believe, applied to officers of the navy and army prior to 1837, when Congress passed a law for the benefit of wounded and disabled seamen. By the second section of that act of March 3, 1837, it is provided—

"That the pensions which may have been granted, or which may hereafter be granted, to officers, seamen, and marines in the naval service, disabled by wounds or injuries received while in the line of their duty, shall be considered to commence from the time of their being so disabled; and that the amount of pension to which said officers, seamen, and marines may be entitled, shall be regulated according to the pay of the navy, as it existed on the first day of January, 1815."

Under this law, the officers of the navy drew pensions from the time they were wounded, though they held their commissions in the navy, and drew full pay during the same time.

Then, I contend that this bill ought to pass as a measure of even-handed justice to the officers of the army. They should be placed upon the same footing, when wounded and disabled, as the officers of the navy are. No reason, it strikes me, can be assigned why it should not be so.

I have now given a brief explanation of this bill, and have assigned the reasons why I think it ought to pass. I hope it will meet the universal approbation of the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE. I have listened with attention, and I confess with gratification, to the remarks made by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire. I cheerfully add my testimony to the eulogium which he has passed upon the bravery of the distinguished officer, General McNeill, to whom he has alluded, and whose services have been made the subject of debate, and form the grounds of the bill which is now before the Senate. There is no doubt that General McNeill entered the service in 1812, for the war with Great Britain. There is no doubt that he was a gallant and meritorious officer; that he was upon the frontier in the hour perhaps of the greatest trial that our troops had upon the frontier and in the war, and that he was there wounded. I had the pleasure of meeting him in 1826, and from his own mouth, and from the personal acquaintance I had with him, I drew all the information I possess in regard to him, except that which was before the public at large evincing his character as a gallant and meritorious officer. At the battle of Bridgewater, he received a severe wound. It was in his knee. He lost no leg. How long he was kept from his duty by that wound, I am unable to say. When I met him in 1826, the disability occasioned by it was of the slightest description. Very few men had the personal energy and activity of General McNeill; and when I saw him, except that the joint was stiff, I believe there was no inconvenience experienced from his wound. At the time he received it, he was a major in the service. He was afterwards promoted to a lieutenant colonelcy, then to a colonelcy, and subsequently, as I understand the Senator, he received the grade of brigadier general.

When I saw him in 1826, at Detroit, the residence of my friend from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] he was on his way to Green Bay, under some charges that had been preferred against him as commanding officer at Green Bay, to take his trial before a court-martial. He was then in perfect health, and with as much of the vigor of manhood as any gentleman I have seen in my life. He remained in the service, receiving his pay and emoluments, until, I believe, 1830, or 1831. I think it was 1830. He received pay as a major, then as lieutenant colonel, then as colonel, and if he was breveted brigadier general, he probably received pay, if in a separate command, according to his brevet. In 1830—or it may have been 1829, my memory is not retentive enough to be confident of the exact date—he resigned his commission in the Army, because he had received the appointment of surveyor in the port of Boston. I believe he did not resign his commission in the Army from inability to perform its duties; but because the appointment which he received was more lucrative and more to his taste than the position he held in the Army. The surveyorship of the port of Boston netted him, I suppose, $6,000 a year. He retained that office during almost the whole of the balance of his life. In 1840, when another Administration came in, he may have been superseded; but he was again reinstated, and remained there during the rest of his life. Has the country been ungrateful to General McNeill? I admit all his services. I admit he was a brave and gallant officer. But he received all his pay during the whole time of his service in the Army. He resigned his commission in the Army because he received a more lucrative appointment in the civil service of the Government; and he received the emoluments arising from the performance of his duties in the latter capacity during almost the whole balance of his life.

The honorable Senator from New Hampshire puts the claim of General McNeill upon the ground that there was a contract proposed by the Government, and binding upon it, in 1812, when he enlisted in the Army of the United States. If that be so, it is a claim of General McNeill himself against the Government, for such a pension as he should have been allowed from the time he received his wound in the service of the country until the time of his death; but it forms no ground whatever for dating and carrying back the pension to his widow from the time of his decease to the time he received his wound. I understand, also, that he did receive some portion of his pension from the Government of the United States. The only question, then, is, whether it should have been a larger allowance from the Government than it was, or whether the allowance made by the Government was right?

Mr. NORRIS. Do I understand the Senator to say that General McNeill received any pension?

Mr. CLARKE. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to say that he had received some allowance.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator misunderstood me altogether. He received no pension.

Mr. CLARKE. If he did not, he received his full pay and emoluments during that time. I am for providing for the widows and children of those who suffer in the service of their country. If this bill provided that the widow of General McNeill should receive a pension from his death, in consideration of his services, I should have made no objection to it; but when it provides that thirty dollars a month shall be allowed from 1813 to the present time, I think it is extraordinary.

Mr. BORLAND. I would state to the Senator from Rhode Island, that the bill provides for the payment of the sum of thirty dollars per month, not from 1813 to the present time, but from 1813, when General McNeill received his wound, to 1830, when he went out of the service.

Mr. CLARKE. Then I misunderstood the provisions of the bill. If it provides as the Senator from Arkansas has stated, it is simply to give to his widow what would have been due him from 1813 to 1830 under the construction of the law which the Senator from New Hampshire has given. Am I right in that? Is there nothing more?

Mr. BORLAND. There is nothing more in the bill.

Mr. CLARKE. Then the question comes down to the rightful construction of the act of 1812: whether he was entitled to a pension, in consequence of his wound, from the time he received it up to the time he resigned his commission in the Army. Is that all?

Mr. BORLAND. That is all.

Mr. CLARKE. Then I have nothing more to say. I am perfectly satisfied that this provision should be made. I was in error about the bill. My impression was that it was a provision for the continuance of a pension, dating as far back as from 1813, to this time. If it is only for an allowance which should have been made to General McNeill from 1813 to 1830, I have no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ENGROSSED BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were read a third time and passed:

An act extending legal privileges to those conferred by the act entitled "An act allowing drawback on foreign merchandise exported in the original packages to Chihuahua and Santa Fe, in Mexico, and to the British and North American Provinces adjoining the United States," approved March 3, 1845, to foreign merchandise exported to Mexico by certain indicated routes.

An act for the relief of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company.

And then the Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Friday, February 20, 1852.

The House met pursuant to adjournment. Prayer by the Rev. L. F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business before the House is the consideration of the bill for the relief of the heirs of John Jackson, which was reported from the Committee of the Whole on last Friday, with a recommendation that it do pass. The question now pending is, Shall it be engrossed and read a third time?

DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee of Ways and Means a bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1852; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOTY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. OLDS. I shall feel myself called on to object to every resolution which is attempted to be introduced in this manner.

On motion by Mr. DUNHAM, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of John Chambers, Sen., for the purpose of referring them to the Senate.

On motion by Mr. BEALE, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of George W. Jackson be withdrawn from the files of the House, and be referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion by Mr. AVERETT, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of the heirs of Lieutenant James Conway, for the purpose of filing them with his application before the Virginia Legislature.

On motion by Mr. BRIGGS, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of James Livingston, for the purpose of laying them before the proper Department.

On motion by Mr. CHANDLER, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Susan Randall, for the purpose of reference in the Senate.

On motion by Mr. FLORENCE, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Thomas Flanagan, for the purpose of reference in the Senate.

On motion by Mr. MOLONY, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Russell Bates, for the purpose of reference to one of the Executive Departments.

On motion by Mr. MOLONY, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Arthur McMullin be withdrawn from the files of the House and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move now that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DANIEL. I will suggest to the gentleman that it will take but little time to dispose of the bills now on the Speaker's table, which were reported to the House on Friday last. I hope they will be passed.

Mr. EDGERTON. Then I will withdraw my motion for the present.

JOHN JACKSON.

The SPEAKER. The question now pending is on the engrossment of House bill No. 95, for the relief of the heirs of John Jackson.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and having been engrossed, it was read the third time and passed.

Mr. FOWLER moved to reconsider the vote just taken by which the bill passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

GUSTAVUS A. DE RUSSEY.

The SPEAKER. The next business in order is House bill No. 96, being a bill for the relief of Gustavus A. De Russey, late an acting purser in the Navy. Upon this bill the Committee of the Whole have made an amendment to reduce the compensation as acting purser from $514 to $362. The question now is on concurring with the amendment of the Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken, and the House concurred in the amendment.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and having been engrossed, it was read the third time and passed.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution.

Mr. OLDS. I am compelled to object.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1852.

NEW SERIES.....No. 39.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. EDGERTON. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion prevailed, and

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. DISNEY in the chair.)

The first bill on the Calendar was House bill No. 97, being a bill for the relief of James McCormick, assignee of Robert A. Parker.

The bill proposes to pay to James McCormick, as the assignee of Robert A. Parker, the sum of $25,766 64, with interest thereon from the 9th July, 1850, the amount allowed said McCormick by referees duly appointed, as damages for a breach of contract entered into with Commodore Jones, acting under the orders of the War Department of the United States, for setting up and making a saw-mill in California.

The report states that during the war with Mexico, the honorable John Y. Mason, Secretary of the Navy, caused a saw-mill to be sent to the coast of California, which was placed under the direction of Commodore Jones, who, finding it impracticable to have the mill set up and worked on account of the Government exclusively, entered into a contract with Mr. Robert A. Parker, by which Parker was to set up and work the mill for eighteen months. The contract also provided that Parker should have the exclusive use of the mill for three months from the commencement of sawing. But in case the Government should require the steam-engines, mills, &c., for their own use, before the expiration of the contract, and in case the mills had not cleared all costs, &c., it was stipulated that a referee should be appointed to name the sum to reimburse the said Parker. The honorable John Y. Mason was succeeded as Secretary of the Navy by the honorable William B. Preston, who, not being aware of the contract entered into upon the part of Commodore Jones, ordered the saw-mill to be placed in charge of the Navy agent or purser at San Francisco, as Government property. This was before the expiration of the contract with Parker. A referee was accordingly appointed, who awarded to McCormick, as the assignee of Parker, the sum of $25,766 64, as the amount which he had expended in erecting the saw-mill, and putting it into operation, over and above his receipts. The committee think, therefore, that, according to law and justice, the said award ought to be paid.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I do not see the gentleman who reported that bill [Mr. BOCK] in his seat. I beg leave, therefore, to state, that from the evidence before the committee, it appeared to them to be a clear case that the United States were bound by the contract entered into upon the part of Commodore Jones to allow the claim. But I have been informed by one of the members from California that there is a strong suspicion of fraud connected with it. I move, therefore, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole have no right to make that order; it must first be reported to the House.

Mr. STANTON. Then I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

CORNELIUS HUGHES.

The next bill in order was House bill No. 98, for the relief of Cornelius Hughes, of Tennessee.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the roll of Invalid Pensions, the name of Cornelius Hughes, at the rate of $5 33½ per month, dating from the 21st of February, 1848, and to continue during his natural life.

The report states, that said Cornelius Hughes was a soldier in the late war with Great Britain; that he entered into the military service of the United States in September, 1814, as a private soldier; and that he marched thence by way of Forts Strother, Jackson, and Claiborne, to Mobile, being a distance of seven or eight hundred miles; thence across to Fort Boyer, and thence to Knoxville, where he was discharged in April, 1815. That in this march through the wilderness he suffered much, and from the hardships and exposures he was taken sick, became partially paralytic, and has had his hearing very much impaired, from which he cannot recover. The physicians certify that he is two thirds disabled by reason of his injured health.

Mr. AVERETT. I rise to inquire of the honorable gentleman [Mr. ST. MARTIN] who reported this bill, whether the petitioner in this case is now living?

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. The gentleman who reported this bill is not now in his seat; but as a member of the committee from which this report comes, I will say to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. AVERETT,] that I am not aware whether the petitioner is at this time dead or alive. I suppose, however, that at the commencement of this Congress, or shortly before that time, he was living, from the fact that the representative from his district presented the papers in the case which were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. That gentleman can answer the question, I presume, more satisfactorily than I can.

Mr. AVERETT. It was to that gentleman I particularly referred. I will state, that during my service on this committee in the last Congress, I found petitions referred as from living petitioners; but from certain papers connected with them, my suspicions were excited, that the petitioners were not living in 1850. And when I came to inquire into the matter, I found that in some cases the petitioners had been dead four or five years. I think that gentlemen in this House who present petitions, ought to be held responsible to the committee and the House, to see that the relief asked for does not go to lawyers, agents, or heirs.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I rise to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. AVERETT,] No longer ago than night before last, I received a letter from the petitioner in this case, who was a living person, and desires very earnestly that this claim shall be passed by Congress. He has been suffering for a long time. His papers have been presented here and reported on favorably two or three times. Bills for his relief have been passed by the House, but for want of time have failed in the other branch of Congress. I say again, that the petitioner is living, and stands greatly in need of the little pittance which it is proposed to give him.

Mr. VENABLE. I have examined the case very minutely, and there was never a case for a pension before the House better sustained. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANCIS TRIBOU.

The next bill on the Calendar was House bill No. 99, being a bill for the relief of Francis Tribou.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Francis Tribou, on the roll of Invalid Pensions, at the rate of $4 per month; to date from the first day of January, 1848, and to continue during his natural life.

The report states that the petitioner enlisted in the month of April, 1813, as a private in the thirty-fourth regiment, United States Infantry, in the company under the command of Lieutenant Thomas Johnson, in the service of the United States, in the late war with Great Britain. It also appears from the affidavits of a number of soldiers, who were present and knew of the accident, that the petitioner, being cook of the mess, while engaged a making a ladle with which to skim the pot, in obedience to the orders of the surgeon, cut off two fingers from the left hand, at the second joint, and injured a third so that it is still troublesome. A surgeon who has examined the petitioner, pronounces him one half disabled.

Mr. ANDREWS. These papers were taken from the files by myself, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I would not say a single word in relation to this case, were it not that the individual member of that committee who reported the bill is absent at this time. I believe all the principal facts are stated in the report, and I know that the facts, so far as they are therein stated, are true. The individual named in the bill lives in the town in which I formerly resided, and I have no doubt that he is entitled to a pension at the hands of Congress. I believe the case to be strictly within the rules, and I believe, too, that the committee were unanimously of that opinion at the time the examination of the facts in the case was before them.

Mr. KING, of New York. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass. Which motion was agreed to.

JAMES WRIGHT, JR.

The next bill that came up in order for consideration was House bill No. 100, for the relief of James Wright, jr.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of James Wright, jr., of the State of Tennessee, upon the roll of Invalid Pensions, at the rate of $5 33 per month, from the 4th of March, 1840, and to continue during his natural life.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions shows that the petitioner served in the Army of the United States six months, in the years 1814 and 1815, and that, while on a forced march and on short allowance of provisions, he was attacked with epileptic fits, to which he had never before been subject, but has been ever since.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I presume it is unnecessary to make any lengthy statement about the case. I am conversant with all the facts, and know the petitioner himself. There have been some three or four favorable reports made in this case, like the one accompanying this bill. Bills for his relief have been passed by this House two or three times, but they were lost for want of action upon the part of the Senate.

Mr. HAMILTON. Is the petitioner living?

Mr. JOHNSON. He is, I suppose. As far back as 1840 a bill passed this House in his favor. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN KERBAUGH.

The next bill that came up in order for consideration was House bill No. 101, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, for the relief of John Kerbaugh. This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John Kerbaugh, of the State of Tennessee, upon the roll of Invalid Pensions, at the rate of $5 33 per month, from the first day of January, 1848, and to continue during his natural life.

The report of the Committee in this case shows that the applicant enlisted in the Army of the United States on or about the 25th day of July, 1813, and immediately thereafter marched to Knoxville, where he was mustered into service of the twenty-fourth regiment of infantry, which, in a short time thereafter, marched to join the army at Detroit, under General Harrison; that the army then marched down to Buffalo, where the petitioner, with others, was stationed by General Harrison in Fort Niagara, to guard that fort; that the fort was taken by the British, and the petitioner taken prisoner, and the next morning taken across the river to Fort George, on the Canada side; that the weather was severely cold, and upon entering the boat to cross the river, the petitioner was ordered to shove off the boat, which he attempted to do, but could not, it being frozen to the bank; and failing to shove off the boat, he was knocked down by a non-commissioned officer, and fell against the gunwale of the boat and mashed and injured his hip very much; that he caught cold in his hip and wound, and was laid up in hospital from that time until he was exchanged, about five months thereafter. After he was exchanged, he was taken to Plattsburg, where he lay in hospital six weeks under the care of Doctor Grove, when he obtained a furlough and started for his home, which, after a long time, he reached, depending upon and receiving charity by the way. After reaching home he was confined about two months, when the news of peace arrived, and he having enlisted for and during the war, he was discharged by his officer in a disabled condition, wholly unfit for any kind of business. That he has, from that time to this, been able to do but little, and much of the time unable to do anything, suffering much pain, and grows worse as he grows older; that he is now sixty-six years old, and almost totally disabled from doing anything for his support; is very poor, and needs the assistance of his country.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I will state, for the satisfaction of the House, and to answer the standing interrogatory of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. AVERETT,] that this petitioner is living, and if there ever was a deserving case presented to the Congress of the United States, this is one. I will say that this man would have had his pension twenty-five years ago, to my knowledge, had he not always protested against applying to his Government for relief, so long as he could make a subsistence with his own hands. He now makes this application at the urgent solicitation of his friends, and upon the pressure of his urgent necessities. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

ICHABOD WEYMOUTH.

The next bill that came up in order for consideration was House bill No. 102, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, for the relief of Ichabod Weymouth. The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ichabod Weymouth upon the roll of Invalid Pensions, at the rate of $8 per month, to commence on the first day of January, 1850, and to continue during his natural life.

By the report of the committee in this case, it appears that the petitioner enlisted in the year 1814, in the forty-fifth regiment of the State's infantry; that, in the year 1815, while stationed at Phippsborough, in garrison, and with a body of recruits for discipline, one of the soldiers deserted his post, and threatened to kill any man who would attempt to arrest him. A detachment, in which petitioner was included, was ordered to arrest him; in approaching him for that purpose, he made a thrust at the petitioner and ran his bayonet into his side to the depth of five inches. That this is a permanent injury; has given him much pain, and has caused a permanent affection of the lungs; and that at this time, from its effects, he was partially deprived of the ability to labor.

Mr. EASTMAN. From the papers in this case it appears that this disability has become permanent, and that the petitioner is totally unable to perform any manual labor. I know that he is a worthy person, and know the time when he was wounded. I know also all the persons who have testified in the case, and I have no doubt it is a meritorious one. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN MCINTOSH.

The next bill that came up for consideration was House bill No. 103, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, for the relief of John McIntosh.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of John McIntosh on the roll of Invalid Pensions, at the rate of $8 per month, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1848, and to be continued during his natural life.

The report of the committee in this case shows that the petitioner enlisted as a soldier in the year 1813. After his enlistment he marched to Seneca, in the State of Ohio, the headquarters of General William Henry Harrison; from thence a forced march to Lower Sandusky; thence to Canada; and thence to the Thames, and was in the battle at that place. The petitioner was afterwards transferred to a company commanded by Captain Johnson Magowen, and at the expiration of twelve months, the term of his enlistment, was honorably discharged. He was a faithful soldier. During the period of his service, and whilst he was in the line of his duty, on the forced march referred to, he received an injury in his right leg, producing rupture of the muscle, from the effects of which he has never recovered, but which continues to grow worse as he advances in life. That the petitioner's discharge was burned, together with his other papers, in the destruction of his house by fire.

On motion, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

RICHARD CHANEY AND OTHERS.

The next bill that came up in order for consideration was Senate bill No. 42, for the relief of Richard Chaney and others.

The bill authorizes and directs the land officers in the district of Fairfield, in the State of Iowa, to examine and adjudicate, under certain restrictions, the claims of the petitioners, under the preemption act of 19th June, 1834, to the lands on which the towns of Fort Madison and Burlington are situated.

Mr. CLARK moved that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. AVERETT. To that motion I object. I understand this bill has never been before a committee of this House; and, therefore, move that it be laid aside and reported to the House, with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this bill may not be committed. I do not think there is any necessity whatever for it. This is a Senate bill, which was reported by a Senate committee to that body, duly considered and passed there, and reported to this House. I will make a brief statement of the facts in the case, and I apprehend gentlemen will be as well prepared, after that statement, to pass upon this bill, as they will after it has been reported upon by a committee. The facts are simple and easy to be understood.

In 1833, the claimant in this case settled at a point on the Mississippi river, on a tract of land, which was afterwards laid out and called Fort Madison. The claimant went to that point under the influence of the preemption law. It is known to you, sir, that the policy of the Government by its preemption laws was to invite settlements of the public domain. Under the influence of these laws the claimant in this case settled at that point in 1833. In 1836 and 1837, Congress provided for the laying off of certain towns then in the Territory of Wisconsin, upon the Mississippi river, and amongst others of the town of Fort Madison, upon which the claimant in this case had settled. The Territory of Iowa was organized in 1838. There was no land office there until after the organization of the Territory. Well, whenever this claimant presented himself at the land office for the purpose of entering his land under existing preemption laws, he was met by the act of Congress laying off that same tract of land into a town, and, therefore, his claim was not entertained. It was believed that the act laying off the town conflicted with the preemption laws to that extent, and therefore the land officers at the proper office rejected his claim. They would not suffer his land to be entered, because of a more recent act, to wit, the acts of Congress of 1836 and 1837, which appropriated that very land for the town site. It was actually appropriated in that way, and the Government sold the lots. In the mean time this claimant had made improvements upon the land. There is a volume of evidence upon the subject taken by the officers of the land office, to whom application was made for the purpose of entering the land. The evidence shows that this claimant had made valuable improvements upon that land before the act of Congress had appropriated it for a town site. And now the simple question is this: whether he shall be paid for these improvements, or not? He went there, as I have said, under the influence, under the settled policy, the standing invitation of the statutes which invited the settlement of the public lands, to wit, the preemption acts. Now the question is, whether he shall be deprived of the value of the improvements which he put upon that land by his labor and his money? I wish to read briefly from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office touching this case:

"As the laws of 2d July, 1836, and the 3d March, 1837, took away from settlers on these lands the right of preemption, and appropriated the same as town sites, I think they are equitably entitled to the value of the lands of which they were deprived; and in view of the particular condition of this and other claims, I would recommend the passage of an act giving to those who were really the actual settlers on said land, and who but for the town surveys would have obtained the land settled on, an equivalent in money for said land, at the actual value of the particular tract, (independent of any other improvements thereon not made by such settler,) at the date when the entry could have been perfected, deducting therefrom the amount which, at the minimum price, would have had to be paid on the entry thereof; the right of preemption to be determined in the usual mode by the land officers, subject to a review by this office, and the value of the tract as above mentioned, to be assessed by the same officers, after due examination into all the necessary facts, to enable them to arrive at such value."

Now, this bill proposes to constitute the officers of the proper land office arbitrators, to determine upon evidence to be submitted, the value of the improvements put upon this land by the claimant. That is the effect of this bill. It proposes to give him what these officers shall determine he is entitled to for the improvements put upon the land after hearing the evidence in the case. Is not this equitable and just? Congress appropriated that land for a town site, sold it for town lots, and unquestionably derived much more for it in that way than they would have done had a preëmptor entered the land and appropriated it in the usual manner. There is but one point in this bill, and that is to enable the land officers at Burlington to determine what this claimant is equitably entitled to by reason of the improvements put upon the land. That is the whole of it.

Mr. EDGERTON. With the gentleman's permission, I will ask if the site of the town of Burlington is also included in this bill?

Mr. CLARK. Not at all. The act of Congress laying off certain towns included that of Burlington. There were some four or five towns, but this land is that upon which the town of Madison is situated.

Mr. EDGERTON. And not the town of Burlington?

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sir. I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. AVERETT. I must persist in my objection to this hasty action upon this bill. I doubt not the sincerity of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. CLARK.] But we should set a bad example—establish an unsafe precedent, in passing a bill of this sort, without subjecting it to the scrutiny of one of our standing committees. The gentleman has, no doubt, given his views of it honestly, but I doubt whether one third of the members present have been sufficiently informed by his remarks to vote understandingly upon it. I must insist upon my motion, that it be laid aside, with a recommendation to the House that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. CLARK, and it was disagreed to.

The question then recurring upon the motion of Mr. AVERETT to lay the bill aside to report it to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, it was agreed to.

CHARLES S. MATHEWS, CHARLES WOOD, AND JAMES HALL.

The committee next proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 135, for the relief of Charles S. Mathews, Charles Wood, and James Hall.

This bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the above-named persons the sum of $12,119 47, in full satisfaction of all claims against the United States for and on account of damages sustained by the claimants under a contract to furnish marble for the custom-house at New York city.

Mr. DANIEL. I reported that bill, and, with the consent of the committee, will state the principal facts of the case. It is a claim which originated under the contract made with these gentlemen to supply materials for constructing the custom-house at New York. They were to be furnished with the patterns for the cutting of the marble, and after they had entered into the contract and gone to the quarry where they were to prepare the materials, they were detained for some considerable time at that place with their hands, horses, oxen, &c. This was in consequence of the failure of the agent of the Government to supply the models, and they claim damages in consequence of the delay thus occasioned. When the case was first before the Committee of Claims, the testimony did not enable them to see very clearly the facts of the case, and the committee deemed it proper, therefore, to refer the matter to the Solicitor of the Treasury, to ascertain the facts and the opinion of that officer under the facts and circumstances, whether they were entitled to anything and what amount. The testimony was taken on the part of the Government, and in behalf of the applicants. It is quite voluminous, and the report of the Solicitor follows the report of the committee. According to the report of the Solicitor, although they failed to deliver the materials precisely at the time stipulated in the contract, he says that the Government sustained no injury in consequence of it; but it was rather an advantage to the Government. They had to deliver the wrought marble, &c., it is true, in the public streets of New York, convenient to the custom-house; and as they had to leave space for them to pass with their carts and vehicles along the streets, they could only, therefore, deliver certain quantities of marble where they could work it. Although it was not delivered in pursuance of the terms of the contract precisely, yet it was delivered in accordance with the requisition of those who were engaged upon this work. That is the whole violation, if any, on the part of these contractors. The Government did fail to supply these models, and did keep them considerably longer than they otherwise would have had to remain there, for the purpose of cutting the marble, and quarrying materials for the custom-house. The Solicitor reports these facts; and according to the testimony taken on both sides, he says there ought to be paid to these contractors, in consequence of the injury they had sustained, $17,430. The Solicitor was warranted by the testimony which was taken; but the committee believed that the estimate in regard to some of the items was extravagant. Where they believed, from their own knowledge of the facts which were proved, that they were extravagant, they curtailed those items, and reduced the amount to $12,119 47, the amount mentioned in the bill. We made a curtailment in several items, and the committee think, under the facts and circumstances of the case, that the amount ought to be paid to the claimants. I hope the bill may be laid aside, and reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

GENERAL JAMES C. WATSON.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar was House bill No. 136, for the relief of the legal representatives of General James C. Watson, late of the State of Georgia. This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of General Watson, the sum of $14,600, with six per cent. interest from the 8th day of May, 1838, being the amount paid by said Watson to the Creek Indians for certain slaves captured by those Indians from the Seminoles.

Mr. SACKETT. This claim is to recover FOURTEEN THOUSAND SIX HUNDRED DOLLARS that the petitioner claims. General James C. Watson, in 1838 paid to the Creek Indians for one hundred and three negroes claimed by them as their captives, taken, and as the Creeks allege, by them from the Seminoles in the Florida war, while they (the Creeks) were engaged in the service of the United States under the agreement of the 28th of August, 1836, hereinafter stated. The sole claim of the Creek Indians to these negroes was made on the ground that they were, when taken, the slaves and property of the Seminoles.

The general facts of this case are these: General Jesup, in the prosecution of his command in the Florida war, in 1836, by John D. Campbell entered into a contract with the Creek Indians, to furnish certain forces to the United States to be employed in that war. By the agreement, it was agreed on the part of General Jesup, that the Indians should be entitled to the plunder they should secure or capture from the Seminoles during their services in behalf of the United States. These are the precise terms of the contract. I wish the committee to bear in mind the terms were, that the Creeks should be entitled to the plunder they might capture from the Seminoles during the time they were in service in the war, because in the various reports and in the prior consideration of this subject, there has been a very common error committed on the part of those who have advocated the passage of a bill to pay this claim, and that error has been this: they have uniformly stated it to be a part of the contract that the Creeks should have the slaves and property that they might take from the Seminoles during their engagement. There never was any such contract. The United States, through its agent, General Jesup, never entered into such an engagement. I have the contract before me, and perhaps it may be well, for the purpose of having the committee understand distinctly the terms of that contract, to send it up to the Clerk's desk and have it read:

The State of Alabama, Tallapoosa County:

This contract, entered into between the United States of America on the first part, and the Creek tribe of Indians on the other part, witnesseth:

That, upon the consideration hereafter mentioned, the party of the first part agrees to advance to the party of the second part the sum of thirty-one thousand nine hundred dollars, to be applied to the payment of the debts due by the Creek nation of Indians. And the party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to furnish from their tribes the number of from six hundred to one thousand men for service against the Seminoles, to be continued in service until the same shall be conquered; they to receive the pay and emoluments and equipments of soldiers in the Army of the United States, and such plunder as they may take from the Seminoles.

And the party of the second part releases, transfers, and assigns to the party of the first part all their right, title, claim, interest, and demand, in and to the annuity granted by the party of the first part to the party of the second part, for the year 1837.

In witness whereof, I, John A. Campbell, on the part of the United States, do hereby set my hand and affix my seal, the 28th of August, 1836.

JOHN A. CAMPBELL, [L. S.]

In witness whereof, we, the chiefs and headmen of said tribe, on the behalf of said nation, do hereby set our hands and affix our seals, the 28th of August, 1836.

This claim is to recover the money paid for one hundred and three negroes, claimed as the slaves of the Seminoles, and alleged to have been taken by the Creeks while engaged under their agreement, upon the ground, and the only one which has been contended for here, that it was a part and parcel of the contract, that slaves were to be delivered, if taken by them, to the Creeks, as property, as plunder, for the uses and purposes of slavery. It will be seen, that what they were entitled to by the terms of the contract, was the plunder which they might take from the Seminoles during the time of their engagement. It is to make these slaves a portion of that plunder, and to recover pay for them as plunder, that this claim is brought.

This is a true statement of this case. The Committee of Claims of the Thirtieth Congress adopted the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs made in 1842, and the Committee of Claims of the present Congress adopt the language of that report as to the terms of the contract entered into between the Creeks and the United States. This has been the common error of those who have sustained this claim. This report thus adopted in the Thirtieth and this Congress, made by the Committee on Indian Affairs, was first made to the Twenty-fifth Congress, and was the first report that was made upon this subject. This is the language of that report in relation to the above contract, viz:

"In the year 1836, General Jesup, then in command of the troops of the United States in Florida, agreed with certain Creek warriors, whose services he thus engaged against the hostile Seminoles, that they should be entitled to all the slaves and other property of the enemy they might capture. The said warriors, in pursuance of this engagement, among other things, captured a large number of negroes, about one hundred and three of whom were slaves of the Seminoles, and became, under said contract, the property of the Creek warriors."

Here is the language of the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs in 1842, and the language which has been adopted by the Committee of Claims in relation to this claim. The first point I make, then, is this: That there never was such a contract as the one described in that report, that the Creeks should be entitled to all the slaves they might capture from the Seminoles; and to sustain that point, I present the contract itself. The terms of that contract are, that the Creeks shall be entitled to what plunder they take of the Seminoles, but not to the slaves they take; and there I leave this point. Next I call upon those who are to advocate this claim, in the first place to establish the fact that the Creeks took the negroes in controversy. Upon that point, and upon this whole matter, the evidence is very voluminous, and it is impossible to state it here; but I deny that there is sufficient evidence in the case, derived from the facts, and not from this extraordinary report of 1842, to prove these negroes were taken by the Creek warriors. I will admit that report so states in the very start. It alleges the facts to be, that the Creeks took these negroes, but I deny that the facts justify or authorize that allegation. It appears in the proofs that a part of these negroes were taken, or came in, in the winter and spring of 1838. Now, the Creek soldiers were mustered out of the service in the fall of 1837, so that part of these captives they never had anything to do with. Without going into the detail of that evidence, I call upon the advocates of this measure to establish the fact, that the Creek soldiers ever took one of these negroes. This is among the many errors committed in the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Twenty-fifth Congress.

I call upon the advocates of this claim to establish another fact—a fact not recognized by the laws of nations, not recognized by our own Constitution and laws, except so far as applicable to certain rights maintained in a portion of our own States. I call upon them to establish the fact, that the institution of slavery existed among the Seminoles at all. I deny that fact. Where is the evidence that these humble negroes, taken in the heat of battle, fighting for their rights and liberties, nobly sacrificing their lives in the defence of their country, in the defence of their homes, their firesides, in defence of their nationality, were slaves? By the law of nations—the universal law governing mankind, with only exceptions which but tend to establish the general principle—every presumption, is that these men were free. The whole law of the case, every legal intendment is, that these men were free citizens of the Seminole nation. Let the advocates of this claim establish these points before they ask to pass this bill: first, that slaves are embraced in the contract; next, were these negroes captured by the Creeks; and next, under the law, the law of nations, the law of this nation, or by the law even of that savage Indian nation let them show, if they can, that the institution of slavery existed among the Seminoles at all. I deny it—deny each of these propositions.

There is another point which I think is worthy of consideration, and I am not prepared to say that I am entirely right in the conclusions I have arrived at in regard to it. I do not see satisfactorily that this money was ever paid at all.

It is said that General Watson contracted here in Washington to pay $14,600, and that he placed the money in the hands of a common agent, Major Armstrong, who was Indian agent, and, by the purchaser himself, made agent to pay this money, not to be delivered to the Indians till they had arrived at their own country west of the Mississippi. It is a fair inference that the money was placed in the hands of an agent to be delivered upon the receipt of the negroes. Now, the negroes were never delivered to General Watson. He never had possession of them; and I am, at least, justified in asking the advocates of this claim to show that this money ever passed into the hands of the chiefs or authorized agents of the Creeks, or that it ever passed out of the hands of General Watson's agent.

There is another view of the case, and one which, I think, should be entirely controlling, if there was no other point in it. It is this: If these negroes were property at all at the time the purchase was made—if they were property according to the laws of property among the Seminoles, or of the States where they were held, they were property of the value of $60,000 or $70,000. This will not be disputed. General Watson, too, knew all about the condition of that property; he was familiar with the whole matter; he was himself engaged in removing Creek Indians, and the contingencies of the property he well understood; he knew all about the claim of the Seminoles, if they had any, and of the Creeks, if they had any, to this property; he was probably more intimately acquainted with it than any officer of the Government. This whole transaction was after the treaty of Camp Dade, made 6th of March, 1837, by which it was agreed that at least a part of these very negroes should go with the Seminoles to their home in the West, which Watson well knew.

The following is an extract from this treaty:

"Capitulation of the Semiole nation of Indians and their allies, by Jumper, Holah Toock, (or Davy), and Taholoochee, representing the principal chief Micanopy, and fully empowered by him, entered into with Major General Thomas S. Jesup, commanding the United States forces in Florida, the 6th day of March, 1837.

"ART. I. The chiefs above named, in behalf of themselves and the nation, agree that hostilities shall cease immediately, and shall not be resumed.

"ART. II. They agree and bind themselves, that the entire nation shall immediately emigrate to the country assigned to them by the President of the United States, west of the Mississippi."

"ART. V. Major General Jesup, in behalf of the United States, agrees that the Seminoles and their allies, who come in and emigrate to the West, shall be secure in their lives and property; that their negroes, their bona fide property, shall accompany them to the West.

"ART. VI. That the expenses of the movement west shall be paid by the United States."

"ART. VII. That the chiefs, warriors, and their families and negroes, shall be subsisted, from the time they assemble in camp, near Tampa Bay, until they arrive at their homes west of the Mississippi, and twelve months thereafter, at the expense of the United States."

General Watson knowing that this property, if property at all, was worth $60,000, and knowing the contingencies attached to it, and knowing of this treaty purchased it, as a speculation, for $14,600. It was but a speculation. It was an adventure. He took all the chances, all the risk, on himself; and, under the circumstances, he has no right to come to Congress and ask to be remunerated. The Government never guaranteed possession. The Creeks guaranteed title. But Watson knew this Government had no lawful power to give him possession; this Government reserved nothing—had no power to do so.

But it is said that the Government agents did not deliver the property, as ordered by the Department. They had no authority to deliver the property. They had no evidence that the contract between the Seminoles and the Government of the United States embraced these negroes. On the contrary, they had positive evidence, from the contract itself, that they were not embraced in it. They had no evidence that slavery existed among the Seminoles, and they would have been culpable in the highest degree if they had violated every principle of law to obey an unlawful order of an Indian Bureau. They had no right to separate these colored prisoners of war from the others, and declare them to be chattels, things, slaves. What were these directions from the Indian Department but an unlawful, an abominable order, that men who had fallen into our hands by the fortunes of war should be taken from under the control of the military forces of the United States and made slaves—slaves themselves and in their posterity, to the latest generation? It was nothing else. It was a naked, undisguised design to have prisoners of war sold, by the intervention of the officers of the United States, into perpetual slavery, without trial, without evidence, without hearing. Is Congress to sustain a transaction of that kind, a transaction of so infamous a character?

Mr. DUNCAN, (interrupting.) Perhaps the gentleman can inform us what disposition was made of these persons after they came into the hands of General Watson?

Mr. SACKETT. They went with the other prisoners of war to the West. They came into the hands of the military forces of the United States and were treated as prisoners of war.

Mr. DUNCAN. Were they slaves or free negroes?

Mr. SACKETT. They were with the Indians in the Florida war, and after they fell into the hands of the military forces of the United States, they refused to be separated from their Indian friends, but went with them to their country in the West; there is no evidence they were slaves.

I will not longer detain the committee in the discussion of this case. I present these points, first, that there never was any contract entered into between the Government of the United States and the Creek Indians, in relation to slaves—there is no power to make such a contract under the Constitution. That is one point.

In the second place, there is no evidence that the Creeks took these negroes at all.

In the third place, there is no evidence that slavery exists among the Seminoles, and the law of nations—the contrary not being shown—clearly establishes the fact that slavery does not exist there, and therefore they were taken as ordinary prisoners of war.

And, in the fourth place, General Watson entered into this negotiation with his eyes open, and, understanding the whole transaction and all the contingencies in relation to it, entered into it as a speculation, purchasing what was worth, as property, $60,000 or $70,000, for $14,600, and took his chances of the result. I present these four points to the consideration of the committee. It was an agreement with the Creeks, not with this nation—the United States received nothing.

Mr. DANIEL said: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the positive assertion of the gentleman, that there is no evidence to sustain the claim, arises from his failure to examine the evidence in the case. I apprehend that General Jesup, who was connected with the transaction to some extent, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the then Secretary of War, [Mr. Poinsett,] understood the facts in the case as well as gentlemen here now do, and a great deal better; and if any gentleman will examine into the facts, he will find it stated in the report upon this case, (made some years since, and contained in Ex. Doc. No. 225, 3d sess. 25th Cong.,) that the institution of slavery did exist among the Seminoles. The gentleman states that there is no evidence that slavery existed there, nor is there any evidence that the Creeks captured these slaves. I will read the statement of General Jesup, that the committee may see what little reason the gentleman has for such positive assertions. In one of his letters to Captain William Armstrong, he says:

NEWANVILLE, (FLORIDA), September 17, 1837.

SIR: In addition to the inducements held out to the Indians who may enter the service, is that of the Seminole property. Their negroes, horses and cattle, (and they are rich in that description of property,) will be given to the captors; the Creek warriors, who captured but a small portion of the Seminole property, received for their captures between fourteen and fifteen thousand dollars.

Captain Wm. ARMSTRONG, TH. S. JESUP.
Choctaw Agency, Arkansas.

Here is another letter of General Jesup:

[EXTRACT.]

FORT GILLILAND, September 17, 1837.

CAPTAIN: In addition to their pay as soldiers, they [the Choctaw warriors] will have all the Seminole property they capture; and those Indians are rich in cattle, horses, and negroes. The Creek warriors received between $14,000 and $15,000 for their captures.

Captain B. L. BONNEVILLE, 7th Infantry,
Commanding Choctaw warriors,
Choctaw Agency, Arkansas.

Mr. SACKETT. Are you reading from the contract?

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir; I am not reading from the contract; but I am reading to show how General Jesup understood the contract, and how the Creek warriors understood it. They looked upon it as embracing not only all the cattle, horses and hogs captured by them, but all the slaves they might take from the Seminoles. In a certain list, in which the officers were directed to report the names of the negroes and their owners, it appears that a great many slaves were owned by a certain Harriet Bowlegs, daughter of an Indian chief. The facts show that a great many slaves were owned by other Indians. But notwithstanding this, the gentleman from New York says slavery did not exist among the Seminoles; and that the contract with the Creek warriors did not embrace slaves. These assertions, in the face of the official reports and statements I have read, should have no weight with this committee. If the facts were to be looked at, and the case decided as any similar case, not involving this peculiar species of property, it would, I apprehend, meet with no opposition. I think I shall be able to show before I get through, that the question which the gentleman has raised, does not necessarily arise in the case, but that Mr. Watson was drawn into this matter partly to relieve the Government from the embarrassing situation in which it had been placed. The facts are fully sustained by the reports, but it would take too much time to read them. I will state the material facts to be gathered from them. In the prosecution of the Seminole war, it seems to have occurred to General Jesup, then conducting it, that a band of Creek warriors would furnish efficient aid in hunting out the Seminoles in their hiding places, and giving intelligence where they might be found, and thus enable him to act more successfully against them. He therefore entered, it seems, into an engagement with the Creeks, that if they would furnish a band of warriors, they should, in addition to their pay as soldiers, have all the property they might capture, embracing slaves as well as any other property.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman. I understand him to say, that General Jesup entered into this contract with the Creek Indians. Do I understand him correctly?

Mr. DANIEL. I so understand the contract.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I did not understand the document when it was read at the Clerk's table. It was my impression, however, that this contract was signed by another man, and that General Jesup had nothing to do with it. All I desire is to get at the facts, and if I am wrong I desire to be corrected.

Mr. DANIEL. Although not signed by General Jesup, it might have been made, and I suppose was made, under the authority and by order of General Jesup. I am quite certain that the agreement was recognized and sanctioned by him.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I was in that country at the time this contract was made. I belonged to a company at that time which had contracted to emigrate these Indians beyond the Mississippi river. By the order of General Jesup I obtained a contract for emigrating these Indians. They were promised that if they would go to Florida and assist in the war against the Seminoles, that they should have the plunder captured by them, including the negroes. This was expressly understood before they left the country. I was there at the time, and I do not think I can be mistaken; they expressly understood that they were to have the negroes which they should capture. These are facts, and stubborn facts. We were to take the families of the warriors engaged in the Seminole war to Mobile Point, and there feed them till the war was concluded. This was done; and the Indians, after the war was over, did not return to the Creek country, but to Mobile Point, where we received them and carried them west of the Mississippi river. I say I was in the country when these Indians went into that war, and I know that this was their understanding; and whether the contract specifies that they were to have the slaves, or not, such was their understanding of it beyond a doubt.

But the gentleman says there was nothing like slavery existing in that country. Now, I was born and raised in that country, and my recollection is, that slavery has always existed among them. I know that a trade has been carried on by selling slaves between the Creeks and Florida Indians. These are facts which I know; and whatever may be said by other gentlemen in relation to this matter, I have no doubt that the money was paid for these negroes. The gentleman states that they were sold for $14,600, while they were worth $70,000. It must be recollected that that property was selling low, comparatively, then, to what it sells for now; and who would buy that kind of property unless he expected to purchase it for less than its real value? No man of sense would have done it.

Mr. SACKETT. The report upon which this claim is based, states expressly that these negroes were worth $60,000 at market value.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I do not know what the report states, for I have not read it, but I say again, that no person would have bought these negroes under the circumstances, unless they had been sold for less than their market value.

Mr. DANIEL. I was proceeding to bring the material facts before the committee, and then I will state the point upon which I think the case really turns. In accordance with the understanding between General Jesup and the Creek Indians, a band or regiment of that tribe embarked in the war. The Creek warriors claimed to have captured the rise of one hundred slaves—one hundred and three, I think. The whole number of slaves taken from the Seminoles was, between two hundred and three hundred. A great many had run away from the planters residing in Florida, Georgia, and Alabama, and were living among these Indians when they were captured. For such as belonged to our own citizens, and were captured by the Creek warriors, they received $20 ahead. They received a good deal of money in this way. The slaves captured and claimed by the Creeks, as well as others, were taken into custody and carried, under the orders of General Jesup, to Fort Pike, there to be kept until some disposition should be made of them. Knowing the influence which the slaves had over their Indian owners, and knowing their attachment to their slaves, it occurred to the officers of the Government, that if these slaves should go west with the Creeks, who captured them, they would become a source of contention and of war between the Seminoles and the Creeks. These consequences the Secretary of War and the officers engaged in that service were disposed to prevent; and General Jesup, it seems, made an ineffectual effort to purchase of the Creek warriors their captured slaves, that they might be sent to Liberia. They were kept at Fort Pike some time. After the slaves were sent to Fort Pike the Seminoles surrendered, and a treaty was concluded between them and General Jesup. They were then ordered to New Orleans, from whence they were to be sent to their destination, west of Arkansas. The slaves had not been disposed of, and were still at Fort Pike when the Indians arrived there. About the time the Seminoles reached Fort Pike, certain delegates from the Creek warriors came to Washington city, to have some arrangement made about these slaves. General Jesup had endeavored to purchase them of the Creek warriors, and had ordered $8,000 to be paid to them, as appears from one of his dispatches. In another, he states that they were the property of the Government. General Jesup was under the impression, when he wrote the dispatches I have read, that the Creek warriors had accepted the $8,000 which he had directed to be paid them; but when it was offered by Lieutenant Sloan they refused to take it. I have no doubt that General Jesup supposed, at the time he wrote the letter referred to, the negroes had been actually purchased of the Indians.

I will not take the time to refer to all the dispatches for all the facts connected with this matter; but if gentlemen will take time to examine them, they will find that they are substantially as I have stated them. The Secretary of War was, it seems, much perplexed as to the best disposition to be made of the slaves. He did not know what the Government could do with the slaves if purchased. It was suggested by General Jesup that they be sent to Liberia. But there was too much public excitement upon the subject of slavery, in consequence of the agitation of the 21st rule for the exclusion of abolition petitions, to venture upon such a policy. It seems to have occurred to the Secretary of War and Commissioner of Indian Affairs to prevail upon the Indians to sell their interest to some individual, who would take possession of the slaves, and thus prevent their removal West. About that time Mr. Watson happened to be in the city upon some business he had with the War Department, and overtures were made to him to purchase the interest of the Creek warriors in these slaves. It appears from the evidence that he was not prepared to make the purchase, as he did not expect anything of the sort. He first ascertained, it seems, from the Secretary of War, whether, if he should purchase these slaves, that Department would give an order upon the officers having the slaves in possession to deliver them up to the authorized agent of the Creek Indians. He was assured that if he should make arrangement with the Creek warriors to purchase them, the War Department would give the order and have the slaves delivered up to the authorized agent of the Creek warriors. That matter being understood and arranged, he then put himself to work and obtained at some sacrifice $14,600, the purchase money paid for the negroes. To raise that sum he incurred, as he says, a responsibility of some $17,000. He paid the purchase money to Captain Armstrong, the agent of the Creek Indians, with the consent of the Creek delegates. While I am upon this part of the subject, I will say, that the purchase money was carried to the Creek nation and was there distributed amongst the Creeks entitled to it. The contract being concluded between Watson and the Creek delegates, the War Department, not foreseeing the difficulties of separating the Indians from the Seminoles, and not knowing at the time that the Seminoles had been brought into contact with the Indians at Fort Pike, gave orders directing the slaves to be delivered to a man by the name of Collins, the authorized agent of the Creek warriors. Collins went to New Orleans and demanded the negroes. Some of the negroes had been previously attached, at the instance of a man by the name of Love. A controversy took place between Love and General Gaines respecting some of the negroes, which was dismissed, I think, but occasioned some delay. When the Seminole Indians found that the officers having charge of their slaves were directed by the Government at Washington to deliver them up to the agent of the Creek Indians, they manifested great excitement, and refused to go West, unless their slaves were permitted to go with them; they went so far as to say, that General Jesup had promised them that if they would remove to the West, their slaves should go with them. I have seen no evidence that such a promise was made them by General Jesup, and I apprehend that it was a fabrication of the Indians after falling in with the slaves. Lieutenant Reynolds was the officer who had charge of the emigrating Seminoles. He made an arrangement with Mr. Collins, that if he would accompany him as far as Vicksburg, he might then devise some means to get the Indians to consent to the delivery of the negroes. They were not authorized, by their orders, to employ force for that purpose. I am not disposed to censure the honest efforts of Lieutenant Reynolds, though Mr. Collins seems to think he did not do all he might have done for the delivery of the captured slaves. The Indians would not consent to be separated from their slaves before nor on their arrival at Vicksburg, and the agent of the Creek warriors, it seems, went as far as Fort Gibson. At Little Rock, before reaching Fort Gibson, Lieutenant Reynolds asked the assistance of the Governor of Arkansas to aid him in effecting a delivery of the slaves, but the Indians seemed to be so excited that the Governor refused to interfere at all, and directed those concerned in their removal to get them off as soon as possible, apprehending there might be an outbreak or serious disturbance. When the Indians, with the negroes, reached Fort Gibson, General Arbuckle, stationed there, found it impossible to deliver the slaves without using force, which he conceived to be impolitic, and which he was not authorized to do; and he wrote back to the Department the reason why he had not obeyed the orders. The slaves were never delivered up, and the Government refused to comply with its engagement with the Creek warriors. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not material to determine the value of the slaves, so far as the bill under consideration is concerned. General Watson was induced, through the agency of the Government, to advance his money to the Creek warriors, and relieve the Government from the difficulty in which it was placed, by relieving it from the obligation it had entered into to deliver the slaves to the Creeks, and having done that, he is entitled, upon every consideration of justice and honor, to at least that remuneration authorized by the bill. Mr. Poinsett, then Secretary of War, on the recommendation of the Indian agent, did not hesitate to recommend that the Government should reimburse Mr. Watson for the money advanced by him to the Creek warriors.

I think it is apparent from the document to which I have referred, and from a statement of Judge Iverson, who happened to be here at the time, that a proposition was actually made to General Watson to purchase these slaves. I ask for the reading of the statement of Judge Iverson, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The statement was then read by the Clerk, as follows:

"Shortly after the return of the warriors composing what was called the Creek regiment enlisted by General Jesup in 1835 to serve in the Florida war against the Seminoles, and the removal of said warriors with their families to the Creek nation west, General James C. Watson and myself were deputed, as agents from the Alabama emigrating company (who removed the Creeks under contract) to the city of Washington, to settle up the accounts of said company with the Government. When we arrived in Washington, we found General Armstrong, Indian agent, in the city, with a delegation of Creek chiefs. A proposition was immediately made to General Watson and myself, by Carey C. Harris, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to purchase a large lot of negroes then claimed by the said Creek regiment, and represented to be at the time in the custody of the United States at Fort King, near New Orleans. The proposition was declined by me, but I was personally acquainted with most of the facts and conversations which occurred between the department, the Indian agent Armstrong, and General Watson, and learned the following particulars: That these negroes had been captured in Florida by the Creek regiment, from the hostile Seminoles; that agreeably to an agreement made with said regiment by General Jesup, they were to have all the property of the hostiles which they could capture, and they claimed these negroes; that General Armstrong and the delegation in Washington had authority to dispose of or sell their claim to these negroes; that the Seminoles who had emigrated to the West were very averse to allowing these negroes to go into the possession of the Creeks; that the Creeks were equally determined, when they arrived West, to seize them and subject them to their own service. The War Department apprehended that serious difficulty would grow out of this conflicting claim, and that war would ensue between the Creeks and Seminoles in the contest for the negroes. It was deemed by the Department prudent, and indeed necessary, to prevent bloodshed and war between the two tribes, that the negroes should not be sent to the West, but should be sold in the United States. Hence the proposition from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to General Watson, to purchase the negroes. General Watson hesitated for several days, but being urged by Mr. Harris, and assured that the negroes would be delivered to his agent immediately, he consented to buy them, and paid the price fixed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and General Armstrong, the agent. An order was issued from the Department, and an agent dispatched by General Watson to New Orleans, to receive the negroes. The United States officers in charge of them refused to deliver them; they were transported to Fort Gibson and turned over to General Arbuckle, as I have been informed, and were by him surrendered to the Seminole Indians, or turned loose and joined them; so that they were wholly lost to General Watson. Given under my hand this 19th December, 1831. ALFRED IVERSON."

Mr. Chairman, here is a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, about that time, which has some bearing upon that arrangement, and corroborates that statement—if it is necessary to corroborate a statement made by Judge Iverson, with whom many of us are acquainted. This bears date on the 5th day of May, 1838. That letter was written probably about the time of the overture made to General Watson, and in view of it. The arrangement between Watson and the Creek delegation was concluded on the 8th or 9th of May, 1838—I think on the 8th. Here is another letter, dated May 9, 1838, after the arrangement had been concluded:

WAR DEPARTMENT,

OFFICE INDIAN AFFAIRS, May 9, 1838.

SIR: The decision made a few days since, that the negroes captured by the Creek warriors in Florida should, in compliance with the engagement of General Jesup, be delivered to the delegation now here, has been communicated to them, with the intimation that when they had determined what disposition would be made of them, and communicated information of the same to this Department, the necessary orders would be issued. In a communication just received from the delegation, they state they have appointed Nathaniel F. Collins, of Alabama, their attorney in fact, to receive the negroes. I have the honor to request that an order may be issued to the commanding officer at Fort Pike, to Major Isaac Clark at New Orleans, to the commanding officer in Florida, and to any other officer who may have charge of them, to deliver to Mr. Collins all the negroes in question. He will, of course, hold them subject to the lawful claims of all white persons. Abraham and his family should be excepted, in consequence of a promise made by General Jesup. The officers should be instructed to exercise due caution, so as to deliver only those captured by the Creeks. It is proper to remark, that it appears from a letter received from Lieutenant Sloan, that these Indians refused the $8,000 offered them, under the direction of General Jesup, for their interest in these negroes.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,
C. A. HARRIS, Commissioner.

Captain S. COOPER, Acting Secretary of War.

Now, sir, the history of the case, as I have given it, from the statement of Judge Iverson, the letters of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the orders which were issued for the delivery of the slaves to the agent of the Creek warriors, shows that one of our citizens, relying upon the fulfillment by the Government of its engagement to the Creeks, advanced a large sum of money, which he obtained at a great sacrifice, and thereby relieved the Government from a perplexing engagement, and enabled it to carry out its policy of removing the Indians westward, without hazarding the peaceful relations of the Seminole and Creek tribes; and yet there are those, forsooth, who not only turn a deaf ear, but strive to defeat the proposition to refund the money advanced with interest, saying nothing of the profits which might have been realized, had the Government fulfilled its engagements, and large expenses incurred by General Watson to get possession of the negroes, merely because the question of slavery is connected with the transaction. Such a determination can only be consistent with the purpose to withhold the countenance and protection of the Federal Government from every transaction which may in any way relate to slavery. If there be a majority upon this floor who are disposed to place the Government in that attitude, they can do so. If all who may be connected with such transactions are to be placed out of the pale of its protection, that fact, startling as it may be, should be known. If, instead of slaves, this transaction had related to any other species of property, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] would not, I apprehend, have raised the objections to the bill under consideration which he has. I flatter myself, that if such were the case, he would be one of the most strenuous advocates of the bill: but because he scents a negro in the breeze, he takes the stampede, picks up his ears, and seems to start.

The gentleman charges this as having been a speculation. That, it seems to me, is altogether immaterial, if not idle. Suppose it was a speculation—indeed Watson would have been a fool to have given the full value of the slaves under the circumstances.

"There is many a slip
"Twixt the cup and the lip."

And he knew that, although the Government had pledged its faith to the Creek Indians that these slaves should be delivered up to them, or to their agents, some difficulty might arise, and all of them might not be obtained, and like every other man, he was disposed, when he had hazards to run, to make as good a bargain as possible. The slaves were worth, perhaps, some $30,000 or $40,000. He paid for them $14,600—not quite half their value. But what does all this amount to when the proposition is to refund the money actually advanced, with interest, and not the value of the slaves and the outlay in efforts to obtain them.

I do not see that there is any clear or well-founded objection to the arrangement entered into by General Jesup with the Creek warriors. The Indian tribes have been regarded and treated in conventional arrangements and treaty stipulations as quasi nations. It seems to have been in that view that the arrangement was entered into by General Jesup, and approved by the War Department; and it is not only humane, but sound policy that our Government should observe its engagements with the Indians. This it failed to do, by permitting their former owners to retain possession of the slaves, after a citizen, relying upon the assurances he had received, had purchased the interest of the Creeks in them, thereby occasioning a grievous injury, if not absolute loss to one whom it was its duty to protect.

Mr. SACKETT. If the gentleman will allow me, I will propound this question: How does he answer the objection that this contract does not operate upon slaves? I lay down the proposition that it does not include slaves.

Mr. DANIEL. That question I thought I had already answered. I suppose that General Jesup was aware of what he intended should be embraced by the terms which the agreement contains, and the Creek warriors knew what was designed to be included. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs seems never to have doubted that that contract embraced slaves as well as other property; and yet after all this, the gentleman gets up and quibbles about it, as if General Jesup and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs did not know what they had been doing. There is nothing in the gentleman's objection. I thought I had fully answered it by what I had read from the document referred to; no matter whether upon the principles of international law, or the principles of sound policy, this was a justifiable arrangement. After it was entered into, the strongest considerations of policy required our Government to fulfill its engagements with the Creek warriors. Had not Watson satisfied them, and the Government had refused to do so, all future overtures would have been regarded with suspicion.

Mr. STUART. The gentleman has stated that the Government agreed to give these negroes up to the agents of the Creek Indians, and I would like to ask him, if such an order was forwarded to the officers of the army, why it was not complied with?

Mr. DANIEL. If the gentleman had attended to me he would have discovered that I stated the reason why the negroes were not delivered up. Collins, as the agent of the Creek Indians, attended at New Orleans and demanded them, but when the Seminoles came in contact with the negroes at Fort White, they refused to proceed West, unless these slaves were allowed to accompany them.

Mr. SACKETT. What is the evidence?

Mr. DANIEL. The reports of the officers. Lieutenant Reynolds himself states it. It is to be inferred from General Arbuckle's statement, and from the communications of the Secretary of War and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recommending that the money should be refunded. There is no room to cavil about the facts. None in the world. The only ground of objection is really that slaves are involved.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. What evidence have the committee that the negroes claimed as slaves to the Seminoles were in fact slaves?

Mr. DANIEL. I have answered that question already once or twice. It was ascertained by those competent to know, that such and such slaves belonged to such and such persons. Among them were slaves of Harriet Bowlegs, daughter of King Bowlegs.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will the gentleman read that part of the evidence? I think she only belonged to Bowlegs's tribe. You will find it at page 62.

Mr. DANIEL. Here it is on page 74—Jack Bowlegs, thirty-six years of age; and others, put down as property of Harriet Bowlegs.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I wish to interrogate the gentleman as to whether the owners put down there are the tribe to which they belong?

Mr. DANIEL. You will find here the owners' names; but no tribe. There is another statement, where the tribe is put down, as well as the owners' names, and that is the reason why I have turned to this page. There is no room for cavil here.

Mr. GIDDINGS. What page is that?

Mr. DANIEL. Page 74, book 225.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will my friend say to the committee whether page 74 refers to slaves taken in 1836 and 1837?

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I wish to know how the committee were able to determine that the negroes claimed were slaves, and not fugitives from the slaveholders of the neighboring States?

Mr. DANIEL. If the officers who were authorized to make inquiries could not ascertain these facts, no one could; but gentlemen, it seems, pretend to know more than these officers who were in Florida, some of them, when the slaves were captured. These officers state that these negroes were the slaves of the Indians; but gentlemen say they were not, when they know as much about it as we know about the man in the moon. I say, the proof is conclusive that the Seminoles owned slaves, and that the negroes among them, generally, were slaves—many of them fugitives from their owners in Florida, Georgia, and Alabama. Wherever it was ascertained that they were fugitive slaves, they were returned. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, upon the facts reported to him, and with all the information which he, from his position, was able to obtain, says that the number captured by the Creeks was between sixty and seventy—the number having been reduced by sickness. Now, it seems to me, there can be no doubt about these facts. Watson having relieved the Government from its difficulties by rescinding its obligation with the Creek warriors, by the payment of a large sum of money, upon what principle is it that the Government shall not refund to him the money which he advanced upon the faith of its assurances? The Government is bound to protect its citizens, not ruin them. There can be no good reason why we should not refund the money in this case. It is a case of crying injustice. Watson, who has been deprived of his money ever since 1838, is now dead, and his family, perhaps, are in a suffering condition in consequence of the tardiness and delay to redress an injury which the Government itself has occasioned.

It seems to me that every principle of justice, and every object for which government is instituted, require us to refund promptly the money which he has advanced, and the interest upon it.

Mr. MACE. As one of the members of the Committee of Claims, I examined into this case, as it was my duty to do, and I have made up my mind conclusively, that this bill ought not to pass.

The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. DANIEL,] the honorable chairman of the Committee of Claims, for whom I entertain the most profound respect, has stated to the committee, in broad terms, that if this claim did not involve the question of slavery, there would be no difficulty in passing it through this body. I do not know what may operate upon the minds of gentlemen Free-Soilers, or gentlemen slaveholders, and other gentlemen upon this question, but I apprehend if slavery has anything to do with the question, it would give to this bill as many votes as it would lose.

I am a new member upon this floor, and were I in Indiana it would be unnecessary for me to say what I am about to say. Now, so far as I am concerned, and so far as my motives are concerned, I will certainly not be charged with being opposed so strongly to the institutions of slavery, as to be influenced by that consideration in my views of the case now before the committee. The question is one of right or wrong, of justice or injustice, involving not even remotely the question of slavery or freedom. In 1849 the best men we had in Indiana fell before this free-soil tornado. When it reached the highest men of our State, I occupied then, upon that question, the position which I occupy now. I entered the contest of 1848 as one of the Cass electors, and placed myself upon the then Democratic platform, upon the doctrine of non-intervention, and upon that I now stand. I make this declaration in order to show to the committee that, so far as I am concerned, I will not be charged with entertaining opposition against a bill because I am opposed to the institution of slavery, or in favor of it. I will not upon this occasion enter into the merits or demerits of the Seminole war. I will not discuss the question of employing blood-hounds or Creek Indians. I will not discuss the question of decoying Osceola with a white flag, to make a prisoner of him. I will not enter upon the discussion of the profligate expenses of the Government during the existence of this war—a war which cost this nation, I believe, more than the revolutionary war. It is not necessary that we should do it. I will simply discuss the question before the committee. What are the prominent features in this case? After all the power of the nation had been exhausted—after all the power of blood-hounds had been employed, we find General Jesup making a treaty with the Creek Indians, and under that bargain they were to have, in the language of the contract, "the plunder" which they should conquer from the Seminole Indians. Whether this movement on the part of our officers of that day was such as should characterize civilized warfare, I am not prepared to say. Yes, I am prepared to say, that it was most damnable in every single feature, from beginning to end.

What progress did the Creek Indians make, assisted by the blood-hounds and the might and power of this nation? They penetrated into the country of the Seminoles, using the tomahawk, destroying and damaging all the property they found in that nation. Among other things, they found some negroes there—whether slaves or free, I am not prepared to say; but I will allude to that question before I close. The Creek Indians captured something like one hundred and ten negroes. What does General Jesup do? What feeling operated upon his mind? He proposes to pay these Creek Indians $8,000 for these negroes, that they might be sent to Liberia. About this period of time General Watson reports himself at Washington city. The question of these one hundred and ten negroes, was a question which occupied the cabinet deliberations of the then Administration. What do they do? Do they carry out the humane notions of General Jesup? No. Where is Poinsett and Harris, and where is Watson? Here is a speculation in which dollars and cents can be made, with which the almighty dollar has to play a part, brick and mortar towering high, and military and official station being the test of respectability, instead of virtue and honesty.

Let me remark here, where is the evidence, the conclusive evidence, which shows that a single one of these negroes was a slave? Are we to leap in the dark—are we to jump at the conclusion that because these negroes were in the possession of the Seminoles, that therefore they were slaves? Where did they belong, and where did they come from? If they had made their escape from Georgia and other slave States, the ownership was not changed in consequence of their taking up their homes among the Indians. Not at all. The original ownership continued, admitting them to be slaves. But, shall we jump at that conclusion? Is it not much more rational and just, and in accordance with humanity and every correct principle, to take them to be prima facie free, at least until the contrary is most conclusively shown, as it should be in this case, but is not? What was the motive which operated upon Watson? Why, to go, take these negroes and sell them into eternal servitude, though perhaps they were all free. Yes, the dazzling light of speculation was before his eyes, and he was determined to grasp it. Fifty thousand dollars was quite too tempting, and he was determined to have it, though it involved the abject servitude of one hundred and ten human beings and their posterity forever. I envy not such feelings or motives, and would not possess them for all the gold of California.

Mr. DANIEL, (interrupting.) The gentleman takes a distorted view of this matter. So far as we can infer from the documents read, overtures were made to Watson; and, of course, he endeavored to make a profitable arrangement. But the gentleman represents him as seeking it out.

Mr. MACE. Yes, sir, overtures were made to him, and he yielded to them with alacrity, with an appetite. Overtures were made to him, and he went into the flattering speculation willingly. He makes his purchase, pays the Creeks fifteen thousand dollars for their title to the negroes, and now what has he bought? He supposes he has purchased one hundred and ten negroes that are then in the possession of the United States officers, and controlled by the bayonets of this nation. The same bayonets that held them, could deliver them over to General Watson, and he could sell them into eternal slavery, and pocket a speculation of at least $50,000. That is what he intended to do.

But what is further shown in this case? What operated upon the mind of General Jesup? These negroes were in his possession. The order came for their delivery to Watson. Does General Jesup deliver them over? No. As an officer of the United States Army—as a man whose heart was in the right place—he refuses to do it. What was done with them then? What became of them? That question has been asked, and I will answer it as the record answers it. You will remember, that after peace was restored, the Seminoles agreed to go to the home assigned them by the Government. In marching there by Fort Pike, if I remember right, they accidentally, as it were, came across and recognized these negroes who had been living with them. They looked upon them in a proper spirit—yes, the savages looked upon the negroes in a Christian light, and not for the purpose of selling them into eternal bondage. What do they do? They come to a stop, and say to General Jesup: We will not move a single inch further unless you let the poor negroes go with us. What was the consequence? Why, General Jesup, his heart being in the right place, as I before remarked, disregarded this trumped-up claim of Watson, and permitted the negroes to go where they belonged, and they went with their brethren, the Seminole Indians, and took up their home with them.

Thus, then, did this rich speculation of General Watson, by which he supposed he should realize so much, vanish to the four winds of heaven. He comes now to the Congress of the United States and asks the representatives of this nation to place him where he was before he entered into this speculation. Instead of realizing $50,000, he is minus $15,000, the negroes are free, and that freedom is not secured them by a professed Christian nation, but by a wild, fierce, and savage tribe. Sir, what did he purchase? He purchased one hundred and ten negroes that had been taken from the Seminole Indians. He did not know, nor did he care, whether they were bond or free. That consideration never entered into his mind for a single moment. I say, then, that there is no evidence whatever that these negroes were property, that Watson went into the speculation blindfold, and I will never vote a single dollar out of the Treasury of the United States to pay him—never.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. It is not my purpose to detain the committee very long, and in what little I have to say, I intend to speak to the point. I shall confine myself principally to the books. I am not going to tell the committee what my politics are now or what they were a few years ago, for it is known to everybody in this House that I am a Union Whig, with strong Free-Soil tendencies, and opposed to sending delegates to the Baltimore Convention. [Laughter.] But that shall have nothing to do in determining my vote upon this question. I shall examine the case and the evidence, and come to the same conclusion that I would come to in any other place, upon the same amount of evidence.

The history of this case has, I believe, been very correctly stated. In 1836, or thereabouts, this nation was involved in a war with a few swamp Indians in Florida, called the Seminoles, and finding them hard to conquer, in that country, this nation entered into an alliance with another nation, in the West, called the Creek Indians, and (here is a clear case of armed intervention) it was agreed between this nation on the one part, and the Creek nation on the other—inter alia—that the Creek Indians should have all the plunder they should take from the Seminoles in the war then raging. I intend to advert to the contract, and to call the attention of the committee more particularly than has yet been done, to the phraseology of the bond. I shall then call attention to the report that was made in 1842, which is the same report, I believe, that is before us now; at least, this is the third edition without much correction or improvement. I shall then proceed to remark upon the law and testimony, and it is very probable I may convince myself before I get through, that I ought to vote for the payment of this claim. There seems to be some doubt about that, however.

The expression in the contract with the Creeks is "plunder;" and when this case was before Congress in 1842, the committee made a report, in which they translate the word "plunder," states, as I will show by the reading of the report. The report reads in this way:

"In the year 1836, General Jesup, then in command of the troops of the United States in Florida, agreed with certain Creek warriors, whose services he thus engaged against the hostile Seminoles, that they should be entitled to all the slaves and other property of the enemy they might capture."

Now, I wish to say to this committee most emphatically, that the word "slaves" is not mentioned in the contract between the Creek Indians and the United States—the word "negroes" is not there—the word "servants" is not there—the words "personal property" is not there; but it is the word "plunder," as I will show.

The contract is in these words:

"This contract, entered into between the United States of America on the first part, and the Creek tribe of Indians on the other part, witnesseth: That upon the conditions hereafter mentioned, the party of the first part agrees to advance to the party of the second part the sum of $31,900, to be applied to the payment of the debts due by the Creek nation of Indians. And the party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to furnish from their tribes the number of from six hundred to one thousand men for service against the Seminoles, to be continued in service until the same be conquered; they to receive the pay and emoluments and equipments of soldiers in the Army of the United States, and such plunder as they may take from the Seminoles." &c.

There is the contract; the word used is "plunder;" and yet in 1842, when compensation was claimed for these negroes, who were said to be slaves, it was stated in the report that the United States agreed in 1836, in so many words, that they would give to the Creek Indians all the slaves they should conquer from the Seminoles in that war. I will leave it to this committee to put their own construction on the word "plunder." I have never understood, and I do not believe it is generally understood in the North, where they speak the English language, that the word "plunder" could be construed or tortured into meaning slaves. It is understood to be quite a different article.

In the course of that war, the Creeks conquered and took possession of between two and three hundred negroes, of all ages, of all sexes, and of all relative conditions of life. We find upon the list of captured negroes, an old lady of seventy years of age. We find them of all ages, sixty, fifty, forty, thirty, twenty, and there is one of them a child but two weeks old. That child is claimed by the heirs of Watson as having been among the number of the prisoners of war that the Creeks acquired, under the contract which I have just read. Upon this list we find an old lady who has lived her three score years and ten, and a child just beginning to draw the breath of life—a child but two weeks old.

Now, I make this admission here: I believe it is a fact in the history of this country that the Creeks own slaves, that the Seminoles own slaves, and that the people of the Southern States own slaves, according to the laws of their respective States, tribes, or nations. I have no doubt at all that the Creeks and Seminoles hold slaves.

Well, there seems to be some uncertainty with regard to the number of slaves that were sold, because we find here, by the terms of the contract, that the Creeks sold to General Watson their slaves. If they held slaves, they sold them. They sold them en masse. They sold them in droves, as you sell a drove of wild buffaloes; not designating a particular person or persons, but such negroes as were taken by the Creeks from the Seminoles during that war. These negroes were at that time at Fort Pike, below New Orleans, under the charge of Lieutenant Reynolds. From that place they were taken to Little Rock, in Arkansas, and were pursued there by a man named Nathaniel F. Collins, Esq., of Alabama, claiming to have been the agent not of Watson exclusively, but of the Creeks, with a power of attorney to take from the authorities of the United States a certain party of negroes, supposed to be about one hundred and three, more or less, because the evidence is that the negroes, taken as prisoners of war, had been greatly reduced in number by death. It is uncertain how many remained, but probably not more than seventy. It is said that the negroes that were transferred by the Creeks are those contained in the schedule that is found on the 66th page of the Documents of this House, No. 225, as a "Registry of negro prisoners captured by the troops 'commanded by Major General Thomas S. Jesup, 'in 1836 and 1837, and owned by Indians, or who 'claim to be free.'" Here is one set down as Jacob, and described as wounded in one knee; and here are the wife and children of Jacob. Here is one negro of the age of seventy, another twenty-five, another seventy-two, another seventy-one, another fifty, another twenty, another ten, and here is one only three years of age. Then, too, we have the genealogy of some of the families. Here is one said to have been "sold by Mr. Forrester, of Six-Mile Creek, to Bowlegs several years since." Here are mother and child—the mother twenty-five years old and the child only three years old. Here is one called Dick, said to be the property of Colonel Humphreys. If I had time, I would give you the history of the whole flock. Here are Tena and Linda, and Ishmael and Pompey, and Scipio and Patty, and Ben, and Flora, and Joe; and here is Betsey, who was but two weeks old. She had been christened while quite young, and her christened name was "Betsey." [Laughter.] Here is one called Joe, who is described as "one of the most important and influential characters among the Indian negroes," and his wife and children; "they never had a white master." Here is a man among the number of those claimed as having been sold by the Creeks to this man Watson, who is said here in the inventory never to have had a white master, and is described as one of the most important and influential men among the Indian negroes. Yet he is now claimed as "plunder"—as coming within the denomination of the word "plunder," and to be sold as property.

But the list goes on further. Here is Toby and his wife and children. He is described as the commander of the negro force on the Wihlacoochee; the chief councillor among the negroes, and the most important character. He, too, is called "plunder," although one of the most important men taken in that country, and probably one of the hardest to conquer by the united forces of the United States and the Creek nation. Here is another, called Fanny, twenty-five years old, and her daughter Katy, only three years old. Whether she belonged to Jumper—which is the name set down here—or whether that is the name of a tribe, I will not undertake to say. [A laugh.] She is the "cousin of Murray," and is said "to be the property of Colonel Humphreys;" and there is "a defect in Katy's right eye." Fanny is another of the persons sold by the Creeks—if sold at all—and claimed by Watson, as one of the articles of "plunder." Her daughter Katy has a defect in her right eye; that is the only mark upon her by which she could be recognized.

I will state here, that when the agents of Watson looked at this flock of negroes, at Fort Pike, and at Little Rock, they were unable to identify an article of the "plunder" that they claimed to have bought in 1836; and that is one of the reasons why Lieutenant Reynolds, and the other officers who had the negroes in charge at different times, refused to deliver them up. There were no witnesses who could recognize one of them as a part of the plunder captured by the Creeks.

Well, we will go a little further on the list. Here is one whose name is Abraham, and who is fifty years of age. What is said of him? Why here is quite a little biography of him. He is "the principal negro chief; supposed to be friendly to the whites; said to be a good soldier and an intrepid leader. He is the most cunning and intelligent negro we have here. He is married to the widow of the former chief of the nation." Here's "plunder" for you. [Laughter.] The husband of a Queen! Here is a man that has a diadem on his head—a crowned head recognized as plunder, by virtue of a contract entered into on the 28th of August, 1836, between the United States on the one part; and that high contracting party, the Creek Indians, upon the other. [Laughter.] Here the Creeks have, amongst other "plunder," a chief—one that has been crowned—the first warrior known to the tribe; the husband of a widowed Queen! [Laughter.] He was friendly to the United States. That was no doubt after he was conquered. But I have not time to dwell further upon this part of the case.

But I will refer the committee to a little more evidence. This treaty took place between the Seminole Indians and the United States. I will read the fifth and sixth articles. The fifth article of the treaty is as follows:

"Major General Jesup, in behalf of the United States, agrees that the Seminoles and their allies, who come in and emigrate to the West, shall be secure in their lives and property; that their negroes, their bona fide property, shall accompany them to the West; and that their cattle and ponies shall be paid for by the United States, at a fair valuation."

"ART. 6. That the expenses of the movement West shall be paid by the United States."

The treaty was consummated the 6th day of March, 1837, by which the United States minister plenipotentiary, General Jesup, stipulated that the Seminoles should have all their negroes, their slaves—their bona fide property, as the expression is—and it shall be taken west of the Mississippi.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him? Is not he aware that there were other negroes owned by the Seminoles than those captured by the Creek Indians?

Mr. HOWE. I stated that there were two or three invoices here.

Mr. DANIEL. I stated that there were some two or three hundred of these negroes.

Mr. HOWE. I find that there are three several invoices; now the great question is, which of these three invoices the claim is based upon?

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will the gentleman permit me to explain? Gentlemen do not seem to comprehend these documents. The invoice which my friend has just read included all the slaves and free negroes captured in 1836 and 1837; after that the other invoices were made out, but this includes all captured during these two years of the war in which the Creeks were employed. There were one hundred and three at the time this invoice was made out.

Mr. DANIEL. I will direct the attention of the gentleman to the positive statement of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The number captured by the Creeks, and claimed by them, was between sixty and seventy. The number having then been reduced by sickness to that.

Mr. HOWE. The report says one hundred and three.

Mr. DANIEL. Yes; but they were reduced to that by sickness.

Mr. HOWE. Well, I intend to argue this as fairly as any other question in the world, for I do not know how soon I may be a prisoner of war myself, and I shall desire to be treated fairly when I am taken prisoner. I think I should make a very poor negro—[laughter]—slave.

Now, I say distinctly, and I do not wish to be misunderstood, that this number was greatly reduced by death and by disease. The number was about sixty or seventy, as nearly as I can make the calculation, who were actually living at the time the gentleman was making such a desperate effort to bring them into his possession. That is what I meant to say, and that is what I affirm to be a fact. Now, the first question to be ascertained is, were the negroes actually there, or were they negroes at all? The next question is, were they slaves at that time, to be treated as slaves, or were they prisoners of war, and to be treated as such? That is the great and final question upon the subject. General Gaines decided that they were prisoners of war, and he refused to allow some fifty or sixty to be taken from him. The decision of the court was against him, and it was taken up to another tribunal, where that decision was reversed, and they were decided to be prisoners of war; and while they were prisoners of war they were not to be sold as slaves, nor were they to be treated as slaves, much less as "plunder." That does not apply to them at all. Now, what did the United States agree further to do? She agreed to remove them to the West. By the treaty with these Indians, the United States was to remove their slaves—their bona fide slaves—to the West. But from the time they were captured as prisoners by the Creeks, they passed into the hands of the Government for the time being. Now, that is the precise position of the case. If Watson did not buy these negroes, who did buy them?

What is the law with regard to warrantee title to real estate? The maxim is, caveat emptor. If you want a warrantee you must ask for it in your deed. But not so with personal property: a man who sells personal property warrants that he is the owner of the property, and has a right to sell; if it turns out otherwise, he is responsible over to his vendee. So in this case, the Creeks, not the United States, are responsible to the heirs of General Watson. Now, as I said before, if these persons were property—were "plunder"—then they were legally purchased by the Creeks of the United States, by virtue of the contract with General Jesup; but I deny that slaves are property or "plunder," either in legal or common parlance, except in certain localities, by mere police regulation. They are called property in some States, personal property, and, I believe, in others, real estate—for the sake of convenience.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask the gentleman if he will give way in order to enable me to submit the motion, that the committee do now rise?

Mr. HOWE. I will give way for that purpose.

The motion was then put and carried in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman [Mr. DISENEY] reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration various bills which they had instructed him to report to the House with the recommendation that they do pass. They had also had under consideration House bill No. 97, which they had instructed him to report back to the House with the recommendation that it be committed to the Committee on Naval Affairs; also Senate bill No. 42, which they had instructed him to report back to the House with the recommendation that it be committed to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. POLK. I move that when this House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next. I make the motion for the reason that it is the purpose of Congress to celebrate the birthday of the Father of his Country.

Several MEMBERS. Oh! let's adjourn till Tuesday.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move to amend the motion by inserting "Tuesday" instead of "Monday."

Mr. POLK. I accept that amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

A MEMBER. The celebration is to take place on Saturday.

Mr. POLK. I understand the celebration is to take place on Saturday. I therefore adhere to my original motion to adjourn till Monday.

Mr. DANIEL demanded the yeas and nays; but only nine gentlemen rising, they were not ordered.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move to amend by striking out "Monday" and inserting "Tuesday." I will remark that most of the celebrations occur on Monday.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. But not those in this city.

Mr. FLORENCE. I notice that several members of the House are to speak at celebrations in other places to be held on Monday; and I think it is proper to adjourn, that one, or two days even, may be devoted by the members of the National Legislature to the patriotic observance of the day which gave birth to the Father of his Country.

Mr. FOWLER. I demand the yeas and nays, and tellers upon the yeas and nays, upon the amendment; which were not ordered.

The question then recurring on the amendment to insert "Tuesday" in the place of "Monday,"

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. FOWLER, and STANTON of Tennessee, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—yeas 97, noes 43.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. JONES. I now ask for the yeas and nays on the motion as amended.

Mr. STANTON. They have already been refused.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is mistaken. They have not been refused on that motion as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind the gentlemen that discussion is not in order.

Mr. STANTON. I rise to a question of order. It is, that it is not in order to call for the yeas and nays. The original proposition was offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. POLK] and the yeas and nays called for, and refused. The amendment was then adopted, and the yeas and nays were refused upon that amendment. So that the yeas and nays have been refused upon both propositions.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have not been refused upon the proposition as it now stands.

Mr. STANTON. I make another point of order. It is, that this motion is one which cannot properly be amended. They are two independent motions, and you must put the question upon the longest time first.

Mr. JONES. That is not a question of order; it is a constitutional question.

The question was then taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and there were, upon a division of the House, yeas 35, noes 112.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MASON. I move that this House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. On a motion to adjourn to a particular day, a motion to adjourn is not in order. They are both privileged motions.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the motion of adjournment as amended, and there were—yeas 96, nays 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernethie, Aiken, William Appleton, Ashe, Babcock, Barrere, Beale, Bell, Bennett, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. C. Cabell, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chastain, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Curtis, Deane, Disney, Duncan, Evans, Ewing, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Hall, Hammond, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Haven, Holladay, T. Y. How, Ingersoll, Jenkins, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Mason, McNair, McQueen, Meade, Miller, Miner, John Moore, Morehead, Morrison, Murphy, Nabers, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Polk, Porter, Powell, Riddle, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Smart, Smith, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Thurston, Toombs, Venable, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Wells, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—96.

NAYS—Messrs. Charles Allen, Willis Allen, Allison, Averett, David J. Bailey, Bartlett, Breckenridge, Brenton, Joseph Cable, Caskie, Chandler, Churchwell, Cleveland, Colcock, Daniel, John G. Davis, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Fowler, Giddings, Grow, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Hascull, Eberard, Hendricks, Houston, John W. Howe, Ives, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Edward C. Marshall, McDonald, Meacham, Millson, Molony, Newton, Morgan Parker, Perkins, Phelps, Price, Robbins, Schoolmaker, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stratton, Townshend, Walbridge, Washburn, Welch, Wildrick and Woodward—62.

So the motion as amended was adopted, and the House determined that when it adjourns, it will adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

[Mr. BELL stated that Mr. HUNTER and Mr. HORSFORD were detained from the House by indisposition.]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, asked the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, covering an estimate of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of expenses appertaining to the Omaha Indians now in this city. It is important that the communication should be taken up and referred.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I believe there are other communications also upon the Speaker's table, which should be disposed of.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is highly important that the communication which I have referred to should be taken up and disposed of, and that the appropriation therein recommended should be made immediately, as it is costing heavily, every day, to support these Indians here. That we should endeavor to avoid. I move that we proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

There being no objection,

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES.

The Speaker laid before the House a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting the correspondence of Captain Long and others, in regard to the conduct of M. Kossuth, while on board the United States steam frigate Mississippi.

Mr. SMITH. I move that the communication be referred to a select committee of five, to be appointed by the Chair, and in addition, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the letter addressed to me by Captain Long made a part of the document, and printed with the other letters.

Objection being made, the letter referred to was not permitted to form a part of the document.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will make a suggestion to my colleague, [Mr. SMITH,] which is, to let the papers go upon the table and be printed, and after that it will be seen whether there is any necessity for referring them to a select committee.

Mr. SMITH. I am willing, but I desire that the letter I referred to shall be printed with them.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have no objection to printing the communication from the Department, but I think it wrong for us to include in it private correspondence.

A Voice. I object.

Mr. SMITH. Allow me to make a single remark in reference to that. The only object I have had in calling out this correspondence is, to vindicate Captain Long and the Navy. The letter which he has addressed to me contains a very distinct statement of the whole affair, and I trust that when I announce that my sole object is to vindicate him, the House will make the letter a part of the document, and have it printed with the other papers.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I would ask if the letter is before the House, and if so, how it came there?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimously consent to introduce it.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I renew the objection.

The question then recurring upon the motion to refer the communication to the Committee on Foreign Affairs—

Mr. SMITH. I would like to inquire whether it is not in order to make a motion to raise a select committee?

The SPEAKER. It is in order, and the Chair entertains the motion; but under the rules, the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Seymour,] must be first put.

Mr. GAYLORD. I move to lay the communication upon the table, and that it be printed.

The question was then taken on this latter motion, and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, viz:

To the House of Representatives:

I communicate to the House of Representatives herewith a report to me, dated the 13th instant, from the Secretary of the Interior, respecting the delay and difficulty in making the apportionment among the several States of the Representatives in the Thirty-third Congress, as required by the act of 23d May, 1850, in consequence of the want of full returns of the population of the State of California, and suggesting the necessity of remedial legislation.

The subject is one of much importance, and I earnestly commend it to the early consideration of Congress.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON CITY, February 14th, 1852.

On motion by Mr. MEADE, it was Ordered, That the communication and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and be printed.

Also, the following communication from the President of the United States, viz:

To the House of Representatives:

In answer to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 26th of December last, requesting information in regard to the seizure of the brig "Aroe," at Jeremie, in the Island of St. Domingo, I transmit a report from the Secretary of State, and the document by which it was accompanied.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, February 12, 1852.

Ordered, That the communication be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and be printed.

Also, a communication from the President of the United States, as follows, viz:

To the Senate and

House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit to Congress a letter addressed to the Secretary of State by the Commissioner of the United States under the convention with Brazil, setting forth the obstacles which have impeded the conclusion of the business of that commission.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, February 16, 1852.

On motion by Mr. TAYLOR, it was Ordered, That the communication be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and be printed.

Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, covering an estimate of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for an appropriation to cover the expenses appertaining to the support of a party of Omaha Indians now in this city; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that this document be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It is entirely unnecessary. But if it is to be printed, I only ask that the Committee on Indian Affairs may be permitted to act upon it before it is printed. To print it will take some two or three weeks.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. All Executive documents ought to be printed; if not, we can never afterwards ascertain what communications the President has made. They should be printed and put upon our files, and inserted in the volumes of the Executive documents.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to its being printed.

The document was then ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting estimates from the Engineer Corps of expenses for constructing an embankment along the foot of a dyke wall at Goat Island, near Newport Harbor.

Mr. HOUSTON. If this document refers to light-houses already in existence, and for supporting and keeping them in repair, then it should be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. But if it is for the building of new light-houses, then it should go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I will state that it is for the building of a dyke for a light-house. It is a new work.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then it should be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The communication was then referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting a report of the First Comptroller, showing the contracts made by that Department during the year 1851; which was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, accompanied by Mr. Downing's estimates, therein referred to.

Mr. HOUSTON. Estimates of that kind have usually gone to the Committee of Ways and Means. A few days since, however, a communication from the President of the United States upon the same subject, was, by a vote of the House, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Navy Department, transmitting, for the use of the House, three hundred copies of the Navy Register for the year 1852; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Department of the Interior, transmitting a statement prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of all the facts in relation to the title of certain tracts of land in the Symmes patent, in the State of Ohio, with the opinion of the Attorney General thereon; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Post Office Department, transmitting estimates of the revenues and expenditures of that Department for the quarter ending September 30, 1851, showing that the amount received for postages collected and postage stamps sold during that quarter, was $1,314,286 27; which communication was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Commissioner of Public Buildings, transmitting his annual report; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Governor of Pennsylvania, transmitting resolutions of the Legislature of that State relative to the bridge over the Ohio river, at Wheeling; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication and sundry papers relative to Samuel Barker's patent and premium paying machine for pitching and painting the seams of vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Also, a communication from Louis Kossuth, returning his thanks to the Government and Congress of the United States for the treatment he had received at their hands.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move that it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that it lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. EVANS. I intend to speak one hour upon the proposition to print.

Pending the motion of Mr. STEPHENS, and upon the motion of Mr. TOOMBS, the House, according to order, adjourned until Tuesday next at 12 o'clock, m.

BILL PASSED.

The engrossed bill for the relief of Mrs. E. A. McNeill, widow of the late General John McNeill, was read a third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON'S BIRTH DAY.

Mr. CLEMENS observed, early in the day, that it had been the custom to pay some respect to the memory of Washington on the occasion of his birth day. On Friday last the Senate neglected to pass any resolution for its observance, and he therefore now suggested an adjournment.

It was, however, desired by several Senators first to dispose of the morning business; and that having been done, the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 24, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

On motion by Mr. G, it was Ordered, That the report of the Committee of Claims, on the petition of Joseph Hill and Sons, be recommitted to the Committee of Claims.

MEXICAN CLAIMS.

Mr. MASON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to ask that that committee may be discharged from the further consideration of a number of petitions which I hold in my hand, addressed to the Senate, praying an examination or inquiry into the manner in which the claims against Mexico were examined and treated under the late commission which sat under the Mexican treaty. If the Senate will indulge me for a moment, I will state that the petitioners ask that the committee, to which were referred these memorials, may have power to prosecute their inquiries by sending for persons and papers. The Committee on Foreign Relations, however, have considered it impracticable to conduct their inquiries in this mode, and, on consulting with gentlemen connected with these matters, it seems to be acceptable to them that the subject should be referred to a select committee. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Downs] proposed such a reference. He is not now present; and unless some other gentleman is disposed to move that they be referred to a select committee, I will ask that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of these memorials, and move that, for the present, they may be laid upon the table.

The committee was accordingly discharged from their further consideration, and it was ordered that these memorials be laid upon the table.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition of the legal representatives of Joseph Ford, an officer of the army during the Revolution, praying a pension, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. SMITH, it was Ordered, That the memorial of C. Alexander and T. Barnard, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee of Claims.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the report of the Secretary of the Navy of 6th January, and several petitions of officers and seamen of the United States Navy, reported a bill providing additional compensation to officers and men of the navy who have served, or are still serving, on the coast of California and Mexico, and for other purposes; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of the heirs of John Jackson, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. FISH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Richard M. Bouton, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. ATCHISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Lewis Ralston, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that the papers relating thereto, which were transmitted to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs the 22d January last by the Secretary of the Interior, be returned to that Department. It was so ordered.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a joint resolution modifying the existing laws for the government of the Post Office Department in relation to California and Oregon; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of the guardian of the heirs of the late Major Thomas Noel, of the United States Army, praying the settlement of his accounts, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of the heirs of Christopher Hillary, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Rufus L. Baker, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the memorials of Benjamin S. Roberts, presented the 12th of January, 1852, and the 11th of February, 1852, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the motion to print the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, presented the 23d instant, relating to the removal of the mint from Philadelphia to New York, reported that the memorial be not printed; and the report was concurred in.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee of Claims, to which were referred the documents relating to the claim of B. Juan Domercq, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of Don B. Juan Domercq, a Spanish subject; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Gad Humphreys, reported a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. HUNTER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to modify the several acts regulating the warehousing of imported merchandise, and for other purposes.

ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. BORLAND by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Joint Resolution in relation to the number of electoral votes each State will be entitled to in the presidential election of 1852.

Be it resolved, &c., That the number of electoral votes to which each State shall be entitled in the election of President and Vice President of the United States in 1852, shall be equal to the number of Senators and Representatives to which each of said States will be found entitled by the apportionment under the enumeration of 1850, as provided by the act for "taking the Seventh, and subsequent Censuses," approved May 23, 1850.

The resolution, on the motion of Mr. BORLAND, was read a second time, with a view to reference.

Mr. BORLAND. If it be in order, Mr. President, I will remark, for a moment, upon the character and object of the resolution, before I move its reference.

We have printed, and upon our desks this morning, a communication from the President of the United States, laying before us a report from the Secretary of the Interior, showing why he has been unable to perform the duty of making the apportionment of Representatives upon the basis of the new enumeration, as required by the act of May 23, 1850; the reason stated being the defective returns from the State of California. This communication has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. In connection with it, and as a part of the action of the committee and of the Senate in regard to the questions it raises, and requires to be settled, I think the declaration contained in this resolution is most important—necessary, indeed, on account of peculiar circumstances to enable the people of the several States to exercise the elective franchise in the ensuing presidential election.

I have hesitated to bring this question before the Senate, and should not have done so but for the magnitude of its interest to all the States, and particularly to the State I have been sent here to represent; and further, for finding that opposite opinions on the subject are entertained alike throughout the country, as indicated by the newspaper press, and among the members of this body. For myself, I have held from the first but one opinion; but as I am always disposed to distrust somewhat my own opinions, especially upon questions like this, when I find them not concurred in by gentlemen whose capacity to judge of such questions I greatly respect, and concede to be, in general, greatly superior to my own, I desire this difference of opinion to be decided by the authoritative action of Congress.

In my own opinion—which with some diffidence I submit to the Senate—the Constitution, the act of 1792, and the census act of 1850, taken together, clearly and certainly establish the position assumed in my resolution, that the number of electoral votes which each State will be entitled to give in the ensuing presidential election, will be the number of Senators and Representatives to which it will be entitled by apportionment under the recent enumeration; that is, that the election will be held and the votes given upon the basis of the census of 1850, and not that of 1840. In support of this opinion I refer to the Constitution, and the legislation under it on this subject. Providing for the census, or enumeration of the people, the Constitution prescribes:

"The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct."—Const. U. S., art. 1, sec. 2.

Until the first actual enumeration, the number of Representatives was arbitrarily fixed by a special provision; thirty thousand being the minimum of population entitling to one Representative, and New Hampshire having three, Massachusetts eight, &c.

For the election of President and Vice President it is provided that—

"Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the States may be entitled in Congress," &c.—Const. U. S., art. 2, sec. 1.

To carry out these provisions of the Constitution Congress passed "An act relative to the election of a President and Vice President of the United States," the first section of which is as follows:

"That except in case of an election of a President and Vice President of the United States prior to the ordinary period as hereinafter specified, electors shall be appointed in each State for the election of a President and Vice President of the United States within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December, one thousand seven hundred and ninety-two, and within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December, in every fourth year succeeding the last election, when electors shall be equal to the number of Senators and Representatives to which the several States may, by law, be entitled at the time when the President and Vice President thus to be chosen should come into office: Provided, always, that where no apportionment of Representatives shall have been made after any enumeration at the time of choosing electors, then the number of electors shall be according to the existing apportionment of Senators and Representatives."

APPROVED, March 1, 1792.

Until 1850, the practice had been to pass an act, at the end of every ten years, "to provide for taking the census;" and subsequently, when the returns of the enumeration, &c., had been received, to pass another "act for the apportionment of Representatives among the several States, according to the census." As examples of this legislation, I refer to the act—the title of which I have just quoted—for taking the Fifth Census, approved March 23, 1830, and the subsequent act for apportionment under the same census, approved May 22, 1832.

This practice was abandoned in 1850; and in providing for "taking the Seventh and subsequent Censuses," it was deemed best, and was provided accordingly, in the same bill, for making the apportionment of Representatives—and consequently, of presidential electors. Accordingly it was, among the new provisions, enacted:

"That from and after the 31 day of March, 1853, the House of Representatives shall be composed of two hundred and thirty-three members, to be apportioned among the several States in the manner directed in the next section of this act."

And further:

"That so soon as the next and each subsequent enumeration of the inhabitants of the several States, directed by the Constitution of the United States to be taken, shall be completed and returned to the office of the Department of the Interior, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the aggregate representative population of the United States, by" &c., "which aggregate population he shall divide by the number two hundred and thirty-three, and the product of such division, rejecting any fraction of a unit, if any such happen to remain, shall be the ratio or rule of apportionment of Representatives among the several States under such enumeration; and the said Secretary of the Department of the Interior shall then proceed, in the same manner, to ascertain the representative population of each State and to divide the whole number of the representative population of each State by the ratio already determined by him as above directed, and the product of this last division shall be the number of representatives apportioned to such State under the then last enumeration."

["Act for taking the Seventh and subsequent Censuses," &c., sections 24 and 25. Approved March 3, 1850.]

I repeat, that from these citations of the Constitution and Laws, I deduce the opinion that the enumeration of 1850 is the basis of the apportionment of Representatives in the next Congress, and of electors for the ensuing presidential election in November next. The act of '92, which I have quoted, is specific in its provision that this shall be so. The condition that it prescribes, namely, that the apportionment under the new enumeration shall have been made prior to the election, is provided for in the act of 1850, and will be fulfilled by the Secretary of the Interior, who, by a simple arithmetical computation, will, as soon as the returns shall be complete, ascertain and announce the apportionment, and that certainly before the election in November next. And, as if to make this intention and provision the more clear and emphatic, the proviso at the close of the section makes an express and contrasting provision, that in the event that an apportionment under any new enumeration shall not have been made prior to the election, then the number of electors shall be the same as under the old apportionment.

This, to my mind, is conclusive of the question. Moreover, the uniform practice in all preceding presidential elections has been in accordance with this opinion, or I might, perhaps, with more propriety, say that my opinion has been based upon the Constitution and Laws, as I have quoted them, and as they are elucidated by the uniform practice of the Government.

I do not think I have overrated the importance of this question. It certainly involves the highest rights and interests of the States—the exercise of the elective franchise in the election to the highest offices in their gift. To enjoy that right, and exercise that franchise in an effective manner, it is indispensable for them to know how many votes they are respectively entitled to. But upon this point, as I have before remarked, there are opposite opinions; some contending that they are to vote under one apportionment, and others insisting that another apportionment is to determine the number of votes they shall give. If the old apportionment is to be observed, my own State will have but three electoral votes; whereas, under the new one she will have four. Differences much greater than this, with other States, will be made by the adoption of the one, or the other, apportionment. Some States will lose, and others will gain votes and relative weight in the election, to the extent, in several instances, of from three to four, and perhaps of five votes.

I urge, then, not only the importance of the question itself, but the urgent necessity of disposing of it, by early action upon the resolution I have submitted. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

CONVENTION WITH BRAZIL.

Mr. MASON. I ask the Senate to take up a joint resolution, which I offered the other day, to extend the time of the commission under the convention with Brazil. It is necessary that, if anything is done in relation to it, it should be done, at the latest, by the second of March, and that day is now near at hand.

The joint resolution was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the act entitled "An act to carry into effect the Convention between the United States and the Emperor of Brazil, of the 27th day of January, in the year 1849," approved March 20, 1850, shall be and the same is hereby continued in force for the period of nine months from and after the first day of March, in the year 1852.

Mr. MASON. The necessity for the extension of that commission is shown in a communication from the Secretary of State, as communicated to us by the President of the United States. There is a provision in the treaty with Brazil which stipulates that all the claimants against Brazil shall have evidence furnished them from that country to establish their claims, if need be; but, from the extent of territory through which that evidence was to be sought, it was found impracticable to obtain that evidence before the commission would expire. The Secretary of State consequently recommends that the commission should be extended for nine months; but, on consultation with the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] and he with the commissioner, I have become satisfied that it would be most expedient not to extend the time for a period longer than four months; and I move to amend the resolution by striking out the word "nine," in the ninth line, and inserting the word "four," so that it shall read, "shall be, and the same is hereby continued in force for the period of four months from and after the first day of March, in the year 1852."

The amendment was agreed to, and the joint resolution was reported to the Senate. The amendment adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in, and the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and was subsequently read a third time and passed.

CHARLES G. HUNTER.

Mr. CLEMENS submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of refunding to Charles G. Hunter the amount of losses sustained by him while commanding the steamer "Scourge" and the schooner "Taney," for supplies, for which the proper vouchers were not taken.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

On the motion of Mr. JONES, of Iowa, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa in aid of the construction of certain railroads in that State.

The pending question was on the amendment submitted by the Committee on Public Lands, as a substitute for the entire bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD then renewed his amendment, as an additional section, which, after being under discussion for some time, he withdrew a few days ago, to facilitate action upon the committee's substitute.

Mr. GEYER addressed the Senate until the usual hour of adjournment; when, without finishing, he yielded the floor, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 24, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business before the House is House bill No. 104, being a bill granting the right of way and making a donation of public lands to the State of Missouri, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein. The question immediately pending is the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; upon which question the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I would ask the permission of the gentleman from South Carolina to make a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. I would not make this request if it were not for an important matter.

Mr. ORR. Several days have elapsed since I obtained the floor, and I am not disposed to delay submitting my remarks any longer. I wish to proceed now. I would like to oblige my friend.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask my friend to allow me one moment, that I may modify the amendment proposed by me to the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. HALL.]

Mr. ORR. I have no objection to yielding for that purpose.

Mr. PHELPS. I make the following modification of my amendment.

[A copy of this was not obtained. It will be published hereafter.]

Mr. ORR. I propose submitting a few remarks upon the bill now before the House for consideration. I have examined its provisions with great care and attention, and have come to the conclusion to cast my vote for it. I shall, therefore, proceed to state briefly the reasons which have operated upon my mind in bringing me to that conclusion. The first question that is presented to the investigation of the House is this: Has the Congress the constitutional power to make the donations contemplated in this bill? In the Constitution is the following clause:

"That Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States."

I suppose that the power conferred by this clause upon the Congress of the United States is as ample, full, and complete, as any other power vested by that instrument in Congress. And the only limitation to that power, in my opinion, is an implied trust that the Congress, in making that disposition of the public lands, shall dispose of them in such a manner as most effectually to promote the interests of all the States. Now, this bill proposes to carry out, as I conceive, the constitutional power vested in the Congress for disposing of the public lands. I do not think Congress would have the power to give away all of the public lands; for in that way the Government would not be carrying out this implied trust. By virtue of her right as the proprietor of the public domain, the Government has the right to give away one half of the public lands, that the remaining half may be enhanced in value. Is not that a sound principle? Is it not a correct principle? I do not design entering into an elaborate constitutional argument upon this subject; but I will quote some authorities which may satisfy the minds of gentlemen who doubt upon this point, which are more concise and infinitely better than any argument which I might make. To them I desire to call the attention especially of the members from the old States who seem to be prejudiced against this bill, because, forsooth, it does not provide for giving lands to the old States. The first authority is that of Mr. Calhoun. I need not say, Mr. Speaker, that that authority with me, perhaps has more weight than the authority of any other statesman living or dead. Whether gentlemen agree with Mr. Calhoun in his general views, or not, it will be conceded by all, I suspect, that he was at least a strict constructionist of the Constitution of the United States, and that he was the last man who figured in public life who would have been disposed by his acts to confer upon the General Government greater powers than those which the Constitution plainly give. In the debate in 1848 in the Senate, on the bill making a donation of public lands to the State of Illinois, Mr. Calhoun participated. He said:

"The question in this case is a very simple one. We are authorized by the Constitution to dispose of the public lands. Here is a public improvement, projected either by the State, or by individuals in the State through which it will pass, and by which the value of the public lands will be enhanced. If, then, it will add to the value of our lands, ought we not to contribute to it? Would we not, as individuals, thus act? This is not a novel principle. It has been acted upon for more than twenty years. The case of the canal connecting the Illinois river with Lake Michigan is a striking one. There, alternate sections were given to make a canal; and I suppose I can appeal with confidence to the Senators from that State, whether the lands reserved to the United States were not disposed of afterwards readily?"

"Mr. BREESSE, (in his seat.) Thousands of acres were disposed of, which would otherwise never have been sold."

"Mr. CALHOUN. I have seldom given a vote the result of which gratified me more than the vote which I gave on that occasion. I then presided in that chair which you now occupy, and gave the casting vote. I take to myself, therefore, some share in the credit of that magnificent improvement. Indeed, I do not think that there is a principle more perfectly clear from doubt than this one is. It does not belong to the category of internal improvements at all. It is not a power claimed by the Government as a government. It belongs to the Government as a landed proprietor. And I will add, that it is not only a right but a duty, and an important duty. Now, what has been considered an equitable arrangement between the Government and the State which may undertake an improvement passing through the public lands? Long since, it was agreed that the grant of alternate sections was a fair contribution on the part of the United States, considered as a proprietor, and from which the United States would be a very great gainer. It appears to me to be an equitable arrangement; and I doubt whether, in any case, either of a canal or a railroad passing through the public lands, the United States will not be a gainer. To that extent I am prepared to go, be the road long or short; if it be long, you gain the more; if it be short, you gain the less: and you contribute in proportion to your gain."

That is one authority to which I wish especially to call the attention of members from the old States, who are disposed to raise a constitutional question against this bill. There is another authority, which I think will be considered upon this side of the House [Democratic] a very high one, from which I will read. General Cass, in that debate, in presenting the reasons why he would support the bill, said:

"This bill does not touch the question of internal improvement at all. It asserts no right on the part of this Government to lay out a road, or to regulate the construction of a road. The Federal Government is a great land-holder; it possesses an extensive public domain; and we have the power, under the Constitution, to dispose of that domain; and a very unlimited power it is. The simple question is, what disposition we may make of the public lands? No one will contend for the doctrine that we cannot give them away to a State. As the Senator from Kentucky has said, every President has signed bills asserting the principle that these lands may be disposed of by the General Government, without restriction as to the purpose of such disposition. We may bestow them for school purposes, or we may bestow a portion for the purpose of improving the value of the rest. What right have you to sit still and see your lands growing in value, through the instrumentality of individuals, without rendering any aid in furtherance of that object? It is the settlement of the lands that makes them valuable."

General Cass subsequently, in the same debate, in reply to a constitutional issue made by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Bagby,] in a more pointed manner maintained the constitutional power of Congress to dispose of a portion of the public domain to enhance the value of the remaining portion. He said:

"I will answer the Senator. The General Government has no power to make any railroad or canal through any State; but the disposal of a portion of the public domain to raise the value of the rest, is clearly within the power of this Government."

I find, Mr. Speaker, in the 15th volume of the "Congressional Globe," another debate upon the bill granting alternate sections of the public lands to the State of Michigan, in which a number of Senators participated. I believe that at that time Mr. Niles, of Connecticut, and Mr. Bagby, of Alabama, were the only two Senators who raised the constitutional question. In that debate Mr. Calhoun participated, and said:

"As far as the Michigan bill was concerned, he understood the principle was simply giving alternate sections of the public land for the purpose of enhancing the value of the remainder. Upon this point he would say that he had not the slightest doubt that the Government not only had the right, as proprietor of the public domain, to grant portions of that domain for such a purpose, but that it was the duty of the Government to do so. The Government, in his opinion, ought to be ashamed of allowing their lands to be enhanced in value by the exertions and at the cost of a State, without contributing in some degree to produce this result."

On that occasion, Mr. Niles, in reply to these observations, charged Mr. Calhoun with inconsistency in voting for that bill, and with an abandonment of his doctrines upon the subject of internal improvement. Mr. Calhoun replied to the Senator from Connecticut, as follows:

"He (Mr. C.) acted now on the principle on which he had acted from the beginning—a principle perfectly clear; and not only was it clearly the right of the Government to make these grants, but he considered that it was the duty of the Government to do so. They did not in so doing act in their sovereign capacity. The question of internal improvements was not at all involved, but simply that of proprietorship, whether, when anything was done to enhance the value of their lands in the vicinity of the works, they were not called on and bound in good faith to contribute something as the proprietors."

He said, further:

"But, in this, and in all cases where a road passed through the public lands, and application was made when the work had been commenced, and there was a reasonable probability that the value of the public lands would be enhanced, he was in favor of contributing largely, and in so doing he abandoned no principle. As far as he could judge of the localities, the canal would be of vast importance. The lands intermediate between the terminal would be greatly increased in value. As to the railroad he could not express any opinion, but was desirous to see it completed, and for that purpose was willing to grant the desired appropriation, on condition only that the Government should have the use of it when required for the conveyance of stores and troops."

It appears that explanation did not satisfy Mr. Niles, and he expressed the conviction that there was no difference at all between voting for the Cumberland road and for giving alternate sections of the public lands, Mr. Calhoun replies:

"Mr. C. remarked, in reply, that if the gentleman could not see a distinction between the case of the Cumberland road—a work undertaken by the General Government—and the case in which the Government, in its proprietary character, contributes to works undertaken by States or individuals, he (Mr. C.) could only express his regret. To him the difference was as great as that between night and day. In the one case there was an exercise of the right of sovereignty, in the other simply that of ownership."

If I should conclude, Mr. Speaker, to write out the remarks which I am submitting, I will perhaps incorporate some other authorities. At present, I will not trouble the House by reading any more authorities with reference to that point. The description of internal improvements objected to, as I understand, by the Republican or Democratic party, is that where the Government appropriates money out of the Public Treasury for the purpose of building roads, or constructing canals in certain localities. In the first place, it is said, and said, I believe, truly, that Congress has no right to levy money upon the people of the United States, for the purpose of constructing such works. That power is not granted by the Constitution. Conceding even that the Government possessed the power, one of the strong objections, and to my mind an insuperable objection against the exercise of it, would be that you levy money indiscriminately, all over the country, upon all of the citizens, and in constructing these works of internal improvement, you benefit sections only. The advantage would be local merely. Certain portions of the country would be favored, and others would not; and it is, therefore, best to leave the construction of these works with the States, who will take care of their own interests in the premises. Their citizens will be taxed for the construction of those works, and they will receive the benefit accruing by the taxation for that purpose. But does this case come within that principle? I think one gentleman, at the opening of this debate, intimated that this bill was liable to all of the objections which had been urged against the Government embarking in works of internal improvement. There is no analogy, sir, at all.

This bill proposes to donate one half of the public lands within six miles on either side of the railroad to aid in the construction of that work. Does this reduce the revenue accruing from the sale of the public lands into the Treasury of the United States? Not a farthing; and why? Because the bill provides that when you give away alternate sections, that those reserved to the Government shall be doubled in value; and thus those which you are now trying to sell at $1 25, lands which would remain, probably, in market for twenty, thirty, or forty years at that price, are raised in value to $2 50, with the confident assurance founded upon universal experience, that those lands will sell more rapidly then at that enhanced price than they do now at $1 25 per acre. If this was a proposition simply to give the alternate sections without those remaining being increased in value—if, in other words, it reduced the revenue of the Treasury of the United States from the sale of the public lands—then I admit the objection of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] would be a valid one. But that objection does not exist to this bill. It is a phantom flitting only before the imagination of my friend. That which has given rise, I suppose, to it is the fact that he sees no provision in this bill to extend lands to the old States.

I think I have demonstrated that nothing is abstracted from the Treasury by the grants for the construction of these works, and that all the resources out of which and from which the funds are to come into the Treasury, are not reduced. If this is so, how can it be charged that it is involving the Government of the United States in a system of internal improvements, which has been warred against by the Republican or Democratic party throughout all time. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] also in the same speech intimated that it was clearly anti-Democratic, as well as unconstitutional. What are the facts? Almost every single one of the present heads, or what are called leaders, of the Democratic party, have supported bills identical with this bill in principle, without an exception scarcely.

I believe Mr. Polk, while he was a member of Congress here in 1828, voted for a bill similar to this, to aid in the construction of canals. Mr. McDuffie voted for such bills, as you have already heard from some of the gentlemen who have preceded me in this debate. General Cass, Mr. Douglas, Mr. Davis, of Mississippi, Mr. Calhoun, and Mr. Houston, in fact the whole of those who are now or were heretofore looked up to as the leaders of the Democratic party, have advocated and supported bills identical in principle with the bill now upon your table. It is not, therefore, anti-Democratic. You may take the vote by which the Illinois bill passed the Senate, or the vote by which the Mississippi bill passed, and you will find that a majority of the Democrats voted for it. Upon the Mississippi bill there were but eight Senators of the entire Senate who voted against the passage of the bill. I think I shall be able to show that this bill as reported by the Committee on Public Lands is infinitely a better bill for this Government than the Mississippi bill. I will show when I come to speak of the bill itself, that it is not to be scouted from this Hall, first, either upon the plea that it is unconstitutional, or second, that it is anti-Republican or anti-Democratic. I do not think that either of these pretexts will be available to drive the bill from this Hall, and I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] does injustice to his own party when he makes an imputation of that sort; for I take it that even in this House there is, perhaps, a majority of the members of the Democratic party who will vote for these bills.

Having disposed of this constitutional question more by authority than by argument, and having also disposed of the question of Democracy, I desire to direct the attention of the House to the advantage which is to result to the Government from the passage of the bill.

What advantage will the Government derive? The first advantage is this. It will bring lands into market which have been exposed to sale, and have not found a purchaser for thirty years. The road for which this identical bill provides, passes through a portion of Missouri, and through public lands, that have been subject to sale and entry from fifteen to twenty-five years. Those lands have not been sold, and why? Because they are situated so remote from market, so remote from navigable waters, so remote from all the conveniences of life, so remote from timber—for a large portion of the land consists of prairies—that persons have been deterred from occupying and settling them. Give them the facilities of a railroad; give them the opportunity of bringing timber to these prairies; give them facilities for sending off produce to market, and you will find those lands that have been reserved to this Government selling rapidly at $2 50 per acre, when they have remained now in market for twenty years, not bringing a dollar and a quarter per acre.

This Missouri bill provides for donating alternate sections of the public lands between the towns of Hannibal, on the Mississippi river, and St. Joseph, upon the Missouri river, lying for thirty miles west of the Mississippi, and for about the same distance east of the Missouri. All the public lands have been taken up, so that, although the line of railroad is a very long one, yet there are sixty miles of that distance where the company will not receive an acre of land. The settlements there go to illustrate the truth of the theory which I laid down, that when settlers are brought within convenient distances of navigable rivers or of railroads, the public lands are taken up. Where these facilities are not convenient, the public lands lie idle—are of no sort of use to the States, General Government, or any person. In many regions of the country there are public lands, as I have already stated, which have been exposed to sale for many years for $1 25 an acre, but remain unsold, and will remain unsold for fifty years to come, unless improvements of this kind are projected and the lands brought into market.

I might speak of the lands in Florida. The Committee on Public Lands will report a bill for the purpose of constructing a railroad there, extending from eighty to one hundred miles in length, where there are no settlements at all. In my own State, a railroad was constructed from Charleston to Hamburg, passing through a pine country, where the land was not worth more than from ten to fifty cents per acre. These lands rarely found a purchaser because they were valuable only as a range. Since the construction of that road, the lands have increased in value all along the line of the road from ten cents per acre to $2 50 and $5 00 per acre. It is not for the purpose of cultivation, but on account of the valuable timber lying along the road, and within the means of transporting the turpentine which these forests may afford, that the lands have risen so much in value. I undertake to say that in Florida, the description of lands of which I have been speaking, will remain unentered for one hundred years, unless some public improvement of this nature is projected and carried out. The Government, then, by making these donations, not only benefits the States or the railroad companies, but it also benefits itself, and it brings hundreds of thousands of dollars into your Treasury, which otherwise would not be derived from the lands. I suspect when you go to the West you will find in many places valuable and fertile lands, capable of producing wheat and corn and cotton, which are not entered at $1 25 per acre. And why? Because they have not facilities for market. The increase in value of land in the new States, consequent upon the construction of works of internal improvement, will be greater than in the old States. And why? Because the land of the new States is better, the soil more fertile, and consequently the production greater. It is a virgin soil—better than that of the Atlantic slope. I do not believe, from all my knowledge of geography, that there is a country upon the face of the earth that has such an extent of rich lands as the Mississippi valley—lands that will produce from a thousand to fifteen hundred pounds of cotton per acre, and from sixty to seventy bushels of corn. Give the cotton planter, or, for instance, give the farmer facilities for market, and is he not better able to pay $2 50 per acre than he would $1 25 for land which was forty or fifty miles from market, and where his corn would not be worth more than five or ten cents a bushel? The committee have assumed, in framing this bill, that, as a general rule, the lands lying within six miles on both sides of a railroad will certainly increase in value 100 per cent. I think I can bring some testimony here which might satisfy the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Toombs] that the construction of railroads increase the price of lands, and that greatly. I desire to state, (and if I do not state the fact correctly I hope the gentleman will correct me,) that in the Cherokee country, a region that twelve years ago had no facilities for market at all, their corn was not worth more than ten or twelve cents per bushel. Since that time they have constructed a road there; and in a conversation with an intelligent gentleman from that country a day or two ago, he said to me, that the lands had increased in value along the line of that road, for thirty miles on both sides, from 100 to 2,000 per cent. The committee assumed that land lying along the lines of these roads for six miles would certainly increase in value 100 per cent. In many instances, I have no doubt it will greatly exceed 100 per cent. and reach 500 per cent., and in some cases reach even 1,000 per cent. But six miles is assumed by the committee as the distance upon the average on either side, and that the increase in value will at least reach 100 per cent. I think the settlers in the new States ought to be liberally treated by this Government, for it requires a bold and enterprising man to give up and renounce all the conveniences and luxuries to be met with in the old States—to take leave of the home of his childhood, the friends of his youth and maturer years, to plunge into a western forest. All this requires courage and enterprise. These people deserve liberal treatment from the Government, and are especially entitled to receive it, when the Government does not injure itself or the other States of the Confederacy by extending it. They have but little capital there, and that is one reason why these donations should be made. When persons emigrate to the West or Southwest, as a general rule, all the capital they carry with them is their industry and enterprise. If you give them these lands so as to enable them to purchase iron for the construction of roads to be realized by a sale of the land, their industry will accomplish the balance, and they will benefit themselves and you.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a few remarks upon some of the details of this bill. It is provided that where the lands have been taken up within the six miles by entry, the company shall be allowed to go a distance of fifteen miles for the purpose of making up this quota. Well, that feature, I am free to acknowledge, did not meet my approbation fully, but I have waived any serious objection to it that would have led me to vote against the bill. The Government is amply compensated by allowing this extension from six to fifteen miles. In the first place, it is provided that the mails shall be carried over these roads, not at such prices as the company and the Government shall agree upon, but at such price as Congress shall fix—leaving it absolutely under the control of Congress. I suppose every gentleman on this floor familiar with the operations of the Post Office Department, knows the difficulties that are encountered now by the Postmaster General in making contracts for carrying the mails over the railroads of the country. There is scarcely a railroad company in the United States that does not avail itself of the opportunity presented, to extort from the Government larger compensation for the transportation of the mails than it is justly entitled to. But by this bill you reserve to yourselves the right to say at what price the mails shall be carried. That is one great point gained. The distance from St. Joseph to Hannibal is about two hundred miles, and the cost of transporting a heavy mail, being within the first class, over a railroad between those two places would be $300 per mile. There would be $60,000 paid out by the Government for the transportation of the mails over that road for one single year. That is more than it is worth, and Congress by adopting this policy can apply a corrective, and vote to these railroad companies a fair compensation. But there is another advantage to the Government in this bill which was not included in the Mississippi bill or in the first Illinois bill. It is this; the bill provides that the troops of the United States shall be transported over these roads throughout all time without charge; and also that munitions of war, and property of the United States of every description, shall be transported free of charge.

Now look at this Missouri road. It points in the very direction which you are compelled to go in traveling to Utah, New Mexico, Oregon, and California. And let me ask gentlemen, how long are you to have an Indian frontier between those remote States and Territories on the Pacific and the western border of Missouri? It will be, perhaps, a hundred years before the red man of the forest is exterminated, and during the whole of that time it will be necessary for the Government to keep up troops and stations upon the frontier to guard against the incursions which these Indians may make.

Now take the transportation of the mails and public property over these roads for fifty years time, and I venture the assertion that it will pay you an interest of thirty per cent. upon every dollar that you donate to these companies—perhaps an interest of fifty per cent. upon every dollar.

Here let me say, that all the bills that the Committee on Public Lands have determined to report to this House are bills of a national character—are bills which, if passed, will be of infinite service to this Government in time of peace, in the transportation of the mails, and in time of war, in the transportation of troops and the munitions of war.

Well, sir, there is another clause in this bill which was in none of the bills previously passed, and it is one which should commend itself to the favorable consideration of all the members of this House. It is this: the donation is made, not to the companies, but to the State, upon condition that the State shall faithfully appropriate the fund for the benefit of the particular companies. But the question may be started, how are you to guard against an abuse on the part of the State? It may be said, what if the State sells these lands and pockets the money. Well, we guard against that effectually. We provide in this bill that when the road has been surveyed, and the certificate forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Interior shall order that twenty miles of the road may be sold, and when that twenty miles has been sold, no other land along the route of the road shall be brought into market, or be subject to sale until the Secretary of the Interior has a certificate from the Governor of the State to which the donation is made, that twenty miles of that identical road have been completed. So that the only fraud—if the State was disposed to practice fraud, and I hardly suppose that any State of this Union would do it—that could be practiced, could not extend to a greater amount than one hundred and twenty sections of land.

This bill does not, as some of the bills formerly did, establish the relation of debtor and creditor between the State and this Government. In the bills passed some years ago, it was provided that if the State sold the lands and did not construct the road, she should refund to the Treasury of the United States whatever money she had received for it. But in this bill we guard against all possibility of fraud, by not allowing the State to bring into market more than twenty miles of land until twenty miles of the road are completed; then twenty miles more may be brought into market, and so on until the whole road is constructed.

Now, with all these advantages, what good objection can exist to making these donations? It does not cost you a farthing. It does not abstract any revenue from the Federal Treasury. It does not reduce the resources of the Treasury at all. All experience demonstrates that when you have constructed these railroads, the lands through which they pass will sell more readily for $2 50 an acre than they will for $1 25 per acre without the railroads. With this view of the case—the constitutional difficulties being removed—looking to the great advantage which you can do to these States, and to the inhabitants of these States—looking to the immense boon that you can give to them without impoverishing yourselves—I ask, what good reason can be given for not passing the bill and making the donation?

We ask that the bill shall be put upon its passage now, without going to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Those members who are at all familiar with proceedings here know, if I may be allowed to apply a quotation that is used upon more solemn occasions, that when a bill is sent from this House to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, unless it is a universal favorite or an appropriation bill, it has gone to "that undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler ever returns." Every member who has had any experience here knows this to be the fact.

I have now, I believe, presented most of the views of this matter that I desired to present, and all I have to say in conclusion is, that I trust the House will deal liberally and generously towards our fair daughters, of the West, and I have no doubt that we shall never have cause to be ashamed of or to repudiate them.

Mr. WELCH. Would it be in order to offer an amendment to the bill now?

The SPEAKER. It would not, as there is an amendment to an amendment already pending.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suppose it would be in order to move to amend by way of substitute?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it would not.

Mr. WELCH. Then I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I send to the desk, and which I design to offer at the proper time.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad from the said city of St. Louis, by way of the city of Cincinnati, and through the county of Washington, in the State of Ohio, to Three Forks, or some other point in the State of Virginia, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, there be and is hereby granted to each of the States through which the same shall be located, to wit: the States of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and Virginia, the right of way for the same, and also six sections of the public lands belonging to the United States, and not otherwise appropriated or pledged, for each and every mile in length of such road, which shall be located in each of said States respectively, to be selected by the Governor of each State, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and to be disposed of by the Legislatures respectively of said States, as provided in the fifth and seventh sections of this act, and the proceeds to be applied to aid in the construction of said road from St. Louis in this section mentioned; which road, as well as the dividends accruing to said States on stock therein, shall be subject to all the provisions aforesaid respecting said roads through the State of Missouri.

[A message was here received from the Senate, announcing the passage of sundry bills by that body.]

Mr. WELCH. I am in favor of this bill, and will vote for it whether my amendment be adopted or not.

Mr. FOWLER, (interposing.) I ask the gentleman to give way for a moment, in order to allow me to give notice of an amendment, which I propose to offer as soon as I can have an opportunity. I desire to give that notice now, because I do not know that I shall have another opportunity. I ask that it be read for information.

The amendment was then read for information by the Clerk, as follows:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That there shall be granted to the States named in this section, for purposes of education and of internal improvement, so much of the public domain as is specified for each: that is, to the State of Maine, five hundred and eighty-three thousand and forty acres; to the State of New Hampshire, three hundred and seventeen thousand seven hundred and sixty acres; to the State of Vermont, three hundred and thirteen thousand nine hundred and twenty acres; to the State of Massachusetts, nine hundred and ninety-four thousand two hundred and forty acres; to the State of Rhode Island, one hundred and forty-seven thousand five hundred and twenty acres; to the State of Connecticut, three hundred and seventy thousand five hundred and sixty acres; to the State of New York, three millions ninety-seven thousand two hundred and eighty acres; to the State of New Jersey, four hundred and eighty-nine thousand two hundred and eighty acres; to the State of Pennsylvania, two millions three hundred and eleven thousand six hundred and eighty acres; to the State of Delaware, ninety thousand five hundred and sixty acres; to the State of Maryland, five hundred and forty-six thousand eight hundred and eighty acres; to the State of Virginia, one million two hundred and thirty-one thousand six hundred and eighty acres; to the State of North Carolina, seven hundred and fifty-three thousand two hundred and eighty acres; to the State of South Carolina, five hundred and fourteen thousand two hundred and forty acres; to the State of Georgia, seven hundred and fifty-three thousand two hundred and eighty acres; to the State of Tennessee, nine hundred and six thousand five hundred and sixty acres; and to the State of Kentucky, eight hundred and ninety-seven thousand nine hundred and twenty acres; which lands so granted shall be located in parcels conformably to sectional divisions and sub-divisions of not less than three hundred and twenty acres in any one location, if so much can be had, on any public land, except such to which a right of preemption may have attached, or such as is or may be reserved from sale by any law of Congress or proclamation of the President of the United States, which said locations may be made at any time after the lands shall have been surveyed according to existing laws; and it shall be lawful for the Governors of said States respectively, to appoint one or more agents to locate the lands granted as aforesaid, for the State of which he is the Governor. Such agents, in making their locations, shall be governed by such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may, from time to time, prescribe; and when the lands for each State have been located and selected, patents therefor shall be issued to the State entitled to the same.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the lands granted to the States according to the preceding section, shall be disposed of by said States respectively, in such manner as their respective Legislatures may direct: Provided, however, That no portion of said lands shall be sold at less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre, until otherwise authorized by a law of the United States, and the net proceeds of the sales of said lands shall be faithfully applied to objects of internal improvement, or to purposes of education, or to both, as the legislatures of the States respectively owning the lands granted may direct: Provided, further, That all roads, railways, bridges, canals, and water-courses which shall be exclusively built, constructed, or improved by the funds arising from the disposition of said lands, shall be free for the transportation of the United States mail and munitions of war, and for the passage of their troops, without the payment of any toll whatever.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the agents aforesaid, or any one of them, in selecting lands and making locations for his State, to select and locate any of the alternate sections or any part thereof which may have been or may hereafter be reserved from sale by any act of Congress granting lands in aid of the construction of any railroad or canal whatever: Provided, however, That in locating any such section or part of section, the State for whose benefit it may be selected and located shall be charged with, and the quantity of land granted to such State shall be diminished by double the quantity of acres contained in the reserved section or part of section thus selected and located. Nothing in the three last sections contained shall authorize the location of any lands granted by them or either of them, within the limits of the State of California or the Territories of New Mexico, Utah, or Oregon.

Mr. F. said; I hope to have an opportunity to offer this amendment, when I will endeavor to show the justice and propriety of it.

Mr. WELCH. I should be glad to have the attention of the House for a short time; and I will promise to occupy only a few moments in explanation of the amendment which I have sent to the Chair.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not yet expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman would as lief speak in the morning hour to-morrow, I ask him to give way in order to allow me to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WELCH. If I can have the opportunity to speak at another time I have no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. The morning hour will expire in a few moments. I ask, therefore, that the gentlemen from Ohio will give way for me to move to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table. He will then be entitled to the floor when the business comes up to-morrow morning.

Mr. WELCH. I will give way with that understanding.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order.

The SPEAKER. That motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALL. I object to it.

Mr. HOUSTON. The morning hour having not yet expired, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELCH] gives way in order for me to make that motion, and I ask the Chair if the motion is not in order? I do not propose to make it under the rule. I take it for granted that under the rule it is always in order to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It would be competent for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELCH] to make that motion; and the Chair thinks it would be in order for him to yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] to make the same motion.

Mr. HALL. If the gentleman from Ohio yields the floor for that purpose, I ask whether he does not yield the floor altogether?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, under the rule, he does lose it altogether.

Mr. HOUSTON. If that is the effect of the motion, I will not take the floor from the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Ohio cannot yield the floor for that purpose, unless he yields it altogether.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the practice of the House is the other way, but as the morning hour has so nearly expired, I will not consume time in the matter.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to consume the time of the House for more than a few minutes for the purpose of explaining the amendment which I have sent to the Chair, because I suppose, from the reading of it at the Clerk's desk, the House have become possessed of the facts.

The bill before the House proposes a grant of lands to aid in the construction of two railroads in the State of Missouri. The amendment which I have proposed provides for taking up the one of these roads which commences at St. Louis and runs to some indefinite terminus upon the western boundary of the State of Missouri, and to continue it through the States of Illinois, Indiana, a part of Ohio, to Cincinnati, and thence to the Ohio river, at a point somewhere on the line of Washington county, at or near the town of Marietta; from thence to the Three Forks, or some other point on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, in the State of Virginia, thus connecting the two roads, so that there shall be a continuous line of railroads from the city of Baltimore to the extreme western line of the State of Missouri. That is the character of the amendment which I propose, or at least that is the road to aid in the construction of which this amendment is intended.

It is to carry out the principles of the bill, as applied to Missouri railroads, so far as they are applicable to this proposed road, through Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, and a part of Virginia. That is, it proposes that there shall be granted to each of these States, in the first place, the right of way through the public domain through which the proposed road is to be located; and in the next place, it proposes not to give alternate sections, because there is but a small quantity of the public lands through which it passes, nearly all having been sold. It proposes, therefore, that there shall be granted to each of the States through which it passes, respectively, as much of the public lands for every mile of the road within her limits as shall be equal in amount to the alternate sections which it is proposed to grant to the Missouri roads by the bill now under consideration; that is, six square miles or sections to every mile in length of the road.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interrupting.) I desire to inquire of the Speaker whether the morning hour has yet expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. I feel called on by a sense of duty, in relation to other measures before the House, to move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

KOSSUTH'S LETTER OF THANKS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is on the motion to print the communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter of thanks from Louis Kossuth to the Government and Congress of the United States, upon which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will it be in order for me to move to suspend the rules, and go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order?

Mr. EVANS. I do not wish to lose the floor upon this question. I am willing that the motion shall be made.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I submit that motion. The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. OLDS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The special order before the committee is joint resolution No. 1, explanatory of the act approved September 28, 1850, granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been in the military service of the United States.

When the committee rose, the question pending was on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BELL.] to add two additional sections to the bill—to come in at the end of the second section—upon which question tellers had been ordered.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

1. That the provisions of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," passed September 28, 1850, be and are hereby intended to and for the service of any non commissioned officer, musician, or private, who engaged to serve for a definite or indefinite period of time, and actually did serve some time, though less than thirty days in any of said wars enumerated in the first section of said act, so as to allow to such person or persons entitled thereto forty acres.

2. That in cases where there is no widow or minor child or children entitled under the provisions of said act, then the heirs at law and next of kin shall be entitled to receive the same quantity of land that such deceased commissioned officer, musician, or private, would have received had he been living at the passage of said act.

3. That in the event of the death of such non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, who shall have made application for bounty land under the provisions of said act, during the pendency of such application, any warrant issued in the name of any such deceased applicant, such warrant so issued shall not become void, but shall inure to and for the benefit of those entitled thereto, the same as if such officer or soldier had been deceased at the passage of said act.

Messrs. CHANDLER and BRECKENRIDGE were appointed tellers.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. BELL, and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes 66.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. May I inquire at what point of the bill we now are?

The CHAIRMAN. The third section of the bill will be read, and then that section will be open to amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL. I wish to offer the amendment I hold in my hand, so that it may come in as an additional section at the end of the second section of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Do I understand that the first and second sections have been stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. The first section was first stricken out; and then the second section was stricken out, and the second section of the bill reported by the select committee was inserted in its stead.

Mr. MARSHALL. So I understand, and that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BELL] was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not agreed to, as an additional section.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is at this point, then, that I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the table.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

If any officer or soldier who would, if living, have been entitled to the benefit of the act of Congress, passed September 28, 1850, shall have died leaving no widow surviving him, the child or children of such officer or soldier shall be entitled to the benefit of said act; and if there are no children living, then the father or mother of such officer or soldier shall be entitled, or in default of father or mother, the right shall descend to the brothers and sisters of such officer or soldier in a full manner as though said soldier or officer had himself received the bounty, any act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is proper that I should state frankly to the committee my object in offering this amendment. It is to extend the sphere of operation of the principle of the act of September 28, 1850. That act is imperfect, because its friends in the Thirty-first Congress were compelled to take what they could obtain. They did not obtain much that they would have desired. I bring forward this proposition to test the representation from the country as to the propriety of extending the provisions of that act so as to embrace the heirs of the deceased soldier. It has been decided by the Department of the Interior that if a party has applied to the Pension Bureau for his bounty land—has filed his papers and satisfactory evidence to sustain the application—and then dies prior to the issue of the warrant, a new application must be made on the part of his widow, as the original beneficiary under that law, for that by death his right has lapsed. If he has left children, some of whom are minors and some adults, the minors only will take, and a new application must be made in their name to the exclusion of the adults. I regard this as utterly indefensible in point of policy, or even justice. If the soldier has left no widow or minor children, there is no one who, under this construction, can take, even though the soldier was living when the act of 1850 passed, and under its provisions prepared, presented, and proved his claim prior to his death.

Mr. Chairman, I have never been able to comprehend the soundness of that philosophy which confines the right to take, by descent, to the minor children of the soldier. The falsity of the principle may be easily illustrated by a case. I will suppose two men from the same vicinity to have volunteered in 1812. They march to the seat of war in the same company. One is married, the other single. The married man leaves a wife and children behind, and in actual battle he perishes in the service. His wife dies, and his orphans are early turned upon the cold charities of the world, to drift through life. Wanting education, their lot has been lowly, and they have eaten the bread of poverty all their days. Now, the single man shall be supposed to have survived the war. He returned to his home; and, followed by the plaudits of his neighbors, he entered upon the successful pursuit of business, acquired wealth, married in the maturity of life, and then died, leaving minor children, upon whom is cast a large and valuable patrimony. A grateful country determines to testify its sense of the patriotism of these soldiers by passing the bounty land law, and the act of 1850 says to the children of the one, "It is true you are poor; it is true your father died in the glorious conflict with our foe; it is true that we now behold you in want; but you are over twenty-one years of age, and we can do nothing for you. Turn now to regard that youth who possesses fortune and station, and revels in luxury. On him we shall bestow our benefaction, and our only reason is that he is not twenty-one years of age." Is there any sound philosophy in the reason? Is the policy sound that is based upon such an unsound reason? The law of this country should be equal in its application to whatever class it touches.

This, I know, is considered a gratuity; but if we mean to extend a gratuity as the meed of honorable and patriotic service, let it extend to all who performed the service. If you would give me land because I fought your battles, give it to my comrade also, who gloriously perished in the fight. If he left children to inherit his fame, why make a distinction between them which he never would have made, and which the whole scope and tendency of our institutions have repudiated? The distinction has never been satisfactory to my mind. I imagine it was accidental; and I think any other supposition would detract from the title of Congress to intelligence. My amendment rectifies this defect, by casting the descent upon the children alike, whether they are minors or adults.

But it goes further. There were very many men who served in the war, and have died, who never were married, and who left no children surviving. These men may have left a widowed mother, or a decrepit father, or brothers and sisters. Shall the single men who perished in battle, or who served in your wars, receive no testimonial of the country's gratitude? Sir, it is not for the value of the land that these grants are prized so dearly by the people. Your forty acres are scarcely worth thirty dollars. They are prized because the benefaction marks your sense of the patriotic service of the deceased. And, surely, the widowed mother whose gallant son has fallen for his country, will wonder that his services sleep in oblivion when you are bestowing largesses for patriotism upon his more fortunate comrades and their children.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not include heirs generally, because I suppose it will be necessary, as a matter of convenience in applying the act, to stop before we branch into distant collaterals. I have drawn the amendment so as to embrace "brothers and sisters" of the soldier, because existing laws have extended the line of descent that far in the case of volunteers and regulars who served in the Mexican war. That is the precedent I have followed, and I have stopped where existing laws stop. I think the soldiers of 1812, and of the wars to which this act refers, should be placed on a footing as nearly equal as practicable to the soldier of later days.

I do not propose to detain the committee by any remarks impertinent to the amendment I have proposed. I trust that the vote upon it will be a test vote—that we shall understand by it whether this committee will extend this bounty land law at all, and that while we provide for those who were deceased at the time of the passage of the act, we at the same time will indicate by our vote the proper limitation upon the extension of that act.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] certainly, at first blush, appears rather reasonable than otherwise. But in practice it will be found wholly impracticable to mete out the benefits of that law to the heirs-at-law of the persons who are intended to be the beneficiaries of it. Sir, what is the policy of our pension laws where a soldier is killed in actual battle? There the pension of half pay for five years is limited to such of his children as shall be under sixteen years of age at the time of his death, or to his widow, if he leaves one. It does not include all the minors. The law of 1850 extends its benefits first to the widow and then to the minor children. Suppose you give it to the brothers and sisters of the deceased soldiers, who, if living, would be entitled to its benefits. Perhaps there are ten of these brothers and sisters, and two or three of them have died leaving some five or six or more children each. They must prove, in order to get a forty-acre land warrant, all the heirs entitled under the law—all the brothers and sisters, and all the children of such as are dead. I think this would be impracticable, living, as many of them would be, in different parts of the country, and even when they should have established their relationship and their title to a warrant for forty, eighty, or even one hundred and sixty acres of land, it would not be worth the trouble and expense incurred in getting it.

Mr. MARSHALL, (interrupting.) Does not the gentleman perceive that my amendment does not propose to descend beyond brothers and sisters? As a matter of course, if any of them have died, leaving children, those children being in a collateral line, further removed, would be cut off. We must stop somewhere.

Mr. JONES. Then the gentleman's amendment is unjust, and should be rejected on that ground. According to that amendment, one brother who happens to live will be entitled to the benefits, while another who dies, leaving a number of minor children unable to support themselves, will not have any of the benefits of this law which you intend for the brothers and sisters of the soldiers who have died before they made application for their warrants. Sir, I cannot see the necessity or propriety of extending this law. Perhaps the brothers of these men who died were in the service and received the benefits of the law on their own account.

So far as the heirs are concerned, I think the law of 1850 extends sufficiently far, and I hope the House will vote down the amendment. I would further say, that I think it would be sound policy in us to rise and report this bill, and let it lay upon the table until the Senate shall have disposed of the House amendment, or ask a committee of conference, when the whole subject will be disposed of in that manner, and, perhaps, satisfactorily to a majority of each House.

Mr. MEADE. Is it in order to propose an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL?]

The CHAIRMAN. It will be in order.

Mr. MEADE. I propose, then, as an amendment to add after the word "died" in the third line, the words "after the passage of the said act." I understand the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] goes to the extent of embracing the heirs generally of all soldiers in the war of 1812, and in every war we have had since the Revolution, up to the present time. The probability, then, is that for every man enlisted during these wars, there will be a warrant for forty, or one hundred and sixty acres of land, to be taken out of the public domain. The bill of 1850 limits these warrants to certain classes of soldiers; in the first place to those who may be living; in the second place to those who have died leaving widows only, or infant children. In that way, probably no more than one fourth of the whole number of soldiers who enlisted in these wars will receive these bounty lands. Now if this House is willing to grant, in addition to the ten or fifteen millions of acres of public land already granted to the soldiers, some thirty or forty millions more, then I will adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL.]

But I thought there was an amendment necessary to the original bill which was passed in 1850, so as to secure to the heirs generally of those soldiers who were living at the passage of that act, these bounty lands, in case they shall have failed to secure their warrants before their death. The act of 1850 gave to those soldiers who were then living, a vested right; and in case they were dead, or should be so unfortunate as to die previous to the issuing of their warrants, I think it right that those lands should have descended to their heirs generally, in case they left neither a widow nor an infant child. I understand that the Secretary of the Interior has given a most extraordinary construction to that act, to the effect that if a soldier makes his application, and dies before his warrant may issue—though his death may have preceded the issuing of the warrant only twenty-four hours—the warrant cannot descend to his heirs; a decision involving the difficulty hereafter of establishing the fact—whenever a soldier shall die, and there shall be found among his papers afterwards a warrant issued from the Pension Office—that the death took place subsequent to the issuing of the warrant. For, according to the construction placed upon the law by the Secretary of the Interior, the warrant may have issued from his office the day after the soldier died, when, of course, he knew nothing about his death. This construction involves great difficulty practically, which ought to be got rid of by an act declaratory of the act of 1850. The best mode of getting rid of it, is to adopt the amendment which I have proposed, by which all those warrants issued to soldiers who have died since the passage of 1850, shall be regarded as vested estate in the soldier, and to descend as any other property to which he may be entitled.

Mr. MARSHALL. In my opinion, the adoption of the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEADE] would obstruct rather than facilitate the execution of the law, should my amendment be accepted by the committee. If you limit the class to be provided for by the amendment to those who have died "since the passage of the act," you at once introduce several discrepancies into the statute which will give occasion for future legislation, besides working immediate injury. For instance: if you say that the act shall in the first place be confined to those who were living at the date of the act of 1850—then I remark, of those it will apply only to such as have made out their claim under the act. Now, take a case for illustration. Take two soldiers, of whom one died the day before the passage of the act of 1850; the other the day after. They were equally meritorious. Would you cut off the children of the one and grant to the children of the other? There is no propriety in this. I was entirely frank in my remarks when presenting my amendment to your consideration. If the gentleman feels disposed to stop this right in the ascending and descending line from the soldier, he may confine it to the children, or he may confine it to the mother and the father, excluding the collaterals entirely. With the approbation of the House they may strike off brothers and sisters, though I shall vote against such a motion. They may strike off the father and mother, but against that I shall also vote. I am not in favor of extending it to the heirs at law generally. I want the bill to pass, and I do not want it smothered by amendments which will tend to kill it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I first want to ask if the law of descent in Kentucky is, if a man die leaving no children, but brothers and sisters, and some of his brothers and sisters also die leaving children, whether the children of the deceased brothers or sisters do not come in as heirs?

Mr. MARSHALL. That depends on circumstances.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. MEADE, and it was rejected—there being upon a division 23 ayes—noes not counted.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. I propose to offer the following proviso to the amendment:

Provided, If any person entitled to bounty land under the act of September 28, 1850, shall have died after his application and completion of proof, the certificate of land which may issue on such application shall descend to his heirs and legal representatives generally.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. The object of my amendment is of a more limited nature than some of those which have been offered for the purpose of testing the sense of the House. I desire, if I can have the attention of the Committee, to attract their notice to a given state of facts. Here is a young man, for instance, who was entitled to bounty land—who has made his application, made his proof, and who has been to the expense of procuring his papers and filing them in the Department, but owing to the delay incident to the great number of applications has not yet received his warrant. In the meantime he has died. The Department has no knowledge officially of that death and in due time they take up the application, consider it, and issue his warrant. In such a case the warrant goes into the hands of the agent. What shall be its effect? He has by that act established an inchoate title. If he has survived a sufficient length of time to have obtained his certificate, located his land, and received his patent for it, then his right is perfect, and it will descend to his heirs. The question I wish to submit is, that after a man has gone to the extent of making his proof and having his certificate issued, and in the meantime dies, whether in that limited class of cases this House will not think that his heirs shall be entitled to the benefit of it. This is much more limited than the rule that would allow them to come in after his death, and before any preliminary steps had been taken. I will state why my attention has been particularly called to this state of facts. A number of applications have passed through my hands to the Commissioner of Pensions, as I presume there has through the hands of every member upon this floor. I find in my hands applications from persons that were personally known to myself, who have died, and their heirs are now living. Now, where there is an inchoate right of title by the act itself, it seems to me to be just and fair that his heirs, his minor children if he has any, if not—the young men—collaterals should have the benefit of the warrant. I hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. WHITE, of Alabama. In the event of the estate being insolvent, to whom would the benefits of the bounty accrue—to the heirs, or the creditors of the soldier?

Mr. FULLER. By my amendment it would be regulated by the laws of descent of the State where the applicant resided.

Mr. WHITE. There would be an incompatibility in the amendment. Now the heirs of an individual and his legal representatives are entirely different questions; but the laws of descent—

Mr. FULLER. If the gentleman will allow me one word. Suppose in such a case there were a number of heirs—brothers and sisters—among whom to divide the land. It might be difficult to sell the warrant and divide the money. That would have to be done through the legal representatives.

Mr. WHITE. There would be no difficulty whatever in the event the amendment only extended to the heirs-at-law; but I understand the amendment of the gentleman to be, that it shall descend to the heirs at law and to the legal representatives. According to the law of the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and indeed of every other State, the claim of the creditor always has precedence of the claim of the heir. Then, under the amendment the gentleman proposes, the creditor, through the representative, would take the entire benefit of the law.

Mr. FULLER. If the gentleman will allow me one moment, I will modify my proposition by striking out the words "and legal heirs generally," so that it will be a benefit to the heirs.

Mr. WHITE. Then it will be a benefit to the heirs.

While I am upon the floor, I will make one or two remarks in reference to the amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL.] Now, sir, to my mind the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky has a decided preference to any other amendment which has been proposed to this part of the bill. And why? What is the object of the law giving bounty land to the soldier? It is to reward him. For what? Why, for services done to his country. He has merited the gratitude and bounty of the Government whenever he has performed service, and I contend that he should never be excluded from the benefit of a law passed through the manifest gratitude of the country to him, unless it be by some fault of his own. Now, unless we can say the fact of a man's having died is to be attributed to him as a fault—unless we can say that that which is a misfortune shall be visited upon him as an iniquity—it seems to me that the intelligence of this House would grant to him, as nearly as may be done after his death, the benefit of this law. How is it to be done? It is to be done in the mode indicated by nature, and which has been followed out by our law—that is, to give the benefits of the law to those to whom he would have probably given it—to those descended from him—in the event that his right had become perfect by making his application under the act of 1850. Well, if we are not to exclude the soldier on account of his having died, why the warrant must descend to some one. Shall it descend generally, or shall it descend to a particular class of persons? I say that it should descend, in accordance with the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, to certain classes, and this meets the objection which was made by the gentleman from Tennessee, and it struck me that he would see it in his own argument. This is not a descent to the heirs generally, but it is a descent in the first instance to the children generally of the soldier. In the next instance, it is to descend to the father or to the mother. In the next, to the brothers and sisters. Now, there can be no difficulty whatever in carrying out this law, and the impracticability of the thing, which struck the gentleman as an insuperable difficulty, is nothing but an impracticability which appertains in all cases of descent. It belongs to our laws.

The question was taken upon Mr. FULLER's amendment, and it was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. MARSHALL.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. I would ask the gentleman whether the land would pass to the brothers and sisters of a half-breed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would remind gentlemen that debate is out of order?

Mr. DUNHAM. Can I move an amendment now?

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to amend after the House has divided.

Tellers were called for and ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. MARSHALL's amendment, (Messrs. MOLONY and FOWLER acting as tellers,) and resulted—ayes 91, noes 34.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I propose to add as an additional section to the one which has now been adopted, the fifth section of the bill reported by the select committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is so long since we have considered this bill in committee that other gentlemen seem to be in the same situation with myself, and do not know which section of the bill is under consideration, or what sections have been adopted. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The joint resolution of the House is under consideration. At the former sitting, the first section had been stricken out; then the second section and the second section of the bill reported by the select committee was substituted. They have now inserted, as an additional amendment, the section proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL.] The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNHAM] now proposes to amend by adding as an additional section, the fifth section of the bill proposed by the select committee, which will be read by the Clerk, as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That where any company, battalion, or regiment, in an organized form, marched more than twenty miles to the place where they were mustered into the service of the United States, or were discharged more than twenty miles from the place where such company, battalion, or regiment was organized, in all such cases, in computing the length of service of the officers and soldiers of any such company, battalion, or regiment, with a view to determine the quantity of land any officer or soldier is entitled to under said act, approved twenty-eighth of September, eighteen hundred and fifty, there shall be allowed one day for every twenty miles from the place where the company, battalion, or regiment was organized, to the place where the same was mustered into the service of the United States; and also one day for every twenty miles from the place where such company, battalion, or regiment was discharged, to the place where it was organized, and from whence it marched to enter the service.

Mr. DUNHAM. It will be seen the object of the section is to obviate the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FULLER.] The officers have construed the bounty land law to mean, that in case of the death of the soldier after having made his application and before the warrant has been issued, the warrant shall not issue upon such application. If the application has been made by the soldier, then the widow, if there is one, must come in and make a new application; or, if the widow has made the application, the warrant cannot issue upon that application, but a new application must be made in order to get a warrant for the children. The object of this section is to remedy that difficulty, and authorize the Department to issue the warrants to the parties entitled upon the application which may have been filed by the original party, upon proof, as a matter of course, of the heirship. They have also construed that law to mean, in a case where the warrant has actually issued and has not been located, and the patent has not been issued, if the warrantee is dead, the title does not pass to his representatives. This section also provides, instead of such a construction as this, that they shall issue a patent to the party entitled if the soldier made the application, and instead of the warrant being returned and a new application being made out for the widow, the widow herself shall come on and make the location, or the children may go on and perfect the title by taking out the patent upon the warrant already issued. I think there is no doubt but what this section ought to be adopted, and I think it comes in very appropriately after the one offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] and which has been adopted. If the House are disposed to carry out the principle laid down in adopting the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, they must adopt the amendment I propose, for this follows the original bill giving the warrant to the widow, and in case of the death of the widow, to the minor children, but it goes no further. In order to make the bill consistent, it is necessary that the same amendment which the gentleman offers should be made to this section, and which I shall leave him to offer.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I see the inconsistency, and I will move to amend the amendment, so as to make it consistent. I propose, then, to amend the amendment by striking out in the seventh and tenth lines the words "minor heirs" and inserting "his children, or in case there are no children, then to his father or mother, or in default of these, to his brothers and sisters." I offer it in compliance with the suggestions of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM,] that it is necessary in order to make the section he proposes consistent with the section which the committee has just adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the reading of the 40th rule of the House, and let gentlemen determine how many are interested in this bill by their fathers or brothers.

The rule was then read, as follows:

"No member shall vote on any question in the event of which he is immediately and particularly interested, or in any case where he was not within the bar of the House when the question was put. And when any member shall ask leave to vote, the Speaker shall propound to him the question, 'Were you within the bar when your name was called?'"

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a point of order. I voted in the affirmative. I am directly interested, and I do not like to vote in violation of the rules of the House. I have already given my vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] and should like to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late for the gentleman to change his vote.

The question was then taken upon the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. MARSHALL.

[MR. DARBY QUALIFIED.]

At this point of the proceedings, Mr. DARBY, of Missouri, who had been unable to take his seat in consequence of severe indisposition, was here brought into the Hall in a chair, and had the usual oath to support the Constitution of the United States administered to him by the Speaker.

Mr. MEADE. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, to come in at the end of the amendment which has just been adopted on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment has not yet been agreed to. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM.]

Mr. MEADE then moved to amend Mr. DUNHAM's amendment, by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That in no case shall a collateral relation be entitled, where there are any descendants of such soldier living.

Mr. M. said: That amendment would more properly belong at the end of the amendment which has just been adopted, and which was proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from Kentucky did not probably effect his own object by that amendment. He certainly did not intend to exclude the grand-children of the soldier, for the benefit of his brothers and sisters. The amendment proposed by the gentleman, and which has been adopted, gives the land, in case there are no children, to the father and mother, and if there is no father and mother, then to the brothers and sisters. But if the soldier has a dozen grand-children, they receive nothing.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, (interrupting.) I ask the gentleman if it has not been repeatedly decided that grand-children come in under the term "children."

Mr. MEADE. It may be so in Kentucky, but I assure the gentleman it is not so throughout the United States. I know very well it has been decided that where a testator leaves property to his children, it is to be divided between the children and not the grand-children. I think that if the committee intend finally to adopt that clause, it should be amended in such a way as to secure the land to the descendants of the soldier instead of to the collateral heirs. I have offered the amendment in order to draw the attention of the committee to the injustice that would be done if the bill should pass in its present shape, and I now withdraw the amendment in the hope that the alteration will hereafter be made.

There being no objection, the amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. BRENTON moved to amend Mr. DUNHAM's amendment by striking out the word "explanatory" in the third line, and inserting the word "amendatory" in lieu thereof.

Mr. B. said: I am decidedly in favor of the amendment proposed by my colleague, but I think it does not meet the case that he intends to provide for, and I offer this amendment merely for the purpose of making a suggestion to him. I suggest to him that he should insert after the words "the passage of this act," these words, "and shall have made his application."

The object of my colleague, as I understand it, is to meet a case of this sort, where the soldier having made his application, and having died before the issue of the warrant, his widow and children have to make a new application. Now, in order to meet that case fully, the amendment I have suggested will have to be adopted.

I am inclined also to think that when the different amendments which have been adopted shall be put together, we shall find a mass of confusion, of which some of us will perhaps be ashamed. I am clearly of the opinion that in the present state of the question—this whole subject having been heretofore discussed here for days—the true policy for this committee to pursue is to lay this bill aside, and await the action of the Senate upon the measure which has already been sent from this House. I can see no necessity for spending time in going over and over the same ground, when this whole question must come up again hereafter. The committee had better rise, lay this subject upon the table, and await the action of the Senate on the other bill. We shall then know where we are, and be able to act understandingly.

Mr. B. then, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. BELL moved to amend Mr. DUNHAM's amendment by striking out all after the words "be it enacted," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

That in the event of the death of a commissioned officer, musician, or private, who shall have made application for bounty land under the provisions of said act, during the pendency of such application, any warrant issued in the name of any such deceased applicant, such warrant so issued shall not become void, but shall inure to and for the benefit of those entitled thereto, the same as if such officer or soldier had been deceased at the passage of said act.

Mr. B. said: I will simply state to the committee that that amendment is designed to meet the views of the Secretary of the Interior, expressed in a letter which I have received from him. It provides that in the event of the death of an applicant during the pendency of his application, the warrant issued in the name of said applicant shall inure to the benefit of those entitled thereto; it does not name any particular class of heirs, but leaves that dependent on the law. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNHAM]—who does not seem to be in his seat—will see the propriety of adopting this as a substitute for his amendment.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The question now being upon the amendment as amended,

Mr. BELL. Will the Chair state the question as it now stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, as an addition to the fifth section of the bill reported by the select committee as amended on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BELL.]

Mr. BELL. My motion was to strike out all after the enacting clause in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM.]

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair did not understand the motion of the gentleman. The question then is upon the amendment as amended—being, in fact, the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BELL] as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM.]

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GAYLORD. Is there a third section to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. There is, but it has not yet been reported.

Mr. GAYLORD. I move to strike out the third section of the bill before the House, and to insert the fourth section of the Senate bill.

The third section was then reported, as follows:

Sec. 3. *And be it further resolved, That the said officers, whether in or out of office at the time of the passage of this act, or their legal or personal representatives in case of their death, shall be entitled to receive from the Treasury of the United States, for similar services heretofore performed in such cases, an amount equal to the compensation provided for by the first section of this act, after deducting the amount already received by such officers under the act entitled "An act to require the holders of military land warrants to compensate the land officers of the United States for services in relation to the location of those warrants," approved May 17, 1848: *Provided, That no register or receiver shall receive any compensation out of the Treasury of the United States for past services, who has charged and received illegal or exorbitant fees for the location of such warrants.

The fourth section of the Senate bill, which it was proposed to substitute for the above, was then read by the Clerk, as follows:

Sec. 4. *And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the militia or volunteers or State troops of any State or Territory were called into military service, and whose services have been paid by the United States subsequent to the 18th of June, 1812, the officers and soldiers of such militia, volunteers, or troops, shall be entitled to all the benefits of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850, and shall receive lands for their services according to the provisions of said act, upon proof of length of service as therein required; and that the last proviso of the ninth section of the act of the 11th of February, 1847, be and the same is hereby repealed: *Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize bounty land to those who have heretofore received or become entitled to the same.

Mr. LANE. I propose to amend the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman propose to amend the portion to be stricken out, or that to be inserted?

Mr. LANE. To that to be inserted I move the following:

Provided, further, That all persons who performed military service in defence of the citizens of the Territory of Oregon against the Cayuse Indians, in what is commonly known as the "Cayuse war" of 1847 and 1848, are hereby held and declared to have been in the service of the United States for all the purposes of this act, and the act to which this is an amendment, and entitled accordingly.

And it is further provided, That all persons entitled to bounty land warrants under the provisions of this act, or of the act to which this is an amendment, and who may be residents of said Territory of Oregon at the date of the passage of this act, shall be entitled and permitted to locate their warrants upon any unclaimed lands in said Territory, and that upon such survey and location patent shall issue therefor as in other cases.

Mr. L. said: I offer this amendment, because I think it ought to be adopted—because I think the people of Oregon have claims upon this Government which can only be paid by the adoption of such a provision as I have proposed to this bill. There is no class of cases, in my judgment, more meritorious than this. At a time when the Territory of Oregon had not more than nine hundred voters, and when they could get no assistance from the Government of the United States; when there had been no troops sent there, and before the laws of the country extended over them, the Indians made war upon that country. They commenced by killing Dr. Whitcomb, his wife, and all about him, and threatened, by a union of the tribes in that vicinity, to overrun the entire settlements and destroy them. It was thought necessary by the provisional government to call out the people of that Territory. They turned out almost to a man, and endured all the hardships of a service of nearly nine months, without provisions, without supplies, without a commissary, without a quartermaster, without clothing, and without arms; every one taking up such arms as he could get hold of, for the purpose of defending his country, and saving the lives of the women and children in that country. They performed a harder service than any volunteers performed in the service of this country since the war of the Revolution. But there is no law giving them a bounty for that service. They are justly entitled to it. I think, if this House will ever inquire into this case, and understand it—if they will look at the condition that country was in at the time to which I allude, and the good conduct of the people in defending themselves—if they could know of the sufferings and hardships that people endured, they would readily, I have no doubt, provide for placing them upon the same footing with the other volunteers who have served their country. Is there any good reason why volunteers, serving in a proper and just war for avenging the murders committed upon the people of Oregon, should not be provided for the same as the volunteers serving in any other portion of the country? I have no doubt about this defence; and if the House will understand it—if they will understand the nature of the war and the service performed by the people of Oregon—I believe there is no member here who would hesitate to make this provision. The whole force mustered into the service did not exceed five hundred men, and I think less than that. Now, all we ask is, that they may be entitled to the same amount of land to which other people are entitled who have acted as soldiers in the service of the country. We ask, also, that they may have the privilege of locating their lands in the Territory of Oregon. We do not ask that they may be allowed to come here, but that they may be allowed just what they are entitled to, and the privilege of locating their lands in the Territory of Oregon.

Mr. COBB. I want to ask the gentleman a question, and it is this: Are the people which the gentleman desires to make provision for, citizens of Oregon?

Mr. LANE. They are citizens of Oregon.

Mr. COBB. It would be with a great deal of difficulty that I could be brought to vote against anything which the honorable gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] might even ask for. I recollect distinctly, after I gave a vote a few days ago to provide for that gentleman, I was told that I should have to answer for that vote at home. Well, sir, if I have to answer for it, let me answer for it. I will do justice.

As to the amendment which the gentleman from Oregon proposes to the amendment, I am opposed to it. I well recollect, when I was upon the Committee on Public Lands, we all strove to provide bountifully for that Territory, and a provision was made giving each settler from one hundred and sixty to three hundred and twenty acres of land, and even much larger grants than that. I am determined, so far as my action goes, to provide liberally for the people of that Territory, and I am willing to vote for anything in the line of reason which the gentleman from Oregon asks for; but when he proposes an amendment which is to trammel the bill, and which I know, whether it is intended or not, will have the effect to trammel the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, which contains a meritorious provision for which the act of 28th September, 1850, was intended to provide, I cannot go with the gentleman thus far.

Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the gentleman from Oregon proposes to give to that meritorious class of citizens what we have already given, and we have given a much larger amount than he now proposes. I will ask that a letter be read from the Secretary of the Interior, to show his decision in relation to those citizens which we intended to be provided for by the bounty land law of 1850. I know what we did intend to do then, the decision of the Secretary of the Interior to the contrary notwithstanding. I know that we intended to embrace all those individuals who have been engaged in service, in the defence of their country, whether in a war declared by the General Government or not. Look at the hostilities between this Government and the Creek and Cherokee Indians! Did the Government declare war against them? Why, sir, the whole of the individuals engaged in the war with Mexico would not be considered as serving in a regularly declared war. Was war declared against the Florida Indians? Was war declared against the Mexican Indians? And yet are the soldiers who fought against those Indians in the defence of their country, to be denied the benefit of the bounty land law?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I would like to know the exact state of the question.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion is made to strike out the third section of the bill, and insert the fourth section of the Senate bill by way of amendment. The gentleman from Oregon proposes to amend the amendment by adding to the section which is proposed to be inserted.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that amendment amendable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is already an amendment to an amendment in the second degree. The question must first be taken upon the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER called for the reading of the amendment of Mr. LANE; which was read as above inserted.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment; and it was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. The bill is now open to amendment, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The third section is open to amendment. The amendment pending is to strike out the third section, and insert the fourth section of the Senate bill.

Mr. FOWLER. I should like to know what the fourth section is, which it is proposed to insert? I do not understand it.

The fourth section of the Senate bill was then read as above inserted.

Mr. BELL. Before the question is taken on that amendment, I move to amend the fourth line of the fourth section of the Senate bill by striking out the words "subsequent to the 18th of June, 1812." I presume my friend across the way [Mr. GAYLORD] who offered this amendment, will see the propriety and justice of accepting it. I would like to know why evidence of payment of soldiers by Government since June, 1812, is necessary to entitle them to bounty land, when those who served in the wars of 1790-'93-'94 are entitled to the same, although they cannot produce the evidence of payment to them by the Government?

[Mr. DUNHAM here made a remark entirely inaudible to the Reporter.]

Mr. BELL. Very well; I hold that it has been once paid, and at a subsequent day it cannot entitle him to a preference over a man who has rendered the service and has not been paid. There can be no reason for it. If you take the records of the Department, showing that a man has received pay from the Government as evidence that he has performed services, I ask that the same rule be applied to evidence of payment existing in the Departments, at any and all times. If this provision has any application at all, it is to bring in a class of soldiers who have not served thirty days. Now, if they served twenty-nine in the wars of Harmer, St. Clair, and Wayne, they surely would be entitled to the same consideration as if they had served in a subsequent war. Hence I think it should be stricken out. I do not design to take up the time of the committee, but simply wish to call their attention to this restriction in the section proposed to be substituted. I hope my amendment will be assented to by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GAYLORD.]

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. BELL, and it was agreed to.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the committee rise. Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman modify his motion so as to provide that the committee rise and report the bill?

Mr. DEAN. That is my motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. There is an amendment now pending, and until it is disposed of, such a motion is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is out of order, as there is now an amendment pending.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would inquire if, being in committee by a special order, the House can do anything until this matter is disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. It cannot.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Let us vote down the amendment.

The question being still upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GAYLORD,]

Mr. LANE. I want to offer an amendment, which I hope the House will adopt. I propose to amend the amendment so that all persons entitled to warrants, and now living in Oregon Territory, may have the privilege of locating their warrants within that Territory. You will recollect that under the provisions of this law, to which this is an amendment, bounty lands can be only located where the public lands are surveyed. They are not surveyed or in market in Oregon Territory. I ask that such persons as are referred to in my amendment, may have the privilege of locating their claims in Oregon Territory, to be surveyed by the Surveyor General in the same manner as other claims are surveyed.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

And it is further provided, That all persons entitled to bounty land warrants under the provisions of this act, or of the act to which this is an amendment, and which may be owned by residents of said Territory of Oregon at the date of the passage of this act, shall be permitted to locate their warrants upon any unclaimed lands in said Territory, and that upon such survey and location patents shall issue therefor, as in other cases.

Mr. BROOKS. I hope the proposition of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] will not prevail. In the bill of the last Congress about forty-eight millions of acres of public lands were bestowed by these bounty land warrants. In the bill before us, as it stands now, about thirty millions more, I suppose, are proposed to be granted. We have made these warrants assignable. Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is, practically, that these land warrants be taken in large masses and groups—being bought up by speculators, and be located in twenty, thirty, or forty miles square in Oregon—and that these large masses of land be held by one or two individuals. In the civil and diplomatic bill there is something of a like proposition, and I call the attention of the House to it now. It is to open to these bounty land warrants all lands now unsurveyed, that may hereafter be surveyed; that is, to open to the location of them the whole vast field of all the public lands. A more gigantic system of land plunder never was designed by human ingenuity. We who have lived in the midst of vast patroon estates in the State of New York, involved in anti-rent troubles and surrounded by anti-rent wars, warn the country against this gigantic scheme of land-holding. I warn Congress to take notice now, that this proposition is not to be confined to Oregon. It is to go out throughout all the unsurveyed lands of the United States. Put down this proposition and the one in the civil and diplomatic bill now, and give your attention to it now. Meet it in the beginning, unless you want the brokers of Wall street, of Cincinnati, and St. Louis, who are now gathering these assignable land warrants in all quarters, and preparing to locate them upon these lands in twenty, thirty, or forty miles square, to establish a system of patroonery landlordism, such as we are surrounded by in the State of New York, and such as has caused murders and disorders of all sorts, and has cost us hundreds and thousands of dollars to enforce the execution of the law.

I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Oregon, for Oregon and for all other parts of the United States. If these land warrants are to be made assignable, I say confine them to the surveyed lands, and let them be located upon such lands, and upon no others. Let the people of Oregon be content with the liberality of the provisions of the land law of the last Congress. Congress dealt with them with a very bountiful hand.

Mr. LANE. If the House will allow me to explain, as I did not make a five minutes speech—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. LANE. I did not consume the time allowed me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon stated his proposition, and occupied about four minutes of his time before it was stated by the Chair.

Mr. LANE. I am well satisfied that the gentleman from New York does not understand my amendment, or a single word of its provisions, and it is consequently necessary for me to explain.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can call for the reading of his amendment, which will explain itself. But it will not be in order to debate it.

The amendment was then read, as inserted above.

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. LANE, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. CARTTER. I propose to offer the same amendment, with an addition extending it also "to those who may hereafter become residents of the Territory of Oregon." That will materially alter the amendment, and make a new one of it. I do not see the force of the remarks of the gentleman from New York. What difference does it make whether we expose the Territory of Oregon and the unsurveyed lands of the United States to these land warrants, or give the surveyed lands to them. I should like to know where the gentleman finds his distinction? You have the same power and privilege to multiply land warrants, and to extend contiguous territory in the location of them upon surveyed land, as upon unsurveyed lands. There is a distinction, and that distinction is directly against the current of the gentleman's argument. It is this: that you do disperse the warrants by dispersing the land upon which they are to be located, and in the precise ratio as you extend the area of location you disperse the location of these land warrants; and this fame about New York anti-rentism ends in smoke. But I am willing to extend the territory of this grant for this obvious reason: You are awarding land warrants here. These land warrants are an encouragement and inducement to settlement. They constitute the title of the emigrants to the West. I would like to know, in the name of conscience, why the Territory of Oregon should be excluded from this inducement to emigration. Why say you shall not locate lands in the Territory of Oregon, because those lands are unsurveyed? You say to the citizen holding a warrant, You shall not emigrate to Oregon. But there is a strong, substantial, and equitable reason to send these warrants over the face of the Republic wherever their holder sees fit to carry them. This doctrine of amassing them, and of Wall Street speculators whom my honorable friend from New York [Mr. Brooks] holds in such horrid dread here, anti-rentism, &c., are entirely inapplicable to the proposition that has been made. It is a singular inspiration and a new one. I was in the hope that the amendment offered previously by the honorable Delegate from Oregon [Mr. LANE] would prevail, but it was voted down. What are you about to say here if you pass this bill? That land warrants shall not be located in Oregon, because the messengers of survey have never reached there. You have already said that a set of men, worthier than whom never shouldered a musket—men who performed for their households higher service than most of the men in your military campaigns, should not inherit the benevolence of the Government, when that benevolence is directed to this very class of persons; and now the magnanimous gentleman from New York adds to that the insult that your warrants shall not be located there either. Neither the men who fought the battles of Oregon against the Indians shall be rewarded for it, nor the men who fought your battles shall go there to locate their lands, because they are not surveyed. I insist that both of the propositions made by the Delegate from Oregon—if any propositions can be made in connection with this process of disposing of the public domain which are worthy of the attention of the House—are two of the most equitable propositions to which I have ever listened.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. He rises upon the floor as the champion of Oregon, and insists that the House has done injustice to that Territory. Now this is not so, but entirely the reverse is the fact. This House, in the organization of the Territory of Oregon, or in its generosity in the distribution of the public lands to her at the last session of Congress, established, with regard to Oregon, an entirely novel principle—that of giving lands to actual settlers. Not of giving them in small quantities, not of giving them to men alone, but giving three hundred and twenty acres to each actual settler, and a bounty upon married men, by giving six hundred and forty acres to men who are married. Why then the necessity for outcry upon the part of the gentleman from Ohio in behalf of Oregon? Nay, the House has gone further, and in its generosity in the matter of the Cayuse Indians, at the last session of Congress, voted $100,000 to Oregon for the payment of her soldiers or citizens who were engaged in the Cayuse war. This has been the generosity of this Congress to that Territory, and yet the gentleman from Ohio rises in his place—I will not say makes a great noise—and opposes other gentlemen who think that the House has been sufficiently liberal to Oregon. I am reminded by a gentleman behind me, that we have also given Oregon double sections of school lands. No Congress in the history of the Government has ever been half so liberal to any Territory or State—although eighty odd millions of acres of public land have been distributed to new States—as we have been to the Territory of Oregon.

Now, one word further to the gentleman from Ohio, in the matter of the difference between surveyed and unsurveyed lands. Of the surveyed lands we know something—what they are and what we give away—what we donate, to use the western phrase. Of unsurveyed lands we know nothing. We grope in the dark, knowing nothing whatsoever of what we give. Open all the unsurveyed public lands to assignable land warrants, and you give to the keen-eyed speculator and large land-holder, who follows upon the track of the Indian, the power to locate these warrants upon large masses of land twenty miles square—upon the best water privileges, mill privileges, on favored soils, the river bottoms, the prairies, the mines—on the very best of the unsurveyed lands? We now know nothing of the wild and unsettled and almost undiscovered regions of Oregon, Utah, New Mexico, and California. That is the difference between the propositions to locate these warrants upon surveyed and unsurveyed lands. The surveyed lands are upon this side of the mountains—within our reach—under our eye. We know something of them from the Land Office here. But pass this bill for locating land warrants upon the unsurveyed lands, and the speculators who hold these warrants, with all the swiftness of the deer and the directness of the bee, will obtain for themselves the mines, water privileges, and rich river bottoms of all this unknown territory. To guard the House against this imminent peril to the new States and Territories, I take this, the first opportunity, to warn members against the insertion of such an item in this bounty land bill, or the adoption of a similarly dangerous one now in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and which will be pressed there with greater force when it will not be in our power successfully to meet it. A vast scheme of land plunder—a monstrous, gigantic scheme of speculation, yea, peculation, lies buried in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill; and I call the attention of the House and of the country now to the embryo scheme, and I invoke honorable members to rebuke it now in its first start, in the amendment of the Delegate from Oregon.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no disposition to propose an amendment. I am not able to speak so as to be heard all over the House. I wish to say to my friend from New York that there is no such provision in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill as the one to which he alludes. He is wholly mistaken.

Mr. BROOKS. What—does the gentleman deny there is in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill an item repealing the provision of the last session, providing that these warrants shall not be located on now unsurveyed lands?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not deny that, but then we differ about the construction. The construction is simple and plain. At the last session of Congress—

Mr. CARTTER. Is discussion in order?

Mr. HOUSTON. I only desire to put the facts before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. ORR moved that the committee rise.

The question was taken, and, upon a division, there were—ayes 69, noes 24—no quorum.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. CABELL, of Florida, and CARTTER were appointed.

The question was again taken, and the motion was agreed to—the tellers having reported—ayes 84—noes not counted.

The SPEAKER having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order of the House, being Joint Resolution No. 1, explanatory of an act approved September 28th, 1850, entitled "an act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers engaged in the military service of the United States," and had come to no resolution thereon.

On motion, the House then adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. PARKER, of Indiana: The petition of John W. Grubbs and others, assistant marshals of the county of Henry, Indiana, asking additional compensation for taking the census.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 25, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

PETITIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate resolutions adopted at the annual meetings of the American Medical Association, held at Cincinnati, in 1850, and Charleston, in 1851, in favor of continuing the present rank of the medical staff of the Army, and of conferring like rank on the medical officers of the Navy; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MILLER presented the memorial of merchants, shippers, ship-owners, underwriters, and others, of Newark, New Jersey, praying a modification of the law for the reduction of the costs and expenses of proceedings in admiralty; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COOPER presented three memorials of citizens of Blair county, Pennsylvania, praying the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, two memorials of citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against an extension of the patent granted to W. W. Woodworth for a planing machine; which were referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a petition of citizens of Erie, Pennsylvania, praying the establishment of a naval depot and navy-yard, and a dry dock upon the lakes; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a petition of citizens of Philadelphia in favor of an extension of the patent granted to W. W. Woodworth for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a petition of cigar-makers of Philadelphia, praying an increase of the duties on cigars; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, the petition of Susan C. Randall, widow and executrix of Archibald Randall, late United States district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, praying compensation for his services while performing the duties of circuit judge; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALKER presented the memorial of John H. Sherburne, submitting a plan to save property and life by means of a floating anchorage or breakwater on the lakes. The memorialist states that in view of the immense loss on the lakes, amounting to over two millions of dollars in property and six hundred human lives, he submits a plan by which this immense amount of loss of property and human life may in future be mainly if not wholly obviated at a cost of much less than one eighth of the above amount. The plan consists of a "Floating Breakwater or Safety Anchorage," which can be completed and placed in the harbors of Oswego, Buffalo, Dunkirk, Cleveland, Chicago, and Milwaukee, in the short space of three months. Accompanying the petition is a letter signed by George H. Walker, Esq., Mayor of Milwaukee, and L. H. Colton, Esq., United States Marshal, expressive of their approbation of the plan, and recommending a trial of it by the Government at the above named harbors.

The memorial having been read,
Mr. WALKER. I move to refer these papers to the Committee on Commerce, and ask that Colonel Sherburne may have an opportunity of submitting his plan to them at as early a day as may suit the convenience of the committee. For my own part, it has impressed me very favorably. I believe he has discovered what will be of vast importance, and I am very confident that if his plan should be adopted on the lakes, it would be one of the best things that could be adopted for the security of life and property.

The motion to refer was agreed to.
Mr. HAMLIN. I present a memorial very numerously signed by citizens of the State of Maine, remonstrating against the extension of the patent granted to Austin and Zebulon Parker, for improvements in water-wheels. The Committee on Patents have already reported a bill renewing that patent. This is a question in which all who are engaged in the mill interests in the State of Maine are much concerned; and they aver in this memorial, that years before the original letters patent were granted to Zebulon Parker these wheels were in use in their mills. I ask that this remonstrance may be referred to the Committee on Patents, giving notice that when the bill shall come up, I shall move to recommit it to the Committee on Patents, in order that these remonstrants may be fairly heard. I will move now that the bill be taken up with a view to recommitment.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill, with the memorial, was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. CHASE presented a petition of citizens of Muskingum county, Ohio, remonstrating against an extension of the patent granted to W. W. Woodworth for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. FISH presented a memorial of merchants, shippers, ship-owners, underwriters, and others, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, praying a modification of the law for the reduction of the costs and expenses of proceedings in admiralty; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Mary F. B. Levely, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. DOWNS, it was Ordered, That the petition of Charles McCormick, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill for the relief of Sarah D. Mackay, reported the same without amendment, and submitted a report; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Nancy Bowen, praying a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Anna Norton and Lewis Foskit, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the memorial of William Beatty, praying to be allowed compensation for services in the war of the Revolution, submitted an adverse report; which was agreed to.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which the several memorials were referred, reported a bill to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, and to provide for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States therein; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of Captain L. F. McLaws, of the Army of the United States, praying the difference of pay between a lieutenant and that of a captain in the staff, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which was referred the petition of Ira Reynolds, complaining of the rejection of his application by the Patent Office, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the motion to print the memorial of engineers of the navy, praying a reorganization of the corps to which they belong, presented yesterday, reported in favor of printing the same.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the memorial of Luther Rogers and others, citizens of Plymouth county, Massachusetts, for the improvement of the navigation of North River, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that leave be given to withdraw the petition; which was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill to establish a Mint of the United States in the city of New York, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the memorial of William Hollinshead, asking compensation for reporting and collating the laws of the Minnesota Territory, submitted an adverse report; which was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which was referred the bill for the relief of Hiram Moore and John Hascall, reported the same without amendment.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. McRAE gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to extend the right of pre-emption to actual settlers upon the public lands remaining to the United States in the States of Alabama and Mississippi, within six miles of the Mobile and Ohio railroad, the price of which has been raised to $2 50 per acre, by the act of Congress making the grant of land to those States to aid in the construction of said road.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MANGUM, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Professor J. P. Espy; which was read a first and second time by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill for the relief of Professor James P. Espy, and granting compensation for the use of his conical ventilator; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HUNTER, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to modify the several acts regulating the warehousing of imported merchandise, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

DISTRICT JUDGE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

On motion by Mr. COOPER, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution submitted by him on the 20th instant, instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the district judge of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, so that it shall hereafter be the same as that of the district judge of the United States for the southern district of New York.

The resolution was agreed to.

MEXICAN CLAIMS.

Mr. DOWNS. Mr. President, yesterday several memorials on the subject of Mexican claims, which had been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, were reported back, and the committee was discharged, and they are now lying on the table. I now renew the motion which I made before they were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that they be referred to a select committee of five, with power to send for persons and papers. This is a very important investigation, which I wish to see thoroughly and fully made. While making this motion—which I do, inasmuch as I presented many of the memorials referred to—I wish to state, that I hope it will not be expected that, by making the motion, I desire to go on the committee. I prefer that it should not be so. I am serving on two other committees, the duties of which are very laborious, and furnish as much work as I can do. Another reason why I do not wish to go upon the committee is, that, in the course of these investigations, a great deal of the documentary evidence, and perhaps a great deal of the oral evidence, will be in the Spanish language, which I do not understand. There are other members of the Senate who do understand that language, and whose constituents are equally interested with mine in this matter. I think it would be advantageous to these investigations, for some one or two individuals, at least, who do understand that language, to be on the committee; therefore, while I make the motion, I hope I shall be excused from serving on the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOWNS. At the suggestion of a member of the Senate, I propose that the election of the committee be postponed until to-morrow, and fixed for one o'clock.

The PRESIDENT. The question will be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. MANGUM. I hope that the Chair will appoint this committee.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair would prefer that the committee should be elected.

Mr. MANGUM. The matters to be referred to this committee are of great importance, and I think that a much better selection would be made by the Chair. I therefore move that the committee be appointed by the Chair, and I hope that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. DOWNS] will assent to that motion.

Mr. DOWNS. I have no objection to it at all. The PRESIDENT. It requires the unanimous consent of the Senate; the rule requiring that all committees shall be elected.

Mr. PRATT. I prefer that the rule should be complied with.

The PRESIDENT. The rule will be complied with.

PARKER'S WATER-WHEEL.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Yesterday, or the day before, I presented several remonstrances against extending the patent for the Parker water-wheel. These remonstrances were laid upon the table, in consequence of a bill having been reported from the Committee on Patents on that subject. The bill, this morning, was taken up and recommitted to the Committee on Patents, and I am glad of it. I now move that the memorials which I presented yesterday morning may be referred to the Committee on Patents. I think that the mill-owners of this country should be furnished with some reason why this bill should be passed in the shape in which it has been reported by this committee.

The motion to refer the memorials to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The Senate resumed, as in Committee of the Whole, the consideration of the bill granting the right of way, and making a grant of land, to the State of Iowa, in aid of the construction of certain railroads in that State.

The pending question being on the adoption of the amendment submitted by Mr. UNDERWOOD,

Mr. GEYER resumed and finished the speech which he commenced yesterday, in favor of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD replied, and advocated his amendment.

[Our report of these speeches will be found in the Appendix.]

On motion, the further consideration of the subject was postponed until to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. CLARKE, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 25, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. Mr. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

GRANT OF LAND TO MISSOURI.

The SPEAKER. The first business before the House is House bill No. 104, being a bill granting the right of way and making a donation of public lands to the State of Missouri, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein. The question immediately pending is the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; upon which question the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELCH] is entitled to the floor.

On motion by Mr. HEBARD, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of Sarah Smith, for the purpose of reference in the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELCH] permit me to bring forward a matter which is of great importance, and ought to be acted upon immediately? I send the bill up to the Chair, and ask that it be read, as well as the amendment which has been offered to it, and which has been recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill was then read, creating a superintendency of Indian affairs for California, and making other provisions.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not believe this bill can give rise to any debate. I will state, further, that here is the annual communication from the department of Indian affairs, in which they urge upon us that we shall act. I will say distinctly, that the Government urges that we shall act upon this matter, that the Senate have acted—have taken up the bill and passed it at once, and sent it here—that the Committee on Indian Affairs have also acted, and agreed unanimously to the bill, with one amendment only, and have instructed me to urge upon the House that this business shall be disposed of.

Mr. KING, of New York. There are a great many such cases.

Mr. WELCH. If it will take but little time, I will give way. I have not distinctly understood how much time it will take.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wish merely to explain the bill, and then call the previous question. I propose to put it upon its passage.

Mr. KING, of New York, objected.

Mr. JOHNSON. If, then, the public interests suffer, it is not my fault.

Mr. KING. Not at all.

Mr. McNAIR. Will the gentleman permit me to withdraw some papers for reference?

Mr. WELCH. I cannot consent for one without consenting in like cases for others, and my time would in that way be all used up.

On yesterday I proposed an amendment to the bill now under consideration, and I intended at the time I did so to occupy no more time than should be necessary to explain its meaning and operation. Having the opportunity now, I will use it, to say a few words upon that amendment. I was not aware at the time I offered the amendment—which contains a proposition to make a grant of public lands for the construction of a railroad from St. Louis, to connect with the Baltimore and Ohio railroad—that we had pending before us, as I learn we have, from the same committee which reported this bill, a bill for a similar grant, for the construction of a railroad from St. Louis to the city of Cincinnati. It would have been much more appropriate, and I certainly shall avail myself of the opportunity, when it occurs, to offer my amendment to that bill. I had hoped to obtain a vote upon the amendment, in connection with this bill, but of that I see no prospect at present. I was in hopes that the amendment to the amendment would have been accepted, and then I might have offered this as a substitute for the amendment so amended; but I find that there is a motion pending to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which, I believe, precludes the amendment I have suggested. Having offered it, or rather having had it read at the Clerk's desk, I avail myself of the opportunity to say a few words by way of enforcing, not so much that specific amendment, as the principle involved, which is this: that we should grant the public lands, or portions of them, in aid of the construction of railroads, wherever it can be done without detracting from the aggregate value of the public lands. That is the principle upon which this grant of lands to the Missouri railroads has been advocated by its friends. That is the principle upon which members from Missouri, the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR], and other gentlemen put their advocacy of it. It is a principle, I say, which necessarily comes within the purview of this amendment. There is a clear and palpable distinction, which has been noticed by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR], between that principle and the appropriation of the public treasures of the nation for the purpose of constructing works of internal improvements. One is an appropriation from the public Treasury for the purpose of making works of general and public utility; the other is a grant of portions of the public lands—a fund which the Government holds in trust for the general good—in cases where it will not diminish the value of the fund. I have heard no gentleman speak in this House upon any of these measures, and I have read nothing said by any gentleman in the other branch of Congress, from which it cannot be inferred, that this is not a proper and admissible principle, and one which should be carried out. Is it true, then, that if you make the grant, which I propose, for the construction of a railroad from St. Louis to connect with the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, so as to give us one continuous road from the eastern sea-board to the western borders of the State, you will not by that grant diminish the value of the public domain? I maintain that you will not. I believe that you will by that means add as much to the remaining public domain, as will equal the value of that which is granted. That is the question to which I wish especially to invite the attention of members; and it is for this purpose, more than anything else, that I offer this amendment. I wish to set gentlemen to thinking upon the subject, that they may carry out the views and arguments which they themselves have already advanced. The result, I humbly conceive, must be, that gentlemen will see this subject in the same light in which I see it.

We are told by one of the members from Missouri, [Mr. MILLER,] in his advocacy of the principle of this bill, that this great road from Baltimore to St. Louis, and other like roads, are "arteries" for the commerce of the country—a very happy figure to illustrate their vivifying power and health-giving energy. But they seem to take it for granted that all the public need do is to turn their attention and energy to the construction of remote sections of these roads, and that the middle sections will be built as a matter of course. They take that for a fixed fact. It is not at all certain that any one of these roads, connecting the East and West, will, without some such aid, be constructed within any reasonable time. I am told that there has been already granted to aid in the construction of that part of these railroads running through the "eastern slope" of the continent, spoken of by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RANTOUL,] in the shape of remission of duties upon railroad iron imported, the amount of about $6,000,000. Now, a proposition's before us, in the shape of this bill, to make a grant of lands to an amount less than two millions of money in value, to aid in the construction of the western ends of these great thoroughfares. Shall nothing be done for the middle sections? And let me say, by the way, that I do not wish to be understood as being exclusively partial to the particular road I have marked out in this amendment. I offered it for the purpose of testing the principle involved, and if there are gentlemen here in favor of taking up the other Missouri road at Hannibal, and carrying it on through a more central region of the three States of Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, to Wheeling or some other point, and who will offer a similar amendment, I will go with them. It is the principle I insist upon.

Out of some fourteen hundred millions of acres of public lands, this bill proposes to grant a million and a half for the construction of these two railroads in Missouri; and the amendment proposes to grant, I think, about three millions and a half additional, to continue one of these roads to the Atlantic, connecting with one which is already in part built; and thus give you a thoroughfare from the remote East to the remote West—through the entire Union, and through the central part of it, and along that channel which is the shortest, cheapest, and best in every respect—that which is marked out by the finger of nature itself. Why should we speak of a grant of this kind as a grant to a State—as a grant to Missouri, Indiana, Ohio, or Virginia? It is a grant to the public. It is an application of the public funds to the public use—for the benefit of the public. It is carrying out, in my humble view, in a most appropriate manner that trust which was confided to us when these public lands were placed in our charge. One and a half million is a very small fraction of fourteen hundred millions. I ask you to add three and a half millions more, making in all five millions, and leaving you thirteen hundred and ninety-five millions, at least seventy-five per cent. of which will lie unproductive for an indefinite time to come, if one or more of these great works is not constructed.

I believe, as the advocates of this bill contend, that if you grant this one million and a half of acres to aid in the construction of these railroads in Missouri, the still remaining portion of the public domain in that State will be worth more than the whole now is. I have no doubt of that. I believe that would be the effect even if these railroads should stop at the Mississippi river, and if the Baltimore and Ohio railroad should stop where it now is. I have no doubt the construction of these roads through the State of Missouri alone, would add more to the value of the public domain than would be taken from that value by the grant of this one million and a half of acres.

But the question I propound is, whether you will not by making this additional grant of three and a half millions of acres, and by the completion of this road, leave the still remaining balance of the public domain worth more than it was before either road was constructed. I cannot for a moment entertain a doubt on that subject. Why, what is the root and mainspring of modern greatness? It is modern invention—modern improvement—inventions in the arts and sciences and improvements resulting therefrom—and at the head of those stands the steam engine. The railroads of this country have, more than anything else, contributed to our greatness. Here is a railroad which is the great railroad, the central railroad, the railroad of railroads. The track is marked out by nature, and was designed for the same end as the Constitution under which we live—to make us a great people. The steam engine stands ready, we have the funds, and we have but to appropriate them, build the road, and bid the engine "go."

I wish gentlemen to sit down, in their quiet moments, and present to their own minds a picture of this country, and of its commerce, as it will be when these "arteries" are run through it. I beg them to estimate their influence upon real estate—not alone upon the public domain, the unsold lands—but also upon the much more valuable land that has become private property; and surely that is a thing of some importance. But, if you wish to confine your view to the public domain—taking that view of it which the most strict constructionists take—still the benefit and appreciation must be immense. This will be the great backbone of public improvements, the great "artery" of our internal commerce, and with its branches and ramifications in all directions, will carry from the great commercial heart of the country the life's blood to the most remote regions. It will not be confined, in its influence, to the value of the public lands within the limit of six miles, or fifteen miles, on each side of the roads through Missouri, but will operate upon the entire State of Missouri—upon all the public lands within her borders. Such will not be the effect if you make it a sectional, local, disjointed fragment of a road. It will then be no "artery" at all. How can you draw upon the fountains of the life's blood, unless you have an artery that reaches to the heart? This is the principle—these are the considerations—which I think involved in the amendment.

I wish now to say a few words upon another subject, which is not, in fact, connected with this bill at all, but which has been adverted to by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RANTOUL,]—I mean the tariff. I cannot for my life see what connection that has with the subject under consideration—the construction of these railroads. The gentleman placed his advocacy of this measure upon the principle that it would be a great public benefit to construct this road its entire length, but, like other gentlemen, fell into the mistake of taking it for granted, that if these roads in Missouri were constructed the balance of the road would be constructed by the people themselves. It is true that the people have taken this matter in hand; that they have exerted all their energies; that they have left no stone unturned. They have resorted to every means, to taxation, to every description of bonds—county bonds, corporation bonds, and railroad bonds; but, I tell you, you must not and cannot safely take it for granted that the middle portions of this road will be closed up and completed. We are just in the condition in which the man was when he called upon Hercules to help him out of the mud. One lift from Uncle Sam, even with his left hand,—his little finger, would take us out of the mire and set us on our feet. It is not true that there is any reasonable hope that, within any time not indefinitely remote, these roads can be completed by the people unaided. Now is the very time to extend to them this aid. I assure you it would be most acceptable.

But I was going on to remark, that it was taking this view of the question and starting from this point, that the gentleman from Massachusetts branched off on to the tariff, and made an onslaught upon it, the pertinency of which I could not see. If his remarks were in order, it will certainly be in order for me to reply to them.

I wish only to notice one or two propositions, which seemed to be the sum and substance of all that the gentleman said in regard to the tariff. The first proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts was this; that the price of the produce exported from the United States for the four years ending in 1842, and also for the four years ending in 1850, exceeded, by $125,000,000, the price of the same articles exported during the four years that commenced in 1842. The gentleman seemed to wish to deduce from this an argument against the tariff of 1842. That seemed to be the drift of his argument upon this subject, throughout. But grant the gentleman's facts, and what do they prove? If it be true, that articles of domestic produce commanded higher prices during the last four years than they did during the middle term, that proves nothing. You will remember that during the first period, prices were regulated, and regulated at very high notches, by the inflated state of the currency. During the latter period, terminating in 1850, we had, in 1847-'8, the famine in Europe, and in 1849 we had the failure of the wheat crop here, and these facts are sufficient to account for the fact—if it be a fact—that prices were comparatively high during this latter period.

The gentleman's estimates of produce exported during the twelve years named consisted mainly in the very large amount of cotton exported. He has not seen proper to place in comparison the prices, during that period, of the staple articles of the produce of the North, such as wheat, flour, and pork. We all know how it is with cotton. The price of that article depends upon the quantity produced; no anti-protectionist ever denied that if you were to take away from the cotton growers their domestic market for cotton, and leave them the European market alone, that the effect would be to diminish the price per pound of cotton. It is not possible that it should be otherwise, provided the crop grown were the same. You cannot eat cotton as you do wheat. It must all go to market, the entire crop. It must all go to the manufacturer, either here or elsewhere. Now, is it probable that one market for a crop, all of which must go to a market, will afford a better price for that crop than two markets? Since the enactment of the tariff of 1846 the tables show that the domestic manufacture of raw cotton has decreased to the extent of about 160,000 bales per year. Of course, if the amount of cotton grown during that period was the same as formerly, this additional amount would be thrown into the European market. The question, then, is, whether the price per pound would be diminished. As an abstract proposition, no one can deny that it would have the effect to decrease the price per pound. If it be a fact, that during this latter term of four years, as the gentleman from Massachusetts says, the price of cotton has ranged higher, it must have depended upon some other cause—it must have depended upon the amount of the crop grown. But why did not the gentleman extend his comparison a little further? Why not include 1851? He saw proper to leave that year out of his calculation. Why did he not inquire what was the present price of cotton, and compare that with the price at former periods? He has not seen proper to do so. I will call the attention of the gentleman to one sentence from the London Economist, of a late date—within a few weeks. In speaking of cotton, it says:

"Although it [cotton] is now above the rates of July last, it has been lower but once within the last ten years."

The purpose of the view taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts, evidently was to show that the effect of the tariff of 1842 was to diminish the price of domestic produce, and that the effect of the tariff of 1846 was to increase that price. How can the gentleman believe that? Can he look at these tables, which I must charitably believe he has never looked at, and come to that conclusion? Let me call the attention of the gentleman to some extracts from those tables—I speak particularly of those contained in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury during the present session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I was mistaken as to the character of my abstracts. They relate to quantities and not pieces. No tables are needed to show the present low prices of breadstuffs as compared with those of 1846 and 1847. Before calling attention to my abstracts, then, I ought to state the gentleman's second proposition, which was, that the exports of domestic produce, per year, under the tariff of 1846, had exceeded those under that of 1842. I might say, again, what of that? What does that prove? As I have already stated, of course, if you diminish the amount of the domestic manufacture of cotton one hundred and sixty thousand bales, that quantity goes to a foreign market, and to that extent swells the amount exported. The question, therefore, is, whether you can find a foreign market for that additional quantity. That is the difficulty. Cotton must find a market, if it is only at one cent per pound. You must put it into the hands of the manufacturer and take such prices as he can afford to give.

Having accounted for the increased amount of exportation since 1846, by the fact that 160,000 bales of cotton, formerly manufactured here, were sent abroad, I proceed to show that the amount of exportation of articles of agricultural produce, other than cotton, have been greatly and uniformly diminished by the tariff of 1846, and increased by that of 1842.

The tariff of 1842 did not, to any extent, get into operation before 1843, nor was its career materially broken off before 1847. The capital invested was not withdrawn to any considerable extent until about the latter period. But in order to be fair, I have put the year 1847—the year of the famine—into each period, making the first period run from 1842 to 1847 inclusive, and the latter from 1847 to 1851 inclusive. Here is the table:

Value of broadstuffs and provisions exported annually from 1843 to 1851, inclusive—omitting fractions.

In 1843.....	$11,000,000
In 1844.....	16,000,000
In 1845.....	17,000,000
In 1846.....	27,000,000
In 1847.....	68,000,000
In 1848.....	37,000,000
In 1849.....	38,000,000
In 1850.....	26,000,000
In 1851.....	21,000,000

Now here is a regular flight of steps. You have to go up one set and come down the other. It is as plain as argument can make it. It is like a swell in music. And yet the gentleman from Massachusetts argues to Missouri farmers that the quantity of exports of agricultural production has increased under the tariff of 1846, and diminished under the tariff of 1842. As I remarked, I am bound charitably to conclude that he has not looked over these tables. Commencing with 1843, the swell increases regularly till 1847, and then diminishes down to the present time, thus: 68, 37, 38, 26, 21. At 1851 you are almost brought back again to the original eleven millions from which you set out in 1843. If gentlemen do not believe that the tariff of 1842 increased the quantity of exports, here are the figures, and they may examine them for themselves.

But here is another table: This gives the entire amount of exports, including cotton, and also the entire amount of imports; showing, also, the amount of specie exported, and the balance against us, from 1843 to 1847, inclusive, omitting fractions. These items the gentleman from Massachusetts has wholly omitted. This table shows that the exports from 1843 to 1847 were:

Domestic produce.....	$529,000,000
Specie.....	28,000,000
Reexported.....	32,000,000

Making in all.....	$589,000,000
Total imports.....	558,000,000

Balance, for us..... $31,000,000
Showing a balance of $31,000,000 in our favor, with an exportation of specie to only $28,000,000; so that we might have kept our specie at home, and still been creditors to the amount of $3,000,000.

That is from the period from 1843 to 1847, inclusive. How is it with the period covered by the present tariff, from 1847 to 1851, inclusive? It is as follows:

Total imports and exports from 1847 to 1851, inclusive, omitting fractions.

Exports.—Specie.....	$61,000,000
Domestic produce.....	724,000,000
Reexported.....	41,000,000

Total exports.....	$826,000,000
Total imports for the same period.....	$851,000,000

Balance, against us..... $25,000,000
This balance against us, added to the $61,000,000 of specie exported, makes a total balance against us, from 1847 to 1851, inclusive, of $86,000,000. In the other case, from 1843 to 1847, inclusive, the same balance was $3,000,000 in our favor.

Here is a difference of $89,000,000 in the way of debtor and creditor.

But let me call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RANTOUL] and of the House, to one other table, and that is the one which shows the effects of the two tariffs upon the iron interest.

The importations of iron from 1843 to 1851, inclusive, omitting fractions, was as follows:

In 1844.....	89,000 tons.
In 1845.....	96,000 “
In 1846.....	69,000 “
In 1847.....	60,000 “
In 1848.....	153,000 “
In 1849.....	289,000 “
In 1850.....	337,000 “
In 1851.....	341,000 “

I have not the amount for the year 1843, but I believe it is larger than that of the succeeding year.

Here is another musical swell—steps up, up, and then down again; and yet the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANTOUL] advances an argument designed to prove—if it was designed to prove anything—that the importation of iron has been diminished by free trade, and increased by a protective tariff. By this table, you will perceive the exports of iron, from '43 to '47 inclusive, runs down from 89,000 tons to 60,000 tons, and that from '48 to '51 inclusive, they run up from 153,000 to 341,000 tons. That is the importation of iron alone.

The gentleman from Massachusetts says, that in 1840 we manufactured only 295,000 bales of cotton, and that in 1850 we manufactured 641,000 bales. For what purpose is that comparison made? Why, to prove that the tariff of 1846 has increased the amount of the manufacture of domestic cotton. Does the gentleman believe that proposition? Can he believe it? The tables will show him, as I have said, that the domestic manufacture of cotton has fallen off 160,000 bales since 1846. Let him compare the years 1846 and 1851, and he will see that there is that difference in favor of the former year. He says, that the domestic manufacture of cotton has quadrupled within the last twenty years. Suppose it has, what has effected the result? The tariffs of 1828, 1832, and 1842. No thanks, for that result, to the tariff of 1846. Its work has been all in the opposite direction.

The same may be said of iron, the domestic manufacture of which, says the gentleman, has in the last twenty years, increased from 165,000 tons to 627,000 tons. That is the work of our protective tariffs of 1828, 1832, and 1842. The effect of the tariff of 1846 on iron, is shown by the tables. It increased the importation from 60,000 tons in 1846, to 341,000 tons in 1851. How can the gentleman, then, take any credit to the tariff of 1846, from the increase of the domestic manufacture of iron during the last twenty years? None is due to it. Had we been under its blighting influences during the whole period, that branch of business would have languished and died out, and England would now be furnishing us all our iron; and such will be the result, should that tariff be suffered to continue for twenty years to come.

But in the midst of the gentleman's free trade argument, he says, among other things, “take off your restrictions and limitations, and let the raw materials come in free.” Why, Mr. Speaker, that is a tariff argument, and not a free trade argument. What is that but a restriction and limitation on commerce. It is nothing else, unless you propose to let everything come in free, and to raise your revenue by direct taxation. I, too, say, let the raw material come in free, or, at least, with discriminations in favor of its importation. That is one of the two leading principles of a protective tariff; low duties on raw materials, and higher duties on the manufactured article. Both look to the encouragement of the domestic manufacture. The gentleman favors one, but opposes the other.

The gentleman's leading idea seems to be to open up roads to the West, as a “means” to prevent the springing up of manufactures in the West. His means are good, but his end is, in my opinion, bad. Has it ever occurred to the gentleman that here is another high protective tariff doctrine of his? Means to keep down, or break down, manufacturing in the West, for the benefit of “manufacturers” on the “Eastern slope!” That doctrine from a free trade man! What means? Why, to cheapen and facilitate the transportation.

That is the same, in effect, as it would be to remove the duties on foreign importations, and give to them a cheap and free transit. A tariff of thirty per cent. is an obstruction between New York and London. The hills and rocks and rivers are the obstructions between Lowell and Missouri. It has been the business of England to use these means to prevent the establishment of manufactures on our “Eastern slope,” for many years. It has been ours to counteract them. The struggle has continued during the whole period of our existence as a nation. I am afraid we are about to pull down the barriers, and give up the contest. If we do, the gentleman's own logic shows that we will be to England what he wishes to make Missouri to his manufactures on the “Eastern slope”—hewers of wood and drawers of water—and that, too, without any wood to hew, or water to draw. The East will then be mere conduit pipes, through which to carry the agricultural products of the valley of the Mississippi to Europe. In that state of things the gentleman thinks he sees the future glory of this country.

Mr. Speaker, my plan is the converse of all this. I desire, so far as we reasonably can, to do our own manufacturing; to live within our own resources, and keep out of debt; to husband our means, and build our own roads with our own money, and not with money borrowed from England, and for which we are mortgaging the roads as fast as made, as well as the lands through which they pass. I think, Mr. Speaker, that bankruptcy will be the future of this country, if we follow out his views.

But I will not follow the gentleman further. This is no place for a tariff speech. When a proper occasion occurs, I may say more upon the subject.

Mr. BENNETT obtained the floor.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to inquire whether the amendment of my colleague [Mr. WELCH] was read yesterday simply for information, or whether it is now under consideration?

The SPEAKER. It was read only for information.

Mr. GREY. I would ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] to allow an amendment, which I intend to offer at a proper time, to be read to this House.

Mr. BENNETT. I have an amendment which will consume considerable time.

Mr. GREY. I only want my amendment read.

Mr. BENNETT. Other gentlemen will desire the same privilege. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with this debate, and to say what I have to say about this bill, I desire to propose an amendment, or rather a substitute for the bill. I move that the bill be recommitted, or referred back to the Committee on Public Lands, with instructions to report as a substitute for it the bill which I send to the Speaker's table.

The bill sent up to the Chair was the bill introduced, with the following additional sections:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That there is hereby severally granted to each State in which there are public lands, to aid in the construction of railroads, except that State to which the largest amount has been granted for that purpose, a sufficient amount of the lands of the United States, including the amount (if any) heretofore granted for the purpose aforesaid, to each of said States respectively, to make each of said States equal according to representation by the last census, in the grants of land for railroad purposes, and a grant of the right of way and to aid in the construction of railroads in said States respectively, to the amount aforesaid, is hereby severally made to each of said States on the same terms, with the same reservations, and upon the same conditions in every respect as are contained in the act entitled “An act granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Illinois, Mississippi, and Alabama, in aid of the construction of a railroad from Chicago to Mobile,” passed September 20, 1850, and all the provisions of said act are hereby extended and applied to the grants hereby made to the said several States, and to all railroads in proportion to their length, made in any of said States wholly, or in part, by means of the land granted by this act. The amount of land to which each of said States shall be entitled under this act, shall be determined in conformity thereto by the Commissioner of Public Lands, and located under such regulations as he may prescribe. Each State, so far as may be, shall locate its lands within its own limits: Provided, The lands hereby granted, shall be used to construct or aid in constructing railroads, and so much as remains undisposed of for more than ten years after it has been located, shall revert to the United States.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That there is hereby severally granted to each State in which the United States have no public lands, a sufficient amount of public lands for railroad purposes, to grant to each of said States respectively, according to representation by the last census, one half the amount granted to the first mentioned States, for the same purpose. The United States mail shall be at all times transported on the railroads made, either wholly, or in part, by means of lands granted by this act, under the directions of the Post Office Department, and for such prices as Congress may by law direct; and all the provisions of the said act for aiding in the construction of the railroad from Chicago to Mobile, so far as the same can be made applicable, are hereby extended and applied to all railroads made wholly, or in part, by means of land hereby granted. The amount to which each of the said last mentioned States shall be entitled to be determined by the Commissioner of Public Lands, in conformity with this act, and located under such regulations as he may prescribe; but no State shall locate any of the lands hereby granted within the limits of any other State without its consent: Provided, The lands hereby granted, shall be used to construct or aid in constructing railroads, and shall not be sold for higher prices than the United States lands are sold, and so much as remains undisposed of for more than ten years after the same has been located, shall revert to the United States.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the amount of lands granted to the State of Missouri by this act, to aid in the construction of the railroads mentioned in the first section thereof, shall be deducted from the amount to which the State of Missouri shall be entitled under the section of this act.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to commit the bill to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and it is not in order either to amend the bill, or to commit it to any other committee, until the vote is taken upon the pending motion to commit.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not suppose that my motion would be in order until the pending motion shall have been disposed of. But cannot the motion be entertained and decided after the pending motion has been voted upon?

The SPEAKER. It cannot.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I give notice that I intend to submit such a motion.

Mr. Speaker, I entertain some views upon this subject differing somewhat from those which have been presented to the House. In regard to this bill, it will be remarked that it is only one, and the first of a series of bills, to be hereafter introduced, of a similar character. This is the first of the railroad bills. There have been presented to the Committee on Public Lands probably some thirty bills for their consideration, of a like character with this; and from this number some thirteen or more are to be reported upon favorably to this House. As many more have been presented in the Senate and are under consideration. If these bills succeed, they will make immense grants—amounting to many millions of acres of the public domain—to aid in the construction of railroads. There is no State in which there are public lands but will apply for this aid for one or two or more roads. I am not one of those who believe that grants of this kind are unconstitutional. Neither do I think that an open question. If anything can be settled by the action of the Government, that question is settled; because it has been the practice of the Government, for thirty years, to grant these lands to the several States for the construction of roads and canals; so that the whole argument of the gentleman who last but one addressed the committee on this subject, [Mr. ORR,] to show the constitutionality of it, it seems to me, was to prove a point decided. This is no objection to me. I believe it is constitutional to make these grants; and I believe that that question has been settled by the action of the Government, by every Congress, and by the decisions of the courts.

But in justice, some provisions should be made for the old States, also, out of these public lands; and it is to that I wish to call the attention of the House upon this occasion. It is not known generally what the amounts of these grants are, and I have taken some pains to ascertain how much has already been granted to the new States and to the Territories. For that purpose I have an official statement from the Land Office, which shows that there has been granted to the land States—some twelve in number—for all purposes, and to the Territories, 84,000,000 and over of the public lands. There has been granted to a part of these States, as follows:

Ohio.....	2,273,858.77 acres.
Indiana.....	3,267,460.61 “
Illinois.....	5,584,167.94 “
Missouri.....	3,242,627.00 “
Alabama.....	2,094,284.00 “
Mississippi.....	4,151,011.00 “
Louisiana.....	10,210,122.58 “
Michigan.....	6,170,866.00 “
Arkansas.....	6,250,813.00 “
Florida.....	2,022,993.00 “
Iowa.....	2,713,955.22 “
Wisconsin.....	3,128,799.00 “
Tennessee.....	3,353,824.00 “

California.....	500,000.00 acres.
Minnesota Territory.....	2,997,191.00 “
Oregon Territory.....	12,186,978.00 “
New Mexico.....	7,493,120.00 “
Utah.....	6,681,707.00 “
Total.....	84,222,184.12 “

And there have been sold of the public lands only one hundred and one millions and some odd acres. So that there has been actually given away, by grants to the new States and to the Territories, an amount of the public domain equal to all that has been sold for the public benefit, less only by about 16,000,000 of acres. This fact ought to be borne in mind. So far as lands are sold, and the proceeds thereof paid into the Treasury of the United States, they are disposed of for the benefit of all the States.

New York was the first State that ceded her lands to the General Government, and in her cession thereof she expressly asserted that it was to place them as “a common fund to defray the expenses of the war.” Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, made similar cessions, and in every one of them it was expressed that the lands thus ceded were to be used for the “common benefit” of all the States.

What is the practical effect of these grants? The practical effect, and the claim here set up is, that as far as the lands are granted to the States, they belong exclusively to the twelve land States, and you may go on granting as much as you choose; and yet the old States have no right to share in these grants. My opinion may be very different from that of other gentlemen here, but my opinion is, that it is not justice to the old States to grant so much land to the Western States. I claim for the old States only justice, and I am willing to do justice and to be generous to the Western States. I do not want to be unjust or ungenerous to them. I do insist, however, that while large grants are made to them for railroad purposes, the old States have a right to ask grants for the same purpose, to some extent at least. And it is as right for the one as for the other. We have but one Constitution, and all the States are upon an equal footing by the Constitution and the laws, and these lands are the common property of all the States. I should like to know how one or a dozen of these States are constitutionally entitled to these grants, and yet it is unconstitutional to make them to the others? Upon what principle is it? If it is right to grant lands for one road, it is right to make grants for another.

There is an ingenious argument used here, which I shall notice. It is this: You have no right to ask these grants for the old States. Why? Because the western States double the value of the alternate sections on each side of the road, and therefore you have no right to ask these lands for the old States, for they cannot do that. If gentlemen will look into these railroad bills, they will find that the roads proposed for the purpose of getting their sections have a range of thirty miles—fifteen on each side of the road—to locate their sections upon. Every one knows that railroads are not made where there are no settlements. They are constructed for business purposes between settlements, and villages, and cities. They are usually made through the most settled parts of the country, and consequently will pass through lands located and settled. For this reason it is that they must have thirty miles in width from which to make their selection, in order to get their lands, which they are to take in alternate sections. How is it with the other sections left for the Government? By the law they are doubled for only six miles on each side of the road, making in all twelve miles; therefore less than one half as much land as is granted to the roads is doubled in price in point of fact. Only the land lying in a strip two fifths as wide as is granted to the roads from which to make their selection, is doubled in price to the Government. This two fifths lying along the road is the part most thickly settled, and on which, therefore, will be found the least land in proportion for the road. I believe it may be safely said that these road bills will not double the price of one half as much land as is granted to the roads; and in addition to that, not one half of the land doubled in price will probably ever be sold at that double price.

Mr. DUNHAM, (interposing.) Mr. Speaker, has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. DUNHAM. I then move that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table. [Cries of “No!” “No!” “Let him go on with his speech!”]

Mr. CLEVELAND. This is the only argument that has been advanced upon the other side of the question.

The question was taken, and, upon a division, there were—ayes 45, noes not counted.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the yeas and nays. It is important that the special order should be disposed of.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN called for tellers; which were not ordered.

Mr. CLEVELAND. The gentleman from New York says that it is immaterial to him whether he proceeds now or waits until to-morrow morning. He is willing to continue his remarks on to-morrow, and I make this statement with the object of preventing the unnecessary consumption of time.

The question was again taken upon the motion to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 59, noes 48—no quorum.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is very evident that the House did not understand the question, and I hope tellers may be ordered.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. Tellers have been refused.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move for a call of the House.

Mr. ORR. By unanimous consent I think tellers may be ordered.

Mr. MARSHALL withdrew his motion for a call.

There being no objection, tellers were ordered; and Messrs. P. KING and FOWLER were appointed.

The question upon the motion to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table, was again taken, and decided in the affirmative—the tellers having reported—ayes 76, noes not counted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that he House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

KOSSUTH'S LETTER OF THANKS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is on the motion to print the communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter of thanks from Louis Kossuth to the Government and Congress of the United States, upon which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ANDREWS. Some two weeks since I introduced to the House resolutions passed by the Legislature of Maine. I intended then to have submitted some remarks upon them, but had not the opportunity. I would beg as a favor of the gentleman from Maryland, that he will yield me the floor, that I may now present my views.

Mr. EVANS yielded for that purpose.

Mr. ANDREWS then addressed the House in favor of the Maine resolutions and on the question of intervention. His remarks will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. A. having concluded—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DUNHAM. I hope now that the gentleman from Maryland will yield for a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. EVANS. If it is the desire of the House that the consideration of the bounty land bill shall be proceeded with, as I am indebted to my friends for many favors, I will yield the floor until to-morrow. In thus yielding, it is understood that I still retain my right to the floor.

Mr. DUNHAM moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; which motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. OLDS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The special order before the committee is joint resolution No. 1, explanatory of the act approved September 28, 1850, granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been in the military service of the United States.

When the committee rose on yesterday, the question pending was the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTER] to amend the amendment of his colleague, [Mr. GAYLORD], to strike out the third section of the joint resolution, and to insert in lieu thereof the fourth section of the Senate bill.

The amendment of Mr. CARTER was read, as follows:

And it is further provided, That the persons entitled to bounty land under the provisions of this act, or of the act to which this is an amendment, and who may be residents of said Territory of Oregon at the date of the passage of this act, or who may hereafter become residents of said Territory, shall be permitted to locate their warrants upon any unclaimed lands in said Territory, and that upon such survey and location patents shall issue therefor, as in other cases.

Upon this question tellers were ordered, and Messrs. HEBARD and TOWNSEND appointed.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. CARTER, and it was disagreed to—the tellers having reported—ayes 22, noes not counted.

The question then recurring upon the amendment of Mr. GAYLORD, to strike out the third section, and in lieu thereof to insert the fourth section of the Senate bill, it was put and agreed to.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I offer the following amendment, to come in as an addition to the section that has just been adopted:

And that the provisions of the fifth section of the act of July 19, 1848, granting three months' extra pay to the soldiers and officers of the Mexican war, be extended so as to include the North Carolina recruits, taken into the service by Lieutenant James W. Tatham, and discharged at Fort Moultrie, after nearly twelve months' service.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the same amendment that was offered when we were in committee upon the Senate bill. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order, but he feels constrained, in consequence of the decision of the committee then made, to rule it out of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will beg leave to say that this is a different bill from the other one. I then thought the decision of the Chair was right, and I hope the Chair will decide this question independently of that decision. The gentleman who at that time took exception is now satisfied that it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is precisely a similar amendment, and the Chair rules it out of order. Does the gentleman take an appeal?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do as a matter of form, understanding that the objection has been withdrawn.

The question was put, and the decision of the Chair was overruled—ayes 35, noes not counted.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to call the attention of the committee, for a moment, to the provisions of the law, which I wish to make applicable to one company—a company who enlisted for the Mexican war as volunteers. They were taken from my district down to Fort Moultrie, and when they arrived there, the Government did not suppose that it was necessary to send them to Mexico, but they were kept for about twelve months at that point and discharged. They were placed in a climate which was as unpleasant to them as any to be found in Mexico. They were extremely anxious to go forward and serve in Mexico, but they were denied that privilege, and regulars were sent forward into Mexico in their stead, while they were thus obliged to take their places as a garrison. I desire simply to read the provisions of the law, which I think the committee will see is clearly applicable to this case, and ought to be held by the Department, to include them now:

And be it further enacted, That the officers, non commissioned officers, musicians and privates engaged in the military service of the United States, in the war with Mexico, and who served out the time of their engagement, or may have been honorably discharged, &c., shall be entitled to receive three months' extra pay, provided this provision of the 5th section shall only apply to those who have been in actual service during the war.

Now, the Secretary of War has decided that those troops who did not get into Mexico are not to receive the bounty. No one will pretend that all troops engaged in Mexico were in actual battle. A great many of them had no opportunity of engaging with the enemy. The only limitation is, that they shall have been in the service of the United States during the war with Mexico. Suppose Mexico had brought an armament to Fort Moultrie, as Great Britain did during the war of the Revolution. Why these troops stationed there would have been in their proper place. When men engage in the service of the United States they obey the officers, and remain where they are ordered to be placed while they are in such service. It seems to me a narrow, straightened, absurd, and most erroneous construction, to say that those troops who did not get to Mexico—those stationed upon our frontier, upon our sea-coast, or upon the border of the Rio Grande—for a large body of them were there—should be excluded from the benefits of this bounty. I regard the case of these persons, therefore, as coming within the equitable provisions of that act, as well as its plain meaning. There is but one single company in that situation to be included in my amendment, and I hope the committee will adopt it. They are desirous of being included among those entitled to this bounty, and having received many letters on this subject, I have felt that it was my duty to make the motion, and I hope the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is the section?

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is the fifth section of the act approved July 19, 1848, and my motion is so to amend the bill as to extend its provisions to those individuals. I think the act ought to be construed so as to embrace them without any further provision. The Department does not put that construction upon it.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CLINGMAN's amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. BELL. I propose to amend the same section by adding the following, viz:

That the provisions of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," passed September 28, 1850, be and are hereby intended to and for the service of any commissioned officer, musician, or private, who engaged to serve for a definite or indefinite period of time, and actually did serve some time, though less than thirty days in any of said wars enumerated in the first section of said act, so as to allow to such person or persons entitled thereto forty acres.

Mr. BELL. I have but a word or two to say upon this amendment. If it should prevail, it will relieve all those enumerated in the act of 1850, who actually served in war the length of time they agreed to serve, or had served any length of time, although it was less than thirty days. It is placed upon the same principle, so far as regards that, embraced in the section referred to by the honorable gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] in the Mexican bounty land bill. There is in the law of 1850, a restriction to those who shall have served thirty days. I know men in the State of Ohio, who marched from near the city of Cincinnati to Sandusky, and who were discharged there. Their time was not counted, although they actually served from the time they left home, and were recognized as being accepted into the company until they were discharged at Sandusky, from twenty-four, twenty-five, and twenty-six, and in one case twenty-nine days. I know men in that region of country who were in battle—volunteers—who ran risks and hazards much more than those even who will draw one hundred and sixty acres. This amendment recognizes the smallest grade of service, and embraces the principle of the law granting forty acres to those who were engaged to serve and were honorably discharged in the Mexican war. I might call the attention of gentlemen from New York, Vermont, and other Eastern States, to those who were engaged in battles upon Lakes Champlain and Erie, and those who left their homes at the first intelligence of hostilities, and marched to the battle-fields of Plattsburg, Chippeway, and Lundy's Lane, and who did service in other short campaigns. All I ask is, to vote for a provision which will bring that class of men in the same footing upon which you have placed the soldiers who have served in the other wars; and I believe this House will sanction that principle.

Mr. BELL demanded tellers upon his amendment; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and decided in the negative.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EVANS. I propose the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That one hundred and sixty acres of land be, and the same are hereby granted to every officer and soldier, whether of regulars, militia, or volunteers, who may have been actually engaged in any action or encounter with the enemy, in any of the wars specified in the act approved September 28, 1850, without regard to his length of service; or in case of the death of any such soldier or officer, the warrant to be issued may be granted to such person or persons as would be entitled under the act of 1850, above mentioned, or any other act, as if this enactment had constituted a part thereof: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to grant more than one hundred and sixty acres of land to any person who may already be entitled to it under the act above mentioned for his services in any one war.

And be it further enacted, That the warrants of one hundred and sixty acres, so as above to be issued, shall be assignable.

And be it further enacted, That the act of September 28, 1850, is hereby extended to all naval officers, sailors, flotilla men, and marines serving with land troops in cases where they could not be entitled to prize money.

Mr. E. said: I am aware that there are persons upon the floor of this House, who think, because this bill is just, it will be lost. I have, however, a better opinion of the judgment, and discretion, and probity of members. There seem to be many words contained in the additional section I have offered, but the whole matter may be embraced in a statement or two. The last section proposes to give bounty land to those marines who served on shore with the land troops, in cases where they would not be entitled to prize money. I will give the committee an illustration of the justice of such a provision. In the war with Great Britain there was a battle fought at a place called Bladensburg, not a great way from this Capitol. It is a fact in the knowledge of all those who pretend to know anything of the history of their country, that every body ran away from there except a few of the flotilla men and marines, under Commodore Barney. Those who ran away have received or are entitled to bounty land, but Barney and his men got none. I know it has been heretofore a part of the principle of those who were engaged in these transactions, to reward the unmeritorious and neglect those who are really meritorious. I hope that practice will be now abandoned. I hope, in view of this great series of compromise land measures, that a little returning sense of justice will actuate the members of the House, and that they will see the necessity of putting this matter right. The other section proposes also, that any man who was actually in any battle or encounter with the enemy of his country, no matter whether he had served a month or not, shall receive bounty land for his service. I take it for granted that gentlemen will not attempt a contradiction of what I say, that the man who has been actually engaged in a serious encounter with the enemy, as some of our gallant friends have been, only for a few hours, is at least as deserving of bounty land as those who ran away from Bladensburg, or disgraced themselves by surrender. He who has been five years in the service of his country, and performed garrison duty, is not more meritorious than the soldier who has periled his life on the battle-field. If the committee think otherwise, I hope they will vote down my amendment. I hope it will be made a test here, and before our constituents, whether those who have really fought the battle, whether those who came on shore and sustained the brunt of action when others were running away, shall also have their reward; or whether the undeserving and unmeritorious only, who ran away, shall receive the bounty of this Government. That is the question for the committee to determine now. I leave that question with them, confiding in their sense of justice. I have a high opinion of their probity, and do not believe they will make this unjust distinction.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say but a few words, partly in support of the amendment and partly against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that he can say what he desires to say against the amendment, but not that in favor of it.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that I have a right, under the five minutes rule, to speak against the amendment, and I oppose it for the reason that I do not suppose it embraces Barney's flotilla men. I should like to have them described by the proper name.

Mr. EVANS. What is it?

Mr. WALSH. They were seamen, and the fact that they were seamen constitutes their claim for compensation at the hands of this House. I will give you their history briefly. Commodore Barney came into the city of Baltimore and vicinity, and got sailors from the mercantile marine. He put them on board of gun boats, and as the enemy advanced he destroyed those boats to prevent their falling into the hands of the British fleet.

Those men were then entitled to their discharge, and nine men out of ten would have fled from the danger, but not so with them. They volunteered under their immortal leader, came to Bladensburg, and the British record of that battle says that the valor and gallantry evinced by these sailors and the marines was never exceeded upon the field of battle. I wish I had the book here to show you what the British historian says of them.

Sir, these men were engaged in the general defence; they were not acting on the battle field, in defense of their own firesides; they were not rushing to the protection of their own homes, for they scarcely had homes; but they came here to defend your capital, and in that point of view, were engaged in the general defence.

Justice requires the grafting of exceptions on all general rules and general laws. This case constitutes such an exception, and we have acted on this principle in the case of the pensions granted to the seamen who were entitled to pensions under the law relative to the Mexican war. We have singled out those men to bestow our benevolence upon them; and here is a case of men who left their native element, came on land, and put themselves under the control of a military commander—men who, the British historian tells you, managed their guns with a skill and success unexampled in European war.

Sir, I have a word now to say, with the permission of the House, for the purpose of correcting history. It is said that the Maryland troops ran from the field of Bladensburg. Sir, they ran only when no other troops could have stood. They ran only when their ammunition was exhausted. I call the attention of the House to that same British record, which says that the fifth regiment of Maryland militia drove back the first advances of the British army, and these were raw militia, who had scarcely got upon the field of fight before the fight began.

The question was then taken on Mr. EVANS's amendment, and on a division there were—ayes 46, noes 17—no quorum voting.

Tellers were accordingly ordered, and Messrs. HAMILTON and CHANDLER appointed. And the question being again put, there were—ayes 78, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk then reported the fourth section, as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further resolved, That nothing in the first section of the act of the twenty-eighth of September, eighteen hundred and fifty, granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States, shall be so construed as to exclude any commissioned or non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, whether of regulars, volunteers, rangers, or militia, who was mustered into the service of the United States for the suppression or prevention of Indian hostilities, and served the length of time required by said act, or whose services were subsequently recognized by the United States.

Mr. DUNHAM. The committee, in adopting the fifth section of the Senate bill, have already adopted the substance of this section, and there is therefore no necessity for keeping it in.

I move to strike out the fourth section, and insert in lieu thereof the fourth section of the bill reported from the select committee, with a proviso thereto which I have added, and which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the matter proposed to be inserted, as follows:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That in computing the term of service of the officers and soldiers of militia, volunteers, and rangers, for the purposes of this act, or of the act of which this act is explanatory, such term shall be computed from the time they were mustered into the service of and paid by the United States to the time they were discharged therefrom: Provided, That this section shall not extend to the cases provided for in the second section, and in the provisos to the first section of the act of which this act is explanatory.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will explain to the committee the purport of the section which I propose to insert in lieu of the fourth section. It is simply to provide that in computing the time of service of the soldiers, it shall be computed from the time they were first engaged in service until they were discharged; in other words, that you shall compute the full term that they were in active service.

The proviso is designed to obviate the difficulty in reference to that section, suggested by my colleague [Mr. FITCH] a few days ago. It is simply to meet the case where soldiers who had been called out in Indian wars and for the suppression of Indian hostilities were, after peace was made, kept upon the frontier one, two, three, or four months in active service of the most arduous description.

The question now being upon striking out and inserting, it was put, and there were—ayes 38, noes 30—no quorum voting.

[Cries of "Tellers!" "Tellers!" and "Call the roll!"]

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CARTER and CLEVELAND were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 63—no quorum.

[Loud cries of "Call the roll!"]

The Clerk then proceeded to call the roll, and the absentees having been noted, the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. OLDS] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having found itself without a quorum, had directed the roll to be called and the absentees noted, and had instructed him to report the facts to the House with the names of the absentees.

A quorum now being present, the committee again resumed its session.

The tellers again resumed their places, and the question being taken, they reported—ayes 62, noes 58.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am satisfied that we cannot do anything by remaining here, and I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I hope the committee will not rise now. There is but one more section of the bill, and I hope we shall first dispose of it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to strike out the fifth section of the bill under consideration, and insert the seventh section of the bill reported by the select committee. I would suggest that the substance of that section has already been adopted, and the section will of course be stricken out. I move to insert the whole of the seventh section of the bill of the select committee, with an amendment which I have added.

The fifth section proposed to be stricken out is as follows, viz:

"SEC. 5. And be it further resolved, That in all cases where the militia or volunteers, or State troops were called out under the laws or executive authority of any State, and who served in defence of the country, and whose services have been recognized and paid by the United States Government, shall be considered as having been in the service of the United States, and shall be entitled to the benefit of the act of which these resolutions are explanatory."

That proposed to be inserted by Mr. DUNHAM is as follows, viz:

And be it further enacted, That the proviso to the second section of the act of which this act is explanatory be and the same is hereby repealed.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to strike out the fifth section of the bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. I move the following as an additional section:

And be it further provided, That every male citizen of the United States, of twenty-one years of age, or upwards, who has served his country by paying its taxes and attending to those peaceable pursuits of life which have placed it in a position second to none in the world, shall be entitled to enter upon and take any one quarter section of the public lands which may be open to entry at private sale, for the purpose of residence and cultivation, and that when such citizen shall have resided on the same land for three years, and cultivated the same, or if dying in the meantime, the residence and cultivation shall be held and carried on by his widow or his heirs, or devisees for the space of full three years from and after making entry of such land, then a patent to issue for the same to the person making entry, or otherwise to his heirs or devisees, as the case may require: Provided nevertheless, That such person so entering and taking the quarter section as aforesaid, shall not have, nor shall his devisees or heirs have, any power to alienate such land nor create any title thereto in law or equity, by deed, transfer, lease, or any other conveyance except by devise by will.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the bill.

Mr. EVANS. I rise to a point of order. I want to put this bill right. When this matter was first introduced into the House, it was introduced as a joint resolution; and, on motion by the gentleman from Georgia, it was changed into an enactment, and the word "resolved" stricken out. It was then referred to a select committee who reported back a substitute for it, with the form of

"Be it resolved." I offered an amendment with the form of "And be it further enacted." Now, I do not care which is adopted, but for the sake of uniformity, I want to have the form settled, and either mine changed to conform with the bill, or the bill changed to conform with mine.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I make a question of order upon that amendment. The question which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. EVANS] raises is one which has never been settled. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union has had a joint resolution under consideration, and they report it back to the House, having first adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS,] to change it from a joint resolution to an act. Before the House acted upon that amendment, it was referred to a select committee, who reported back a substitute for it as a joint resolution. The House has, therefore, never decided whether it should be a joint resolution or an act.

Mr. EVANS. I ask the permission of the committee to strike out my amendment the words "Be it resolved," and to insert "Be it enacted."

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move that the committee do now rise, and report the bill.

Mr. SACKETT. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL. The bill has been read through, and acted upon by sections; now I ask if it is not competent for the committee to rise, and report the bill? We have gone through the bill, and if gentlemen are allowed still to offer amendments, the opponents of the bill may prevent the bill from ever being brought to a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes it is not competent to return to any of the sections of the bill to amend them, but it is competent to amend by adding additional sections.

Mr. SACKETT. I desire to offer an additional section to the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I submit this question of order. Until the question is put upon the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] that the committee rise, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SACKETT] cannot get the floor to offer his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that so long as gentlemen desire to offer amendments which are in order, it is not competent, under the rules, for the committee to rise and report the bill.

Mr. MARSHALL. Do I understand the Chair to decide that after the bill has been read through, so long as gentlemen may choose to offer amendments, it is not competent for the committee to rise and report the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that, under the rules, it is not competent for the committee to rise and report the bill so long as gentlemen desire to offer amendments which are in order. But it is not in order to return to any sections of the bill to amend them.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understand that it is in order to offer a proviso to the last section, or an additional section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to offer an additional section to the bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would inquire if the Chair decides that an amendment may be offered when a motion has been made to rise and report the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not competent to entertain a motion to rise and report, as long as gentlemen choose to offer amendments which are in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. In this instance the motion to rise was made first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes that such a motion does not change the order of business at all, and gentlemen have still a right to offer amendments in order.

Mr. SACKETT then offered the following amendment as an additional section, which was read:

And be it further enacted, That the word "children," whenever it occurs in this act, shall be construed to mean descendants from the soldier.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly supposes that amendment in order. It is merely explanatory of the act itself.

Mr. SACKETT. If I could have the attention of the committee for a few moments, they will be able to see the propriety of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides it out of order.

Mr. SACKETT. I can satisfy the chairman that the amendment is in order, if I can have his attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

Mr. HOWARD. I desire to offer a proviso to the last section of the bill.

The proviso was then read, as follows:

Provided, That nothing in the first section of the act of the twenty-eighth of September, eighteen hundred and fifty, granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States, shall be so construed as to exclude any commissioned or non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, whether of regulars, volunteers, rangers, or militia, who was mustered into the service of the United States for the suppression or prevention of Indian hostilities, and served the length of time required by said act, or whose services were subsequently recognized by the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Has not this amendment been once offered in the committee?

Mr. GAYLORD. I would inquire if the fourth section does not cover it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this proposition has been voted upon already.

Mr. HOWARD. It is a distinct proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have acted upon a similar proposition.

Mr. GAYLORD. There is a similar provision in the fourth section of the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is out of order.

Mr. LANE. I desire to offer the following as an additional section to the bill.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

And be it further provided, That all persons who are entitled to a bounty of land for services rendered, and who are at this time residents of Oregon Territory, shall be entitled and permitted to locate their warrants upon any unclaimed lands in said Territory, and upon such survey and location patent shall issue therefor as in other cases.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is so nearly like the one voted upon already, that it is out of order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

The question was then taken on the motion, and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the state of the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order of the House, joint resolution No. 1, being an act "explanatory of the act approved September 28, 1850, entitled 'An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States,'" and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments thereto.

The bill as adopted by the committee, is as follows:

Sec. 1. Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act, the registers and receivers of the United States land offices shall each be entitled to receive fifty cents for his services in locating each bounty land warrant by him located, to be paid by the person or persons locating the same; but this act shall not be so construed as to allow any register or receiver to receive any greater maximum of salary and fees than by law he is now entitled.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any officer or soldier who would, if living, have been entitled to the benefit of the act of Congress, passed September 28, 1850, shall have died leaving no widow surviving him, the child or children of such officer or soldier shall be entitled to the benefit of said act; and if there are no children living, then the father and mother of such officer or soldier shall be entitled, or in default of father or mother, the right shall descend to the brothers and sisters of such officer or soldier in as full a manner as though said soldier or officer had himself received the bounty, any act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That in the event of the death of a commissioned or non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, who shall have made application for bounty land under the provisions of said act, during the pendency of such application, any warrant issued in the name of any such deceased applicant, such warrant so issued shall not become void, but shall inure to and for the benefit of those entitled thereto, the same as if such officer or soldier had been deceased at the passage of said act.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the militia or volunteers or State troops of any State or Territory were called into military service, and whose services have been paid by the United States, the officers and soldiers of such militia, volunteers, or troops, shall be entitled to all the benefits of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850, and shall receive lands for their services according to the provisions of said act, upon proof of length of service as therein required; and that the last proviso of the ninth section of the act of 11th of February, 1847, be and the same is hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize bounty land to those who have heretofore received or become entitled to the same.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That one hundred and sixty acres of land be, and the same are hereby, granted to every officer and soldier, whether of regulars, militia, or volunteers, who may have been actually engaged in any action or encounter with the enemy, in any of the wars specified in the act approved September 28, 1850, without regard to his length of service; or in case of the death of any such soldier or officer, the warrant to be issued may be granted to such person or persons as would be entitled under the act of 1850, above mentioned, or any other act, as if this enactment had constituted a part thereof: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to grant more than one hundred and sixty acres of land to any person who may already be entitled to it under the act above mentioned for his services in any one war.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the warrants of one hundred and sixty acres, so as above to be issued, shall be assignable.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the act of September 28, 1850, is hereby extended to all naval officers, sailors, flotilla men, and marines serving with land troops in cases where they could not be entitled to prize money.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That in computing the term of service of the officers and soldiers of militia, volunteers, and rangers, for the purpose of this act, or of the act of which this act is explanatory, such term shall be computed from the time they were mustered into the service of and paid by the United States to the time they were discharged therefrom: Provided, That this section shall not extend to the cases provided for in the second section, and in the provisos to the first section of the act of which this act is explanatory.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. BRECKENRIDGE demanded the previous question, and also tells upon that motion.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. DAVIS of Indiana, and BRECKENRIDGE were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 98, noes 28; so the previous question received a second.

Mr. GOODENOW. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HENN. Will it be in order to call for the reading of the amendments?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to make a privileged motion, in order to enable the House to understand what the condition of the bill is. I move the House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Upon that motion I demand tellers.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

Tellers were also refused.

Mr. STUART. The House will understand this question in one moment.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The question was then taken on the motion to adjourn, and it was agreed to.

So the House adjourned to to-morrow, at twelve o'clock.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. CHURCHWELL gave notice that he would ask leave to-morrow, or on some subsequent day, to introduce a bill granting public lands to the several States of the Union for the establishment of a permanent and efficient system of common schools.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. HIBBARD: The petition of Content Hutchinson, praying that certain money lost in the mail may be refunded to him.

Also, resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Delaware, in reference to public lands.

By Mr. HASCALL: The petition of Ennice Gilbert, for compensation for property destroyed in the war of 1812.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information concerning the Louisville and Portland Canal; from which it appears that six hundred shares of the stock owned by individuals have been purchased since the list was made out which was transmitted on the 16th instant. It was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

PETITIONS.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of James McGregor, Jr., administrator of Wally and Donaldson, praying the establishment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, several memorials from citizens of Dunkirk, on Lake Erie, New York, expressing their confidence in the plan of a "floating breakwater," invented by John H. Sherburne, for the safety of life and property in severe storms on the lakes; also, from ship-masters navigating the western lakes, accompanied by a communication from the Mayor of Buffalo to the same effect; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WADE presented a memorial of assistant marshals of Ohio, for taking the Seventh Census, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BADGER presented four memorials of assistant marshals of North Carolina for taking the Seventh Census, praying additional compensation; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of Massachusetts, praying the construction of a ship canal around the Sault Ste. Marie; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a petition of citizens of Vinal Haven, Maine, praying the construction of a light-house on Harne Neck, at the southern extremity of Greene's Island; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRIGHT presented four memorials of assistant marshals of Indiana for taking the Seventh Census, praying additional compensation; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Also, the petition of citizens of Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against an extension of the patent granted to W. W. Woodworth for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the proceedings of the Common Council of the city of Madison, Indiana, requesting Congress to take the necessary steps to improve navigation at the Falls of the Ohio; which were referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. PRATT presented a memorial of Malcom W. Mearis, an assistant marshal for taking the Seventh Census in Maryland, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Also, the petition of Charles P. Colston, praying the location of certain bounty land warrants; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of soldiers and others, of Anne Arundel county, Maryland, praying a modification of the bounty land law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MASON presented the memorial of Catharine Crosby, for herself and the other heirs of Thomas D. Anderson, deceased, late consul of the United States at Tripoli, praying to be allowed a credit in his accounts for certain contingent expenses of his consulate, the vouchers for which cannot be found; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, the memorial of John Powell, assignee of Thomas Powell, praying the establishment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. DAVIS presented a memorial of citizens of Massachusetts, praying a repeal of the duty on raw silk; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, the memorial of William Gates, praying that certain moneys received by him as presents while civil Governor of Tampico, and which he was required to pay over to the United States, may be refunded; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the petition of Lieutenant William D. Porter, of the United States Navy, praying compensation for the entertainment of illustrious personages on board of the vessel he commanded, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Richard King, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

STATE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. BORLAND submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to report to the Senate the present state of the public printing, embracing the quantity and quality of the work already done, and the prospect of the remainder, as to time, quantity, and quality, and as to the propriety of making any other than the present arrangement for its execution.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. RHETT. When I was absent from the city of Washington, the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLEMENS,] not now in his seat, and the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] the Senator from Alabama more particularly, thought proper to deliver speeches in this Senate, in which they very strongly reflected upon me personally; and so personal were the remarks, and of such a kind as to leave me no alternative but to reply. The Senator from Alabama is not now in his seat, but I beg leave to say, that to-morrow, after the usual business of the morning hour is finished, I shall throw myself upon the indulgence of the Senate, in order to make a vindication of my position, and reply to the personalities to which I have referred. I shall be happy if the Senator from Michigan shall be present, and I shall take care that the Senator from Alabama shall be duly notified of my purpose to take up this matter.

Mr. PRATT. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina to fix some other day, as to-morrow is private bill day. Friday was set apart some time ago for the consideration of private bills, and though several efforts have been made to set this rule aside, the Senate has not seen fit to do so; I hope, therefore, the Senator from South Carolina will fix on some other day.

Mr. RHETT. Very well, I will say Monday morning then.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I hope not. Monday morning is the time when I hope we shall come to a vote on the Iowa land bill. I will suggest Saturday morning.

The PRESIDENT. This whole discussion is out of order.

Mr. RHETT. I did not know that there would be any objection on the part of Senators; if I had, I would have endeavored to modify my design to suit their wishes. But I see it is impossible to suit the Senate, and therefore I can only say that I shall ask leave of the Senate to-morrow after the usual business of the morning is over, to say what I have to say in vindication of myself.

Mr. BADGER. Let me make a suggestion. I think that if the Senator from South Carolina would fall back upon his second proposition of asking leave to introduce this subject on Monday, it will not interfere with the progress of the bill in regard to which the Senator from Iowa is so justly sensitive, if the Senator from South Carolina, instead of waiting till the morning hour is over, will take up the subject in the morning hour. I think that will obviate every objection.

Mr. CASS. The Senator from South Carolina, to whom I shall listen with a great deal of attention to-morrow, or whenever he chooses to make his vindication, has used an expression which seems as if the Senator from Alabama and myself had taken advantage of his absence, for he says "thought proper." The discussion went on; it was participated in by various Senators, and it was impossible that such a discussion should go on without making some remarks in answer to those of the Senator from South Carolina, which, as we all know, were of a very striking character. I think I followed him within a day or two from the time he left here. I am not sure that I knew the honorable Senator had left. It was not for me to postpone the discussion, or to stop any remarks I thought proper to make in consequence of his absence.

The PRESIDENT. This whole proceeding is out of order.

Mr. RHETT. I will say no more. I only mentioned that all this occurred while I was not in my seat, in order to show the Senate that I had not an opportunity at the time of vindicating myself; and, therefore, I asked the indulgence of the Senate. I have waited several days, in hopes that the original matter would come up; but I see that no opportunity is likely to occur, and therefore I have no alternative but to ask for such an indulgence to-morrow.

RECONSIDERATION OF A VOTE.

Mr. GWIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have the vote in the case of H. P. Dorsey and others reconsidered—I mean the vote concurring in an adverse report which was made against the claim. I was absent at the time when this matter was up before, and it was disposed of before I was aware of it. It involves a question of great interest in my State, and I wish to have it put in such a shape that I may have an opportunity of discussing the subject. I have consulted with the gentlemen who made the report, and they are willing that the vote concurring in the report should be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill explanatory of an act entitled "An act in addition to an act therein mentioned," approved May 9, 1848.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON MEXICAN CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT. Pursuant to a motion adopted yesterday, Senators will have the goodness to prepare their votes for the election of five Senators to constitute the select committee to investigate the disposition of claims by the late Board of Commissioners under the treaty with Mexico.

Mr. BADGER. Is it not necessary that the chairman of the committee should be first balloted for?

The PRESIDENT. Not at all. Senators will simply vote for five Senators to constitute the committee.

Mr. BRIGHT. I think it would be entirely proper to designate who shall be the chairman of that committee.

The PRESIDENT. Senators may do as they choose in that respect, but it is not usual. The rule is explicit upon the point. Senators vote for the whole number to constitute the committee, and the Senator having the greatest number of votes is usually considered as chairman, unless the committee choose to make some other arrangement.

Senators having deposited their ballots, and the votes being counted, the following is the result:

Mr. Brodhead.....30	Mr. Badger.....3
Mr. Soule.....30	Mr. Wade.....3
Mr. Bayard.....29	Mr. Sumner.....2
Mr. Pratt.....26	Mr. Geyer.....2

Mr. Spruance.....3

The PRESIDENT. The committee consists of Messrs. BRODHEAD, SOULE, PRATT, BAYARD, and CLARKE.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Did I understand the Chair to say that the Senator having the highest number of votes would be chairman of the committee?

The PRESIDENT. The custom has been that when two Senators, as in this case, have an equal and the highest number of votes, the list is taken alphabetically, and the Senator whose name comes first of the two having an equal and the highest number will be the chairman of the committee. The Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD,] therefore, being first on the alphabetical list, will be considered as chairman in preference to the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. SOULE,] although the votes for each of these Senators are equal.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I did not desire, Mr. President, to be upon this committee at all, and it is very certain that I cannot perform the duties of chairman. I am already chairman of the Committee of Claims, and the duties imposed upon me in that capacity are onerous. I think, too, that the chairman of this committee ought to speak both the French and the Spanish languages. I do not speak either; and I hope, therefore, that my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. SOULE,] having the same number of votes with myself, will take that post.

Mr. BADGER, (in his seat.) Agreed, agreed. The PRESIDENT. That is a matter which can be settled by the committee.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I hope it will be done by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT. If such is the understanding, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] will be placed first on the committee, and be considered as chairman.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I hope that, by unanimous consent, that will be done.

The PRESIDENT. That will be the understanding, then.

NON-INTERVENTION.

Mr. CLARKE. I now move that the Senate postpone all the prior special orders, and proceed to the consideration of the resolutions on the subject of "non-intervention," in order that my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MILLER] may have an opportunity of discussing the subject, as I believe he is now ready to make his remarks.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I am sorry that I am compelled, on account of my position in relation to another bill, to interpose any objection to this motion. I am assured that if my bill is made to give way to this question, an effort will be made to lay that bill upon the table. The Senator from California is anxious in regard to a bill which he brought in, and which was laid aside for the purpose of taking up this bill. My opinion is, that if we proceed with the bill which was under discussion yesterday, we shall be able to take a vote upon it by three o'clock to-day; and I trust that the Senate will proceed to the consideration of that bill. I was present yesterday when the Senator from Rhode Island made his suggestion to the Senate in regard to taking up this question to-day; but, although I was sitting so close to my friend, I did not hear a word of his proposition, for I was busily engaged in writing, and supposed he was moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business. I again express the hope that this bill may be proceeded with and disposed of by the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE. I regret that the honorable Senator from Iowa has felt it his duty to object to this motion. It will be recollected that the honorable Senator from New Jersey, on the last occasion when these resolutions were under consideration, when the Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLEMENS] had delivered his speech, took the floor and was desirous of addressing the Senate at an early day—on the Tuesday then following. But at the suggestion of gentlemen he gave way, and Monday last was specially assigned for the consideration of these resolutions, with a view to accommodate the honorable Senator from New Jersey. On Monday, it is well known, little business was done, and on Tuesday and Wednesday no attempt was made to get up this subject, in order that the discussion upon the Iowa land bill might be proceeded with. The Senator from New Jersey will necessarily be absent a few days after this week, and he therefore desires to be heard to-day. He will not occupy the attention of the Senate for more than an hour, and then the further consideration can be postponed to accommodate the Senators from Iowa and California. I am assured that the honorable Senator will not consume more than an hour, and I hope the Senate will consent that he may have an opportunity to be heard to-day.

Mr. ATCHISON. I trust the honorable Senator from Iowa will withdraw his objection. It is announced that the honorable Senator from New Jersey desires to go home. We can certainly take up the Iowa bill after the Senator has concluded his remarks, and take the vote this evening. There is to be no further speaking, as I understand; no other gentleman avows the purpose of speaking. At all events, we can take a vote this evening on the amendments proposed. I think it very reasonable that the Senator from New Jersey should have the floor under the circumstances.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on postponing the prior special orders.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. ARCHISON] will be adopted, and that we shall have a vote on the land bill this evening, after the Senator from New Jersey shall have concluded his remarks.

Mr. ATCHISON. Take the vote now.

Mr. GWIN. I am quite willing, for I want it out of the way.

The question was then taken on postponing the prior orders, with a view to take up the joint resolutions, and it was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT stated the pending question to be upon the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD.]

Mr. MILLER addressed the Senate in support of the resolutions. He urged a firm adherence to the policy of non-intervention as laid down by the wisdom of Washington. He contrasted the state of affairs in Europe since the treaty of Utrecht, of the universal intervention by powers of Europe in all matters, religious, political, and social, with our own peaceful and prosperous progress under a different policy. He maintained that the policy which Washington taught was not adopted by him for a day; but was a great principle to continue for all time. He strongly recommended a firm and determined adherence to the present wise policy of non-intervention, so well declared in the joint resolutions before the Senate.

[Mr. M.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. M. having concluded—

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I desire to submit some remarks on this subject, in vindication of the proposition which I have presented to the Senate; but as I presume the Senate will not desire to continue this subject at this late hour of the day, as to-morrow is private bill day, as the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. JONES] feels a deep solicitude to have his bill considered and disposed of, and as the honorable Senator from California [Mr. GWIN] claims an early consideration of the business of that State, I have thought it might be well to postpone this matter, and make it the special order for some day of the week after next. If it is agreeable to the Senate, I will say Tuesday week next, and I move to postpone the further consideration of the joint resolutions, and make them the special order for that day.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. SOULE, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 26, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, Mr. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BOUNTY LAND.

The SPEAKER stated that the first business in order, was the motion to lay on the table joint resolution No. 1, being "An act explanatory of the act approved September 28, 1850, entitled 'An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States,' as amended by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I would ask permission of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT,] who is entitled to the floor, to allow me a single minute.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the special order reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on yesterday.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I insist on proceeding with the regular order of business.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask for information as to how it is that the regular order of business becomes changed? For every morning lately discussion upon the railroad bills has been the regular order of business. That now seems to be superseded.

The SPEAKER. That would be the regular order of business for the morning hour, but for the fact that the special order reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon yesterday, becomes the regular business, from day to day, until disposed of. Being a special order, it overrides all other business.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is under a rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the regular rules, and the order of the House, making this a special order from day to day until disposed of, it takes precedence in the House as it did in committee.

Upon the motion to lay the joint resolution, as reported from the committee, on the table, the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. FULLER, of Maine. Let the amendments adopted by the committee be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the reading of the bill, as amended and reported, will present the amendments in their order as adopted by the committee.

Mr. STUART. That is so, Mr. Speaker; but the House cannot understand these amendments, unless they are read in the order they were proposed.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask that the bill be read as amended.

Mr. GORMAN. I will suggest to the House that all of these amendments are contained in their order in the "Globe," which is placed before every gentleman. I cannot see the necessity of reading them all over. Every member can see the precise order in which they were adopted, if he sees proper to take up the Globe.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The gentleman must perceive that each member would have to read the whole debate.

The amendments were then severally read.

The question was then taken upon the motion to lay upon the table, and it was disagreed to—yeas 80, nays 92—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Wm. Appleton, Ashe, Bartlett, Beale, Bowne, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Burrows, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Curtis, Daniel, George T. Davis, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Fitch, Fowler, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Giddings, Gilmore, Goodenow, Grow, Hall, Hart, Haws, Haven, Henn, Hibbard, Horsford, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Jenkins, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Letcher, McCorkle, McNair, Meade, H. D. Moore, Morehead, Newton, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Perkins, Rantoul, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Benjamin Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Townshend, Walbridge, Wallace, Wells, Wildrick, and Woodward—80.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Allison, Averett, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, John H. Boyd, Breckenridge, Albert G. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, J. Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Churchill, Clingman, Cobb, Cottman, John G. Davis, Disney, Duncan, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Ficklin, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gorinan, Grey, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, I. G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hebard, Hendricks, Hunter, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Landry, Lockart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, McMullin, Meacham, Miller, Molony, John Moore, Morrison, Murphy, Nabers, Olds, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Polk, Porter, Price, Richardson, Robbins, Robinson, Savage, Smart, Snow, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Stone, Strother, Taylor, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—92.

So the bill was not laid upon the table.

The question now recurred on ordering the main question to be put; and it was so ordered.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it not in order to move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Public Lands at this time?

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order. The question now is, upon concurring with the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in their amendments.

The first amendment, striking out the first section of the joint resolution, was concurred in without a division.

The question now being on concurring in the second amendment of the committee, striking out the second section of the joint resolution, as follows, viz:

Sec. 2. And be it further resolved, That the registers and receivers of the United States land offices shall hereafter be severally authorized to charge and receive for their services, in locating bounty land warrants, the same rate of compensation or percentage to which they are entitled by law for sales of the public lands for cash, at the rate of $1 25 per acre, the said compensation to be hereafter paid by the assignees or holders of such warrants, in all cases where the same have been transferred by the soldier, or his legal or personal representative, under the provisions of the acts of Congress, and the regulations of the General Land Office on that subject, and to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, upon the adjustment of the accounts of such officers, where it shall be shown, to the satisfaction of the General Land Office, that the same was located by the soldier or warrantee, or, in case of his death, by his next of kin, as provided by the acts of Congress aforesaid.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following, viz:

Sec. 1. Be it enacted, &c., That from and after the passage of this act, the registers and receivers of the United States land offices shall each be entitled to receive fifty cents for his services in locating each bounty land warrant by him located, to be paid by the person or persons locating the same; but this act shall not be so construed as to allow any register or receiver to receive any greater maximum of salary and fees than by law he is now entitled.

Mr. STUART demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I ask for a division upon striking out and inserting.

The SPEAKER. It is reported as one entire amendment, and cannot be divided, under an express rule of the House.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I rise to make an inquiry. I wish to know if the House fails to agree to the amendment, whether it does not restore the section stricken out as it stood originally?

The SPEAKER. Certainly it does.

The question was then taken upon concurring in the above amendment, and it was agreed to—yeas 121, nays 48—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Allison, Andrews, John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bartlett, Bell, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Breckenridge, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Cartter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Churchwell, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Cottman, Curtis, Daniel, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Disney, Dockery, Duncan, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Evans, Faulkner, Florence, Fowler, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Hibbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Kurtz, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, McCorkle, McLanahan, McMullin, McMecham, Meade, Morehead, Morrison, Murphy, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Polk, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Robinson, Savage, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Townsend, Walbridge, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—121.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Beale, Bennett, Bowne, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Clark, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Ficklin, Fitch, Giddings, Goodenow, Gorman, Hall, Haws, Howard, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Lockhart, McNair, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Newton, Samuel W. Parker, Penningman, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Washburn, Welch, Woodward, and Yates—48.

The third amendment, proposing the following as an additional section, was then read, viz:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any officer or soldier who would, if living, have been entitled to the benefit of the act of Congress, passed September 28, 1850, shall have died leaving no widow surviving him, the child or children of such officer or soldier shall be entitled to the benefit of said act; and if there are no children living, then the father and mother of such officer or soldier shall be entitled, or in default of father or mother, the right shall descend to the brothers and sisters of such officer or soldier in as full a manner as though said soldier or officer had himself received the bounty, any act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MEADE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a simple amendment to that section, which is absolutely necessary to avoid gross injustice. The amendment, as it stands, gives to the brothers and sisters of the soldier, if he is dead the land to which he may be entitled in case he leaves no children living, and thus excludes his grandchildren, if there be any living. I wish to remedy this.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. It cannot be made right any how.

Mr. MEADE demanded the yeas and nays on the amendments; which were ordered.

The question was then taken on the third amendment, and resulted—yeas 133, nays 41—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Allison, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bartlett, Bell, Bibbhausa, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Breckenridge, Brooks, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Cartter, Chandler, Chapman, Churchwell, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Curtis, Daniel, J. G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Duncan, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ewing, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, H. M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Gorman, Grey, Grov, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Hebard, Hendricks, Hibbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Hunter, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kulus, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Meacham, Miller, Molony, John Moore, Morrison, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Robbins, Robie, Robinson, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Smart, Smith, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, St. Martin, Strother, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—133.

NAYS—Messrs. John Appleton, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Beale, Bragg, Burrows, Lewis D. Campbell, Caskie, Clark, Dockery, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Evans, Giddings, Goodenow, Hall, Haven, Henn, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, George G. King, McQueen, Meade, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Newton, Penningman, Riddle, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Stratton, Stuart, Toombs, Walbridge, Wallace, Wildrick, and Woodward—41.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The fourth amendment, inserting the following as an additional section, was then read, viz:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That in the event of the death of a commissioned or non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, who shall have made application for bounty land under the provisions of said act, during the pendency of such application, any warrant issued in the name of any such deceased applicant, such warrant so issued shall not become void, but shall inure to and for the benefit of those entitled thereto, the same as if such officer or soldier had been deceased at the passage of said act.

Mr. MEADE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a verbal correction in that section.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is the previous question operating?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks the unanimous consent of the House—

Mr. JONES. I object.

The question was then taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The fifth amendment of the committee, striking out the third section of the joint original resolution and inserting the following, was agreed to without a division, viz:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the militia or volunteers or State troops of any State or Territory were called into military service, and whose services have been paid by the United States, the officers and soldiers of such militia, volunteers, or troops, shall be entitled to all the benefits of the act entitled "An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States," approved September 28, 1850, and shall receive lands for their services according to the provisions of said act, upon proof of length of service as therein required; and that the last proviso of the ninth section of the act of 11th of February, 1847, be and the same is hereby repealed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize bounty land to those who have heretofore received or become entitled to the same.

The sixth amendment, inserting the following as an additional section, was then read:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That one hundred and sixty acres of land be, and the same are hereby granted to every officer and soldier, whether of regulars, militia, or volunteers, who may have been actually engaged in any action or encounter with the enemy, in any of the wars specified in the act approved September 28, 1850, without regard to his length of service; or in case of the death of any such soldier or officer, the warrant to be issued may be granted to such person or persons as would be entitled under the act of 1850, above mentioned, or any other act, as if this enactment had constituted a part thereof: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to grant more than one hundred and sixty acres of land to any person who may already be entitled to it under the act above mentioned for his services in any one war.

Mr. HENN demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and resulted—yeas 98, nays 74—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William Appleton, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bartlett, Bennett, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Breckenridge, Branton, Briggs, Brooks, Busby, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Cartter, Caskie, Churchwell, John G. Davis, Dawson, Duncan, Dunham, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Fitch, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gilmore, Grey, Hall, Hamilton, Hammond, Harper, Hart, Haws, Hebard, Hendricks, Hibbard, Howard, Thos. Y. How, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Kulus, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Meacham, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morrison, Nabers, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, Robinson, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, Smith, Snow, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, St. Martin, Stratton, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Townsend, Walbridge, Walsh, Welch, Addison White, and Yates—98.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Allison, John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Beale, Bell, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Chandler, Chapman, Chastain, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Curtis, Daniel, Dockery, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Fowler, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Giddings, Goodenow, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Haven, Henn, Horsford, Houston, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, James Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, Meade, Morehead, Murphy, Newton, Orr, Outlaw, Penningman, Perkins, Riddle, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Strother, Stuart, Thurston, Toombs, Wallace, Ward, Watkins, Wells, Wilcox, Wildrick, and Williams—74.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following sections were then read, as the next amendment in order, viz:

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the warrants of one hundred and sixty acres, so as above to be issued, shall be assignable.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the act of September 28, 1850, is hereby extended to all naval officers, sailors, flotilla men, and marines serving with land troops in cases where they could not be entitled to prize money.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I understand that the sections read have been just voted upon. They constituted a part of the sixth amendment of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Through inadvertency upon the part of the Clerk, one section only was read of the entire amendment embracing three sections.

Mr. MARSHALL. The yeas and nays were called upon it. Gentlemen who voted are placed in a false position, as they thought they were voting upon the whole of the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. EVANS.]

The SPEAKER. The question was put upon the single section.

Mr. EVANS. Gentlemen can have the yeas and nays upon the other sections, and will not be placed in a false position at all.

The SPEAKER. By the consent of the House the vote will be taken separately upon the two remaining sections of the amendment.

The question was then taken upon the sixth section, and it was agreed to without a division.

The question being upon agreeing to the seventh section,

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, demanded the yeas and nays; which were refused.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to, on a division—yeas 87, noes 37.

The seventh amendment of the committee, striking out the fourth section of the joint resolution, and inserting the following, was agreed to, viz:

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That in computing the term of service of the officers and soldiers of militia, volunteers, and dragoons, for the purpose of this act, or of the act of which this act is explanatory, such term shall be computed from the time they were mustered into the service of and paid by the United States to the time they were discharged therefrom: Provided, That this section shall not extend to the cases provided for in the second section, and in the proviso to the first section of the act of which this act is explanatory.

The House then concurred in the eighth amendment of the committee, striking out the fifth section of the joint resolution.

The question now being, "Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?"

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and decided in the negative—yeas 85, nays 89—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Bartlett, Beale, Bragg, Briggs, Brooks, Burrows, Lewis D. Campbell, Cartter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Conger, Curtis, Daniel, Dockery, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Evans, Fitch, Fowler, T. J. D. Fuller, Goodenow, Grow, Hall, Harper, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Henn, Hibbard, Horsford, Howard, Jno. W. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, Jackson, Jenkins, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kulus, Meade, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Newton, Orr, Outlaw, Peaslee, Penningman, Perkins, Phelps, Price, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus

Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Townshend, Walbridge, Wallace, Wells, Wildrick, and Woodward—85.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, W. Allen, Allison, J. Appleton, D. J. Bailey, T. H. Bayly, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bowie, J. H. Boyd, Breckenridge, Brenton, A. G. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Chastain, Churchill, Clingman, Cobb, John G. Davis, Dawson, Duncan, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ewing, Ficklin, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gilmore, Grey, Hamilton, Hammond, Sampson W. Harris, Hebard, Hendricks, Houston, Thomas Y. How, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George G. King, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McLanahan, McNair, Meacham, Miller, Molony, John Moore, Morrison, Murphy, Nabers, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Polk, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, Robinson, Savage, Stanly, Richard H. Stanton, Stone, Strother, Taylor, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—89.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The question then recurred on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 96, nays 83—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Allison, John Appleton, Babcock, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bowie, Breckenridge, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chastain, Churchill, Clingman, Cobb, Coitman, John G. Davis, Dawson, Duncan, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ewing, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Hamilton, Hammond, Sampson W. Harris, Hebard, Hendricks, Houston, Thomas Y. How, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Meacham, Miller, Molony, John Moore, Morrison, Murphy, Nabers, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Polk, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, Robinson, Savage, Smart, Snow, Richard H. Stanton, Abram P. Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Taylor, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—96.

NAYS—Messrs. William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Bartlett, Beale, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Briggs, Brooks, Burrows, Lewis D. Campbell, Cartter, Caskey, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Conger, Curtis, Daniel, George T. Davis, Dockery, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Evans, Fowler, Thomas J. D. So the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCHERMERHORN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, upon that motion, demanded the yeas and nays; but they were refused.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded tellers; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, Messrs. FULLER, of Maine, and FOWLER acting as tellers, and resulted—yeas 94, nays 53.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House then adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of Henry R. Wilson, W. B. Schneider, A. C. Michener and others, citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, petitioning Congress to pass a law extending the "Woodworth patent" for planing boards, &c.

Also, the memorial of W. Watt, Richard Bellshaw, William Steele, William Fulton and others, citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, representing that the national interests of iron, of coal, of glass, and of cotton, are not in a prosperous condition, and submitting to the consideration of Congress some of the general features of the policy which Great Britain is unwearied in her efforts to pursue for the protection of her manufactures, and inquiring whether the general welfare shall be promoted by the adoption of a revenue tariff, based upon full protection to the diversified interests of our beloved country.

By Mr. SMART: The petition of Captain John Guier and others, citizens of Camden, Maine, asking that spindles and buoys may be erected upon ledges at the mouth of Camden harbor in said State.

By Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts: The petition of Samuel L. Hinkley and others, of Massachusetts, for a repeal of the duty on raw silk.

By Mr. FOWLER: The petition of Frank F. Knowles and 30 other master mariners of the port of Boston, praying for "an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States" for the improvement of the harbor of Scituate, in the State of Massachusetts.

By Mr. BURROWS: The remonstrance of G. Conger and others, citizens of Niagara county, New York, against the extension of the patent for Woodworth's planing machine.

By Mr. McLANAHAN: The petition of Ezra C. Seaman and others, clerks in the First Comptroller's Office, praying for increase of salary.

By Mr. FULLER, of Pennsylvania: The memorial of George M. Hollenback, S. D. Lewis, Zeba Bennett, Thomas Oldershaw, Isaac S. Ostlurt, Edward Carr, and other citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. WHITE, of Alabama: The memorial of William L. Terry and others, praying for a grant of lands to the Alabama and Georgia railroad.

By Mr. CHANDLER: The memorial of Enos B. Ring and 150 other citizens of Pennsylvania, asking for further protection to American industry.

By Mr. SCHERMERHORN: The remonstrance of 550 citizens of the county of Monroe, New York, against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

Mr. BARRERE: A petition numerously signed, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Williamsburg, in Clermont county, via Mount Horeb.

Also, a petition numerously signed, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Williamsburg, in Clermont county, via Mount Horeb, Branneus, Sardinia, and Fincastle, to Winchester, in Adams county, Ohio, and for supplying the mail tri-weekly on said route.

By Mr. DURKEE: The remonstrance of George Lippard and 17 others, of the county of New York; against the renewal of Woodworth's patent.

Also, the memorial of John Gilmore and 249 others, of the county of Waukesha, Wisconsin, asking Congress to change the law permitting the United States mail to be carried on the Sabbath day.

By Mr. HAMILTON: The petition of Nicholas Leister and other citizens of Washington county, Maryland, remonstrating against the extension of the patent of Austin and Zebulon Parker for alleged improvements upon reaction water-wheels.

Also, the petition of 133 citizens of Alleghany county, Maryland, remonstrating against the extension of the Woodworth patent by Congress.

By Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois: The memorial of William Bennett, Michael Byrne, and others, praying for relief, &c.

By Mr. MILLER: The petition of the heirs of John Chalmers, deceased, praying compensation for property destroyed by the enemy during the last war.

By Mr. HIBBARD: The memorial of W. O. C. Woodbury and others, citizens of Sullivan county, New Hampshire, remonstrating against the extension of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. INGERSOLL: Five different memorials of ship owners and ship masters, masters of vessels, and other citizens of the State of Connecticut, asking for an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the harbor of Westbrook, in said State.

Also, the memorial of certain importers, merchants, and citizens of New Haven, Connecticut, asking for an appropriation for a new custom house at New Haven.

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of S. Mayargee, John Birely, S. H. Gillingham, Jacob Teese, and 40 other citizens of the county of Philadelphia, remonstrating against any renewal or extension of the Woodworth patent for planing boards, &c., for reasons therein stated.

Also, the petition of Charles A. Spring, against the extension of the Woodworth patent, who states that they have embraced in their specifications improvements which the said C. A. Spring and P. Boon claim in their patent of reissue, No. 209.

By Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi: The petition of certain masters and owners of vessels, praying that Biloxi may be made a port of entry.

By Mr. KING, of New York: The petition of citizens of St. Lawrence county, New York, asking Congress to provide for the speedy construction of ship canals around the Falls of Niagara and Sault Ste. Marie.

Also, two memorials remonstrating against the further extension of the term of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. BRENTON: Petitions of H. H. Neff, Thomas W. Reece, and J. R. Randall, assistant marshals in the State of Indiana, asking additional compensation for taking the census under the act of 1850.

By Mr. WELLS: The remonstrance of 60 citizens of the county of Montgomery, New York, against the renewal of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. FAULKNER: The petition of John B. A. Nadenboush, late an assistant marshal, praying additional compensation for his services in taking the census.

Also, the petition of John Keeler, a disabled soldier of the war of 1812, asking to be placed on the pension roll.

By Mr. MCNAIR: The memorial of Levi Streeter and other citizens of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to modify the tariff of 1846 in regard to iron.

Also, the memorial of S. D. Conover and others, representing that the forcible intervention of one State in the internal affairs of another State, is in open violation of the public law of the world, and praying Congress at once to declare their recognition of that law, and by prompt and active measures to prevent its infraction.

By Mr. CALDWELL: The memorials from the following assistant marshals in the State of North Carolina, asking additional compensation for taking the Seventh Census, viz: A. M. Bryan, of the county of Ashe, E. Hough, of the county of Yudin; Wm. R. Lovill, of the county of Surry; R. C. Miller, of the county of Caldwell; Abner Carmichael, of the county of Wilkes; E. D. Austin, of the county of Rowan; Jonathan Horten, of the county of Watauga; Jesse Gant, of the county of Catawba; Thomas L. Tucker, of the county of Iredell; and J. C. Smith, of the county of Alexander.

By Mr. MORRISON: The petition of Nathaniel J. Parke, asking to be placed on the list of invalid pensioners on account of disability incurred in the Mexican war.

By Mr. PRICE: The memorial of J. C. Garthwaite, W. A. Myer, J. W. Painter, Wm. Wright, Wm. Jackson, Joel W. Condit and others, merchants, ship owners, and underwriters of Newark, New Jersey, remonstrating against the repeal of the act of March 3, 1847, entitled "An act for the reduction of the costs and expenses of proceeding in admiralty against ships and vessels," and praying for a modification of said law.

By Mr. EDGERTON: The memorial of Benjamin H. Movers, asking to be relieved from the payment of a judgment against him in favor of the United States, and for the payment of moneys due him.

By Mr. BABCOCK: The remonstrance of citizens of Oswego, New York, against the renewal of the Woodworth patent.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 27, 1852,

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

THE COMPROMISE MEASURES.

The PRESIDENT. The Private Calendar will be taken up under the rule of the Senate, which devotes Friday of each week to that business.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the execution of that order will be dispensed with for an hour, as the Senator from South Carolina desires to make some explanation.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to present some petitions, if it is in order to do so.

The PRESIDENT. It will not be in order, unless the order of the Senate in relation to private bills shall be dispensed with.

Mr. GWIN. I move to dispense with the execution of that order for one hour.

Mr. BADGER. I hope not. It is a very serious business to private claimants; for if we postpone the execution of this order now, the private bills will go over for a week.

Mr. GWIN. Oh, no.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly they will, of course. I was in hopes that the course pursued would be that which I suggested yesterday—that the Senator from South Carolina should postpone his remarks until Monday, and make them during the morning hour of that day.

There was a generally expressed wish that the Senator from South Carolina should be permitted to go on to-day, and therefore the motion to postpone the execution of the order of the Senate for one hour was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. That motion having been agreed to, the next order of business is the presentation of petitions, afterwards reports from standing committees, and then motions and resolutions; but if it is the pleasure of the Senate to hear the Senator from South Carolina on the explanation which he wishes to make, the Chair will adopt that course.

The Senate assented.

Mr. RHETT. I would also think it fair to state to the Senate that my object may not be accomplished within the hour allowed.

Mr. BADGER. If this course is pursued, I hope it will be understood that, as a matter of course, the Senator from South Carolina will take as much time as he requires.

The PRESIDENT then stated that the resolution declaring the measures of adjustment to be a definitive settlement of the questions growing out of the subject of slavery would be taken up, and on them would be the pending question.

Mr. RHETT. Mr. President, I probably owe an apology to the Senate—at least I think it due to myself to state, that the reason why I have not responded sooner to the animadversions of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLEMENS] and those (in a milder strain) of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] was, that I was not in the city of Washington at the time they were uttered in the Senate; nor did I know of the personalities which the Senator from Alabama had used towards me until just on the eve of my departure from home to return to Washington. After I had been here for several days I read them, and I have since been watching the current of business under the hope, that the resolution upon which these animadversions were made, would come up for consideration; and that I could then address myself with propriety to the Senate, upon the animadversions of the Senator from Alabama; but after waiting some ten days or fortnight, I find that I might wait much longer in vain; and, therefore, the only course left to me is to throw myself, as I now do, to make my response, upon the indulgence of the Senate.

In order that the Senate may appreciate my position, I will read an extract from the speech delivered by the Senator from Alabama. I had hoped that when the altercation between the late Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Foote] and myself had closed, that it would be an end, so far as I was concerned, of any contention on this floor. I deprecate all such contention from the bottom of my heart. I have been for twenty years in legislative bodies, and I have so demeaned myself, both in my personal and private intercourse with other gentlemen, as well as in my official intercourse in my representative capacity, as to bring myself in serious conflict with none. But now, in consequence of having announced upon the floor of the Senate, opinions which I sincerely and conscientiously entertain, in the discharge of my public duty, I find myself the subject of vituperation, assault, and calumny. There is but one course left for me. I must defend myself and my position.

The Senator from Alabama, in the speech to which I refer, used the following words:

"The scene we witnessed the other day during the delivery by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. RHETT] of his harangue, surprised no one here; but it would have been a matter of profound astonishment to the country if they could have been spectators of what occurred. There was the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER], the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE], and the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE], gathered about him in a sort of fraternal ring, while the countenance of the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] was radiant with gladness. Thus was exhibited the spectacle of an extreme Southern Senator denouncing, in no measured terms, the Government of his country, and declaring himself a disunionist, on account of alleged wrongs heaped upon him, with four as rabid Abolitionists as this land contains drinking in his words with eager approbation—applauding, cheering, and encouraging him. All this was nothing new to us, however strange it may appear to the plain and honest yeomanry of the country. Nor was it, when calmly considered, at all unnatural—

'A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind.'

"There is a sympathy in treason as well as in knavery; and those who are earnestly striving to accomplish the same end need not quarrel about the separate means employed."

This extract, and others that I shall read to the Senate, are taken from the speech printed by the Senator himself, and circulated under his frank, I presume, to the people of Alabama. Here is a charge on myself of knavery and treason. He says there is a sympathy in treason as well as in knavery; and that that sympathy exists between myself and those four Senators on this floor. The course which I propose to pursue on this occasion before the Senate, is that which is very common in our courts of justice: to discredit the witness. I mean to show, that the Senator from Alabama stands in no such high, moral position, as to give any force to his arraignment of me or of any other man, for the want of integrity or fidelity.

Such are his words, and I will now show the character of the witness. The assertion that the Senators he has mentioned were around me "applauding and cheering" me, is entirely destitute of truth. Every Senator on this floor can testify, that no such transaction took place in the Senate. Did any Senator on this floor—did the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Massachusetts, or the Senator from New York, applaud or cheer me? Will the Senator from Massachusetts rise up and answer before the Senate whether he applauded or cheered me during the time I was speaking? I yield him the floor to hear his reply.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, when the Senator from South Carolina addressed the Senate on the occasion to which he now refers, I occupied the seat belonging to me on this floor, and near his own. I listened to him throughout with attention. I was interested by his manner and his ability; but, since he now appeals to me, I am constrained to add that, as a lover of the Union, I heard him not only without approbation, expressed or felt, but with entire dissent.

Mr. RHETT. Will the Senator from Ohio please state to the Senate whether he applauded or cheered me?

Mr. CHASE. It so happens, Mr. President, that I occupy the seat next but one to that of the Senator from South Carolina. When he was speaking the other day, I did not leave my seat, but paid him the respect of listening attentively to the remarks which he addressed to the Senate. I am not aware, that I so far forgot the decencies proper to this Chamber, as to applaud or give any special sign of approval or disapproval of any sentiment which the Senator uttered. I will say, however, now, that so far as the honorable Senator advances the doctrines of State-rights which Jefferson and Madison inculcated, I agree with him; so far as he advocates the doctrines of disunion, I dissent from him wholly, utterly, here and everywhere. And I will add further, that so far as the Senator from Alabama inculcates reverence for the Constitution, and attachment to the Union, I concur with him, as I do with every man who professes these sentiments; but when the Senator from Alabama ingrafts upon that doctrine of attachment to the Union, the doctrine of consolidation which the patriarchs of the Democratic school have ever rejected, I dissent from him, and repel the doctrine.

Mr. RHETT. Mr. President, I will go no further on this point. Every Senator knows what is the truth in regard to this matter. There was not one single sign of applause or cheering in this body, yet the Senator asserts that these four Senators applauded, cheered, and encouraged me; and he says it was no extraordinary thing at all—nothing new—that in the Senate of the United States consisting of representatives of the States, grave governors and judges of the land, that such men who have gone through a probation of public service in all the States, when they are here gathered together, should applaud and cheer each other on this floor in the course of their observations. Such a thing has never disgraced the Senate. Therefore, I leave the Senate to determine, and I leave the country to determine, in the very commencement of my reply to that Senator, how far he is fit to stand up here and arraign others for a want of integrity, truthfulness, or consistency.

There not only was no foundation, no fact to support this charge, but the reason he assigns is equally without foundation. His reason was, that there was a sympathy between these gentlemen and myself on the subject of disunion. That is his assertion; that is what he has spread abroad and sent into Alabama and the Southern States. Sir, you have heard what these Senators have said. The Senator from Alabama himself has heard them express on this floor their opinions concerning the Union. I myself have heard the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New York, (who, it is said, was also one of those who applauded and cheered me,) as every other Senator has heard them on this floor, speak in the most devoted terms of their adherence and attachment to the Union, and deprecate its dissolution as the greatest of calamities; and the Senator from Alabama rises up, and not only asserts the fact that they applauded and cheered me on this floor for declarations of hostility to the Union, but that the reason for their applause and cheers was a sympathetic accord of opinion between us on this subject. Sir, the charge of any sympathy between us on the point of disunion, is as baseless as the facts by which he attempts to prove it. On the contrary, these Senators agree with him in his unionism. Their sympathies, if any exist, are with him in his new-born zeal for the preservation of the Union. They are his allies, not mine; and by his course, is helping on the consummation of their policy. I suppose I might stop here, so far as I am personally concerned; but the cause of the South requires, I think, that I should go on, and show the inconsistencies of the Senator from Alabama. I will show that he occupied exactly the ground I now occupy, and which many I represent support. If he has abandoned it, and now takes directly opposite ground, his censure or aspersions can harm no one. His credibility as a witness, his authority for evil, can affect neither me nor any other man on or off of this floor. I propose to show, what kind of a man he is, from his own speeches and his own acts.

There is a practice of the English bar, which I have seen used in our own courts with very good effect. Before the proofs are brought forward, it is usual for the lawyer to state what he intends to prove, in order that the minds of the court and jury may be brought to those important points which he deems material to the issue. Now I will state to the Senate what I propose to prove, by the words of the Senator from Alabama. I do not mean to convict him; I mean that he shall convict himself. I do not mean to arraign him—he shall arraign himself; and whatever evil consequences occur to him in the estimation of others, it shall be the work of his own hands. If he shall commit political or moral suicide, his own hand shall do the deed. I will now state to the Senate, in a brief way, what I intend to prove and substantiate by his own speeches.

The Senator from Alabama, during the last Congress, delivered various speeches on the subject of Southern slavery:

1. On his resolution of the 27th of December, calling for information as to California, he takes the position that for Congress to admit California as a State, with the clause in her constitution prohibiting slavery, was the passage by Congress of the Wilmot proviso in a different form, and that, in doing so, Congress would violate all precedent.

Mr. CLEMENS. What is the volume from which you read?

Mr. RHETT. It is all taken from the Congressional Globe. I shall read the extracts themselves directly. If he will turn to the dates, he will find them; or I will send him my extracts, as I have them all written down.

2. On the 10th of January, in his speech on the Vermont resolutions advocating resistance by the South to the admission of California as the first aggression, he contends that we cannot yield one inch; shows that this would not only be impolitic, bringing desolation and death to the South, but infamous; eschews prudence; treats charges of disunion with contempt; and finally depicts two classes of traitors existing, the Abolitionists and the Submissionists in the South.

3. On the 11th of February, in his speech on the petition presented by Mr. HALE to dissolve the Union, he asserts that, between disunion and submission of the South to the admission of California, the South would take the former; and argues, that in this event, it will be the North, not the South, which will dissolve the Union by destroying the Constitution.

4. On the 20th of February, in his speech delivered on the President's message transmitting to the Senate the constitution of California, he denounces Mr. CLAY's resolutions; argues at length against the constitutionality of admitting California into the Union; denounces her admission as the consummation of a drama of fraud and trickery; contends that the North gets everything by Mr. CLAY's proposed compromise, and the South loses all; prefers the Wilmot proviso direct; denounces all compromises upon the subject, and replies to the pictures of war and blood drawn by Messrs. CLAY and CASS, denying that they have any foundation in the probable course of things; but if realized, the South is not responsible, and should not yield on that account; distinctly indicates disunion as "the sharp and severe remedy;" descants on Washington's Farewell Address, and contends that he would, if able, sanction his course, and go with the South in resistance.

5. On the 8th of May he attacks the report of the Committee of Thirteen, and assails Mr. MANGUM; contends that there is no room for liberality in the construction of the Constitution, and that it cannot be compromised away.

7. On the 16th of May he arraigns Mr. Foote for inconsistency in supporting the report of the Committee of Thirteen, which the Senator said was only an imbodiment of Mr. CLAY's resolutions; denounces the compromise as "a shameless surrender;" descants upon the "outrage" of the dismemberment of Texas; and treats with disrespect and contempt the counsel that we should take the compromise as "the best we could get."

8. On the 21st of May he replies to Mr. Foote's charge of being in association with Abolitionists, and shows that their opposition to the bill is for contrary reasons.

9. On the 13th of August, he protests against the passage of the bill admitting California; repeats his position, as being against the constitutionality of the bill; declares that the States are sovereign; advocates secession, and declares his allegiance to Alabama, intimating that those who support the bill are traitors to the South, and would sell their souls to Satan, and betray the Saviour himself, if he were to come again on earth, for half the money which Judas obtained.

Such were the positions taken by Mr. JERRY CLEMENS, a Senator from Alabama, in the Senate of the United States, in the year of our Lord 1850. But, in the year 1851, in the month of December, Mr. JERRY CLEMENS, according to the speech he lately delivered, is an entirely different man, and exhibits an entirely new character. In the former year, he is a State-Rights, Resistance man—in the latter, he is a consolidation Submissionist; in the former year, he denounces the compromise as unconstitutional and unendurable by the South—in the latter, he defends it as constitutional and the source of great blessings to the country; in the former year, he denounces the Submissionists to the compromise as traitors—in the latter, he becomes one himself, and denounces the Resistance men as traitors; in the former year, he descants on a dissolution of the Union, as the "sharp and severe remedy"—in the latter, he praises the Union, just as Mr. CASS and Mr. CLAY had done before him; in the former year, he treated with just scorn and contempt the pictures of blood and woe which were then portrayed as the consequences of the disunion policy—in the next year, he becomes a picture maker in the same line himself; in the former year, he declares the States sovereign—in the latter, that they are not sovereign; in the former year, he declares that his allegiance is due to Alabama—in the latter, that no allegiance of his is due to her, for she cannot punish treason; in the former year, he supports secession—in the latter he denounces it; and crowns the whole by the assertion, that Jefferson, the Virginia report and resolutions of 1798 and 1799, with Calhoun and McDuffie also, all denied the right of secession.

Now, the Senate is in possession of what I proposed to prove. This is but a synopsis of the positions of the Senator from Alabama, and a very imperfect synopsis. If the Senate will attend to the language I shall read, used by the Senator from Alabama, I think they will find in the sequel, that I have not only not overstated them, but that I have not stated his inconsistency in the full force which his own words would portray. And if I make all this to appear, as I think I shall, will he not prove to be a very proper specimen of morality and honor, standing up in the Senate of the United States, to arraign the conduct or principles of other Senators?

Now, Mr. President, for the extracts to which I have alluded. On the 20th of December—(you see, sir, he began very early, he could not wait till other Senators began; he began himself; foremost in his zeal for the interests and honor of the South)—on the 20th of December, before Mr. CLAY offered his resolutions, he came out in the Senate and offered a series of resolutions calling upon the President for information upon the following subjects: First, whether he had appointed a civil and military governor for California, since March last; second, whether any agent had been sent out to California to assist in the formation of a State government; third, how the persons calling themselves delegates to the convention were elected, who fixed the qualifications of voters, and what those qualifications were; fourth, whether any census of the inhabitants of California had been taken, and by what law; and, fifth, the instructions which were given by the Government to the civil and military Governor. On the 7th of January these resolutions came up for consideration in the Senate, and the Senator, in his remarks supporting their passage, said:

"My attention was called to the subject by the Governor of the State of Alabama. The people of that State believe that a fraud had been practiced, and they called for information. What a farce it is to say, you oppose, and still do the same things which the Wilmot proviso proposes to accomplish. Are we to be treated like sick children, who are induced to take the medicine offered them, by giving the pill a coat of sugar," &c.

See, sir, what a beautifully fine figure he uses for putting the Wilmot proviso upon the South, by the admission of California with her constitution prohibiting slavery, instead of passing it directly in a territorial bill.

"You will not pass the Wilmot proviso, but you come here and pass the same principle which that proviso involves, and in doing so you violate all precedent since the establishment of the Government. And why will you do it? Will a single Senator get up and say that he would vote for the admission of that State, were it not for the existence of slavery in the country? Is there one here who would be so reckless as to vote for the admission of California, were it not for the slavery question? I say it is a matter which we ought to know all about, and I intend to know all about it."

Sir, that is pretty strong language; language which I heartily approve. Not being then in public life, and a mere spectator afar off, I was looking to the Senator from Alabama as one of our most brilliant leaders. To the great men of the South, especially to her Senators, the people of the South turned with intense anxiety to point the way to redemption, to honor, and to peace, and to him among the number.

Now, sir, on the 10th of January the Vermont resolutions came up. These resolutions covered the whole ground of the question of slavery, denouncing it in all parts of the country; and on these resolutions the Senator from Alabama early got the floor, and here is what he says:

"I wish to show my constituents that the declarations so often and so earnestly made, that the North does not intend to interfere with slavery where it exists, is entirely false, and intended only to deceive. The game has been played with some success heretofore, and I should consider myself very culpable, if I did not now expose it."

"The Senator from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] says that he is not to be deterred, by innuences of disunion, from pursuing the course he has marked out for himself. I have no wish to deter him. I want him and other Northern men to come up boldly, and do what they tell us their constituents have demanded."

"The South, Mr. President, disclaims the language of menace, but it is nevertheless due to all parties that her deliberate purposes should be known. We do not intend to stand still and have our throats cut, because the butcher chooses to sooth us with the operation of honeyed words. You can deceive us no longer by the catch-words 'conciliation and harmony.' Nor can our voices be stifled by the fear of incurring the reproach of imprudence. I said the other day, and I say now, that the time for prudential action has gone by. It is this prudence, of which we have heard so much, that has brought us to the situation in which we now are. It is this constant talk about prudential action which has induced the people of the North to believe that we do not intend to resist."

"There is a point at which prudence changes from a virtue to a vice, and it often happens that it is used only as another name for cowardice. It is not to be wondered at if our good brethren of the North have mistaken the one for the other, and have thus found courage to persist in a crusade which promised to be unattended with danger. I know not if they will thank me for undeceiving them, but it is my habit to deal plainly with all men; and I now proclaim that you have reached the utmost limit to which you can go. There is a line beyond which you must not pass. You have marched up to it, and now cross it if you dare."

Sir, is not that bold and striking language—language worthy of a Southern man contending for the great interests and the honor of the South? But, he proceeds:

"I do not say this to intimidate. I do not believe it will have that effect. On the contrary, I believe with the Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. Calhoun,] that this movement will run its course, and end, as all similar things have ended, in blood and tears." * * * "He who cannot now trace out, step by step, each successive event of the future, has learned but little from the past history of mankind, and is ill fitted to be the law-giver of a nation. The North will not save the Union, and the South cannot; unless, indeed, we submit to indignities and wrongs of so degrading a character as would almost make our fathers' 'burst the ceremonies of the tomb,' and come amongst us once more to denounce and disown the degenerate descendants who had disgraced a glorious ancestry. We know well what we have to expect. Northern demands have assumed a form which it is impossible for us to misunderstand. First, comes our exclusion from our territory; next, abolition in the District of Columbia—in the forts, arsenals, dock-yards, &c.; then, the prohibition of the slave trade between the States; and finally, total abolition. These results are just as certain, unless the first step is firmly resisted, as that the sun will rise to-morrow, and the night will follow his going down. Heretofore, it has been pretended that it was not the purpose of any considerable body at the North to interfere with slavery in the States; but this is an illusion which these resolutions have come in good time to dispel. I always knew it was false; but I did not expect to see the cloak so soon thrown aside. But even if it were true, I would still say I do not choose to place myself at your mercy. I will not exchange the fortifications which the Constitution has thrown around my rights for a frail reliance on your generosity or your forbearance. Concession never yet satisfied fanaticism, nor has the march of the wrong-doer ever been stayed by the supplications of the sufferer. Situated as we are, the impulse of manliness is the dictate of prudence. Our duty and our obvious policy, alike demand that we should meet the danger on the threshold, and fall or conquer there. It is of no consequence by what name you choose to designate your aggression. When a principle is established, which must bring not only poverty but desolation and death to the South, it is immaterial whether you call it abolition, free soil, or, to use the phrase of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] free democracy; the end is the same, and so should be the resistance also. When the fall of the out works must follow the fall of the citadel, he is a poor commander who hesitates to risk everything in their defence. It is so with us; we cannot yield an inch of ground we now occupy, without compromising our safety, and what is worse, incurring the reproach of eternal infamy. None but children can be imposed upon by the miserable delusion that abolition will pause in the midst of its successes."

"I have no threats to make—they are out of time and place; but I tell you, more in sorrow than in anger, not only that you must pause, but that you must retrace your steps. The guarantees of the Constitution must be respected, and its promises held sacred, or the most weak and timid man in the State I represent would scorn your alliance and shatter your Confederacy. Indeed, I do not know but what it is now too late, and that this Union, over which you have preached so much, and about which so many eloquent sentences have been penned, is already at an end."

He considered the Union already at an end. That was upwards of twelve months ago; and yet he is standing here now, after all the measures he was denouncing are consummated, its ardent champion, and calling those who say it ought to be reformed or dissolved bad men. I go on:

"Certainly you have severed many of its strongest ties, and but little remains besides that formal separation which imbibed feelings must soon render a necessity. You did enough to dissolve it when you commenced organized robberies of our property—when you murdered our citizens."

Yes, sir, that murder was before the compromise; but now since the compromise, when another murder is perpetrated in the effort to enforce the fugitive slave law, where is his indignation? Who heard him say in his late speech defending the compromise and the execution of the fugitive slave law, anything charging the North?

"You murdered our citizens when you violated every constitutional obligation, and forgot every tie which bound us together as a people. Reserve then your denunciations of disunion for yourselves." * * * "However much I may have loved the Union, I love the liberties of my native land far more; and you have taught me that they may become antagonists—that the existence of the one might be incompatible with the other."

He further says, "you have violated every constitutional obligation and forgotten every tie that binds us as a people;" and concludes his speech, which is admirable in its tone and substance, describing two classes of traitors, as follows:

"There are two classes of these who have brought this Government to the points at which we now stand—actuated by very different motives and principles, but equally culpable, and equally chargeable with the crime of treason to the land. The first is, that band of Northern fanatics who, regardless of right, regardless of the Constitution, forgetful of all past obligations, and of all moral and social ties, have excited and continued a wild and reckless warfare upon an institution of which they know nothing, and whose blessings or curses should have been alike indifferent to them. The second class is one for whom I have less respect, and of whom I always speak with less patience. It is the timid, hesitating, shrinking portion in our own section of the Union who are afraid to march up to the line—to meet the oppressor on the confines, and hurl him back the very moment his footsteps press forbidden ground."

At this time California was not yet in the Union, and the traitors in the South were the timid and shrinking who feared to resist. Are those less traitors who have submitted afterwards? Where is the Senator from Alabama now? He continues:

"A great poet, in the story of his visit to the infernal regions, gives a description of certain souls which aptly applies to them. He found them outside the gates of hell, and says:

"Here with those caltiff angels they abide
Who stood aloof in heaven—to God untrue,
Yet wanting courage with his foes to side,
Heaven cast them forth, its beauty not to stain,
And hell refuses to receive them too;
From them no glory could the damned obtain."

Sir, according to this poetry, which he applies to others, if his present position is that of submission, he could have no glory with the damned. The infernal regions itself is not a fit place for him. Mark, Mr. President, I do not myself say that this is his position. I am using the Senator's own words. I will go on with his brave positions.

On the 11th of February, (for the Senator did not on one occasion only thus gallantly arraign those who were invading the rights of the South, or were disposed to surrender them; no sir; again and again he couched his lance and dashed into the conflict; again and again he met the cheerings, not of submissionists and compromisers here with whom he now stands, but of all the true and brave men in the South who looked here for counsel and guidance.)—on the 11th of February a debate arose on the question whether a petition should be received presented by the Senator from New Hampshire, praying that the Union should be dissolved. The Senator from Alabama said, in reply to the avowals of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] and other Northern Senators:

"If Senators desire us to believe them sincere in their professions of love for the Union, that sincerity ought to be manifested by their conduct. Who has put the Union in danger? Not the South, for we have committed no aggressions, and propose to commit none. We are responsible only for making known our determination to resist oppression, come from what quarter it may. It is the North, and the North alone, who are the agitators. It is the North alone by whom this fair fabric has been shaken to its center; and the allegation that there are Southern disunionists for the sake of disunion is an unmitigated calumny which shall not be pronounced in my hearing without being branded as it deserves. If you love the Union so much, cease your aggressions—pause in your efforts to destroy the Constitution, which is its only bond. You need be under no apprehensions for the Union, unless your conduct makes its destruction a duty. From the South you have nothing to fear so long as you do not attempt to perpetrate a wrong." [Remember that all this time the compromise is the matter under consideration.] "I do not misunderstand the policy which causes you to denounce those who defend the rights of the weaker section—who have dared to step between power and its victim—as factious and disorganizers."

His conclusion is very fine—worthy of a Southern Senator basely assailed and maligned because he does his duty. It is as follows:

"For myself I have a duty before me which can make no demands and impose no risks or annoyances that I am not ready to meet. Any one may pursue a pathway strewn with roses: it requires men to tread where thorns and brambles cumber the way. I expected to be denounced, to be misunderstood by some, and calumniated by others!"

That is applicable to myself. I have expected that I would be calumniated, as he himself expected to be, for defending the rights and interests of the South. I am sorry that I must use this language of the Senator as being so applicable to himself. He says.

"Much of this I cannot prevent; but when the charge is made here in my presence that I am a factiousist, or that those who act with me are so, I shall repel it in terms that admit of no double meaning. Sir, I do not believe that there is a man in the entire South who desires disunion for itself. I hope, also, that there is not one who will suffer his rights to be invaded, or his honor tarnished, no matter what may be the cost of resistance. We mean at all hazards to defend the Constitution. If that is faction, we are guilty. If that is disunion, we are disunionists. If that is crime against the Republic, we have much to answer for."

"I have heard enough, Mr. President, of hypocritical whining about the Union, from those who are its deadliest foes. If you want peace, you have only to say so. Let us alone. We ask no more. Or, if you will not do that, spare us your lamentations. If you are determined to destroy the Constitution, be men, own it publicly, and take the responsibility. Do not seek to shift it on our shoulders."

Well, sir, that is not all. On the 20th of February, Mr. CLAY's resolutions came up for consideration in the Senate, and here is the way he discourses about the constitutionality of the admission of California:

"If she has a right to form a constitution and State government, her right to regulate the subject of slavery is unquestionable."

But he shows that, having no law of Congress authorizing her to form a constitution and be a State, she was no State. He goes on as follows:

"No territorial government was ever established in California. The people who framed its constitution were not inhabitants, in the legal meaning of the word. They were composed of Indians, Mexicans, and a wild band of adventurers from every quarter of the globe, allured by the lust of gold to the shores of the Pacific, many of them without a permanent residence anywhere, and four fifths of them without the remotest intention of remaining in the country whose organic law they undertook to establish."

"I do not speak without authority upon this point. I have here the message of the Governor of California, who, it is to be presumed, is acquainted with the character of the population of which he is the chief. He describes them as follows: 'Already we have almost every variety of the human race among us—a heterogeneous mass of human beings, of every language and hue.'"

"Yet these persons, not citizens of the United States, owing no allegiance to this Government, not speaking our language even, or understanding our laws, undertake to erect a sovereign State out of our public domain; and with a cool impudence which almost commands admiration, call upon us to sanction their action, and give validity to a most extraordinary usurpation."

"In California no census has been taken; there is no law fixing her boundaries; no law regulating the time, places, and manner of holding elections; no law to determine the qualifications of voters; no evidence and no reason to believe that she contains a free population equal to the present ratio of representation. A military governor, acting under the order of the President, usurped the power of Congress, directed the mode or manner of proceeding, substituted his will for law, and conducted to its final consummation a drama of fraud and trickery unparalleled in the annals of any land. In other times the actors in these lawless scenes would have been held to a fearful reckoning; but the strength of party ties, and the usual shrinking of ordinary minds from the face of great dangers has not only dissipated the sense of accountability, but left it a matter of doubt whether the Congress of the United States will not assume the act and throw around its own shoulders a mantle more deadly than the poisoned shirt of Nessus. Instead of vindicating the majesty of the law, and trampling down a dangerous usurpation, we are merely deliberating whether temporary quiet may not be purchased by unmanly acquiescence. I say temporary quiet, because all experience has demonstrated that no weak expedient ever sufficed to cure a serious evil. In political as in physical illness, the cause must be removed before the disease can be eradicated. The admission of California will do nothing towards arresting the current of abolition aggressions. It will be regarded everywhere as an anti-slavery triumph, as one more work carried, from the shelter of which the assailing party may the more effectually annoy and harass the assailed. Yet the Senator from Kentucky says that we yield nothing by assenting to it. I quote his own language:

"Well now, is there any concession in this resolution 'by either party to the other? I know that gentlemen who 'come from slaveholding States say the North gets all that it 'desires, but by whom does it get it? Does it get it by any 'action of Congress? If slavery be interdicted within the 'limits of California, has it been done by Congress? No, 'sir. That interdiction is imposed by California herself."

Now hear his answer to Mr. CLAY:

"I answer, that everything is conceded by the admission of California. The whole matter in controversy terminates at once. The North gets all she ever asked—gets it by the action of Congress in direct violation of the great legal principle, that the wrong-doer shall not profit by his own wrong. Who among us does not know that agitation in the State Legislatures, and in the National Congress, has prevented Southern emigration to California, and placed the country in the power of those who have imposed this restriction? Who is there so blind as not to see that this has been the result of aggressions commenced here? And who does not feel that Congress is responsible for the fact, that slavery has been excluded? Property is timid. The slaveholder would not carry his property there with a threat hanging over him, that it was to be taken from him by operation of law, the moment he landed. Agitation, then, in Congress; repeated declarations, made everywhere—in State Legislatures, in conventions, by the press, from the pulpit even—that slavery should be excluded from California by law, have deprived us of our constitutional rights, as certainly and effectually as any positive enactment could have done. And we are now asked not only to submit to it, but to accept it as a boon, and be very thankful for the outrage. Sir, I prefer the Will not proviso direct. I prefer it because it is bolder, plainer, and more manly. The robber who meets me on the highway and demands the surrender of my property, leaves me at least the option of a contest, and is entitled to far more respect than the assassin who lurks behind the corner and stabs in the dark. So, sir, he who deprives me of my legal rights by open means, is always entitled to higher respect than he who seeks to accomplish the same end by deception and trickery. I hold that whatever opposition is due to the Will not proviso, whatever resistance it demands, is doubly due to this scheme of smuggling a sovereign State into the Union. Very probably this will be set down to the account of faction. It is the fashion so to denounce whatever is said by any Southern man, which argues truth to his section of the Union."

The Senator from Alabama is now in favor of the compromise; but in this speech he showed what sort of things compromises have been to the South. He then denounced them all, and the proposed compromise of Mr. CLAY in particular:

"The great error, Mr. President, into which the Senator from Kentucky has fallen, and the one to which may be traced much that is wrong in his judgment, and all that is weak in his argument, is in supposing that there must, of necessity, be a compromise. The Constitution itself is a compromise, and a compromise with a compromise is something unheard of in law, and unknown in equity. If the people of the North will not abide by a compromise deliberately made, and created by common consent into the paramount law of the land, what hope can we have that any less solemn covenant will restrain them in future? We want no compromise. A bond has been executed, and we are willing to abide by its terms. If we are to go on compromising away provision after provision of the Constitution, it is better that it should be abrogated at once. In point of fact, it is a nullity, or, rather, to speak more correctly, it is powerless for protection, and potent only when it comes to aid Northern aggressions."

Here he says, that the Constitution is a nullity and something worse, because it is actually an instrument in the hands of the North by which the South is oppressed. "Let me illustrate my meaning," he says, and he illustrates as follows:

"The majority claim a given power, (no matter how extravagant, and no matter whether it relates to slavery or not,) the minority deny the existence of any such power. After months, or it may be years, of fierce struggles and contentions, it is accorded to, and one half is given up. In a little while another contest is begun for the remainder. Another compromise follows, and another half is yielded; and so on, until the stronger party gets all it demands. Sir, I want no compromise of this sort. I stand upon the Constitution. If a reckless and unprincipled majority choose to violate that instrument, there is a remedy sharp and severe, it is true, but just and inevitable in its application."

"What, Mr. President, have we to compromise? What have we demanded? What favor even have we asked? Tell me, you who talk of compromises, what is it that Southern men ask at your hands? Nothing, sir; nothing. Humbler even than Lazarus at the rich man's gate, we have appealed to you neither for charity nor sympathy. What we have once given up, we have never sought to reclaim. Whatever burdens the Constitution imposes, we are willing to bear. Beyond this, no man ought to go, and no freeman will go."

"I have had occasion to say so much in my short service here of the Union and its value, of the wrongs to which we are subjected, and the appropriate remedy for them, that it is with the utmost reluctance I again approach the subject. The Senator from Kentucky has favored us with a bloody and disastrous picture of disunion, and the Senator from Michigan, a short time afterwards, in a carefully prepared speech, followed in the same lugubrious strain."

Mr. CASS. There was no preparation on the subject. The remarks never occurred to me until the moment they were uttered.

Mr. CLEMENS. Well, that is a small matter. What I mean to assert is, that both of those Senators endeavored to impress upon the country the belief that war must follow on the heels of disunion. Both of them, no doubt, believe that such is the case; but in my deliberate judgment all that is fancy merely. I cannot see why war should follow a separation. On the contrary, I think the good sense of both nations would teach them that if they must part, it had better be after the manner of the Patriarch of Old, and that each should say to the other, 'Let there be no strife. I pray thee, between me and thee, nor between thy herdsmen and my herdsmen, for we be brethren.' But if it should be otherwise; if war must come; if civil discord and paternal strife should mar the beauty of the land, the responsibility must attach not to those who maintain the right, but to those in whom the dictates of justice have been silenced by the robber's instinct."

"I warn them that bloody pictures will scarcely frighten us from our propriety. We mean to defend our rights in all contingencies, and consequences must take care of themselves."

You see, sir, the Senator was not to be frightened by bloody pictures of disunion. At this time he held them in profound scorn and contempt. But turn to his last speech, which he delivered the other day, and you will see what a sombre pencil he uses in the same line. Then, again, speaking of the Farewell Address of Washington, he used this language:

"It is the constant practice of those who are seeking to oppress us, both in Congress and elsewhere, to descend with much pathos upon the Farewell Address of Washington, and to commend to our consideration his last advice to his countrymen. Sir, the memory of that great man should be like the fabled tree in the islands of the East, within whose shadow no unclean thing will harbor. His name should be a forbidden word when anything mean, or base, or selfish, is to be accomplished. Least of all should it ever be quoted to sanction meditated tyranny. He won an immortality of renown by resistance to oppression. His glory had its birth in sympathy for the wronged, and owed its brightness to rebellion. If he were living now, his whole history leaves no room to doubt on which side of this great controversy he would be found."

The President's message, transmitting the constitution of California to the Senate, was transmitted on the 13th of February. On the 20th of February, on the question of reference, the Senator from Alabama addressed the Senate. It is a labored effort to prove that California cannot be admitted into the Union, consistent with the Constitution. Mr. CLAY had submitted his compromise resolutions on the 29th of January, and on their character the Senator remarked as follows:

"After all the reflection which he [Mr. CLAY] has been able to bestow upon the subject, aided by the resources of his long experience, and his great familiarity with difficult questions in trying times, he has been able to suggest no remedy which does not recognize the right of aggression on the one side, and demand an unconditional submission on the other. He has submitted for our consideration a series of resolutions dignified with the name of 'a compromise,' but which, like most other compromises between the weak and the strong, is little better than a cloak to hide from the public gaze a hideous wrong." * * "He comes forward now with a compromise which concedes everything demanded by the North, and proposes nothing for the satisfaction of the South but the reassertion, in less solemn form, of rights already guaranteed and admitted."

On the 8th of May, the Committee of Thirteen made their report. The Senator from Alabama immediately attacked it. He affirmed that the report and the resolutions offered by Mr. CLAY on the 29th January, were the same in purport; and on this ground he rebuked Mr. MANCUM, for intimating an acquiescence in the compromise measures:

"I ask," he exclaimed, "in all sincerity, and with an anxious desire to be corrected if my impressions are erroneous, what is this report but a repetition of those resolutions? Where is there a solitary deviation from them in any vital point? The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] has been consistent; he has abided by his original plan; and those of us who denounced it then, cannot support it now, and claim the merit of consistency. 'To do so, would be giving the lie direct to the declarations we then made.' * * "The Senator from North Carolina speaks of liberality!—of the propriety and necessity of liberality! Sir, the Constitution is not a thing about which we are at liberty to exercise that very commendable quality. It is not in my power to exercise liberality here. I have no right to trifle with my sworn duties. I am not here to compromise away the provisions of the Constitution."

See with what sternness and consistency he vindicates the rights and honor of the South. Not content with defending his own position, he attacks the enemies of the South, as he supposed them to be, who were willing to surrender her rights and honor. But he was not content to assail the Senator from North Carolina alone. No, sir; he turned upon the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Foote] also, and portrayed his inconsistency exactly as I am doing now to him, [Mr. CLEMENS.] He took all the speeches of the Senator from Mississippi, and convicted him of the grossest inconsistency, and as Mr. Foote understood him, denounced him as a traitor. Previously, when cooperating in the great cause of the South together, he had paid a very high compliment to the Senator from Mississippi, which I will read. He and Mr. Foote had been attacked by some letter-writers whilst standing forward as the gallant leaders of the South. They were the Diomedes, sir, in that contest, although we had a Ulysses, and stood in the foremost rank of our combatants. On the 11th of February, in the debate on the petition presented by Mr. HALE praying that the Union should be dissolved, the Senator from Alabama said:

"But recently I noticed that some small-fry politician, whose name I do not remember—some minnow in the waters of Pennsylvania politics—electrified his little auditory by the declaration that he had just as much respect for Wilmot as for CLEMENS or FOOTE. I hope the Senator from Mississippi will survive this assault, and that he will not drown himself in despair. I venture even to hope that he will not be silenced by it. The South has yet much need of my honorable friend. His genius, his talents, his energy, his readiness to defend the right, his fearless denunciations of the wrong, his unrivaled powers of sarcasm and invective, are each and all familiar acquaintances, with which I should be very unwilling to part at a crisis like the present."

There was a crisis occasioned by the pretensions of the North to exclude us from all of our territory, and these Senators stood side by side, denouncing Mr. CLAY and Mr. BENTON, and all those in the South who were in favor of the admission of California into the Union, with her anti-slavery constitution. But when Mr. FOOTE went for the admission of California, and supported the report of the Committee of Thirteen, the Senator from Alabama stood out against him manfully, and arraigned his consistency. If I had known of these speeches when Mr. Foote assailed me the other day, I might have read them as my best defence, for then I should have better shown his inconsistency and treachery. The Senator from Alabama denounced the compromise as a "shameless surrender," not a compromise, and the dismemberment of Texas, which it proposes, in the following strain:

"It is well the Senator [Mr. Foote] informed us that he had no regard for consistency."

When a man says he has no regard for consistency, it is very much like what Dogberry says of writing himself down an ass. There may be a want of consistency, perhaps, without fault; but to say that he does not regard consistency, is a proof of gross moral deficiency:

"He proposes now to cut off ten degrees of latitude from the State of Texas—enough for three free States—which we have his authority for saying will be infallibly subject to the Wilmot proviso. He proposes, further, to tax us ten or fifteen millions of dollars for the privilege of making them free States, and adding to the vast power now threatening to crush us; and then, by way of adding the most galling insult to the deepest injury, he demands that we accept this outrage as compensation for the admission of California."

He denounced also the admission of California, and shows Mr. Foote's inconsistency on this point; and in reply to certain letter-writers, who had said that Mr. Foote's national reputation would not allow him to be ultra, he observes, as follows:

"It may not be amiss, however, to say a few words of this thing called national reputation. It is something I value very lightly. We all know a process by which any of us may secure it. It is not even beyond my grasp. I should only have to turn traitor to my convictions of duty, and abandon the interests of the South, to change entirely the notes of that whole pack of curs who are now yelping at my heels. Sir, I want no national reputation, purchased at such a price. I spurn it, as I would any other foul and loathsome thing."

It is not at all surprising that Mr. Foote should consider the above language as charging him with being a traitor. In conclusion, he speaks in the following strain of Mr. Foote, and his position, that we should take the compromise as the best we could get:

"I have now shown that every feature of this compromise when taken separately has met the strong and decided disapproval of the Senator from Mississippi. What healing virtue there is in tacking them all together, I confess myself wholly unable to comprehend. Not long since he declared that the admission of California would dissolve the Union in six months.

"A few more words, Mr. President, and I am done. I am told I ought to take this bill because it is the best I can get. Sir, I do not know that; but if I did, the same argument might be urged with equal force in favor of unconditional submission to any wrong ever perpetrated by the strong against the weak. Good God, sir! has it come to this, that an American Senator is to ask himself not whether a measure is unjust, iniquitous, and oppressive, but whether it is the best he can do? Not whether he will consent to wear chains at all, but whether the links are to be round or square? Not whether he will bare his shoulders to the lash, but what is the color of the cow-hide with which they are to be inflicted? Sir, when I consent to ask myself such questions, I hope the walls of this Capitol will fall upon me and crush me. When I stop to inquire into the degree of oppression, rather than the fact, I shall feel that degradation has reached its lowest deep, and existence is but the privilege to be infernal."

This is proud and noble language, worthy of a true Southern man and a Southern Senator, on the great question whether the people of the South were to be turned out of a domain richer than Ormus or the Ind. Alas! where is he now? Upon his charging upon Mr. Foote his inconsistencies, and virtually calling him a traitor worthy to have the Capitol crush him as a base, vile thing, unworthy to live and scarcely to die, Mr. Foote, with his usual adroitness, turned round and charged him with abolition affinities, precisely as he [Mr. CLEMENS] did towards me the other day, when he drew his picture of the scene in the Senate Chamber. Now, here is his answer to Mr. Foote, which I will give as the best answer I can make to his charges against me:

"The Senator says he will not respect the propriety of his course until he finds himself in company with Free Soilers and Abolitionists. Ah, sir, is that the rule by which he judges of the right and wrong? Does he propose to inquire who is for a measure and who against it, before making up his mind as to its justice? Sir, he ought to bear in mind, that some of those with whom he is now acting are not altogether free from the same taint. It may, it will be, that on the final vote I shall find myself in company with some of those he has mentioned; but if he does not understand the reason, I can explain it to him in a very few words. They demand the Wilmot proviso direct: the bill the Senator favors only proposes to give it them covertly. They demand one half of Texas; and the bill only gives them a little more than one third. They demand that fugitives shall not be given up: the compromise only throws around the master the shackles of a trial by jury. Hence their opposition. Mine arises from the fact that too much is conceded. The Abolitionists propose to enslave us at once; the compromise arrives at the same end by a more circuitous route. I shall resist both; but, if the truth must be told, I prefer the direct to the indirect attack."

Mr. President, when the bill admitting California into the Union finally came up on its passage, the Senator from Alabama entered a protest, not a speech; he called it a protest against her admission. He fought to the last, and although vanquished, he held his proud crest still higher, breathing defiance to our foes. He then reiterated his objections to the bill as strongly as he had done before, and assailed the Senator from Michigan for his new doctrine of squatter sovereignty in terms of great severity, and told him he had been deceived as to his views in Alabama, and had been the instrument of deceiving others. He had supported his views in his construction of the Nicholson letter as consistent with the rights of the South. He concluded in the following solemn strain:

"Mr. President, other Senators have spoken of the probable action of the States they represent upon the passage of this bill. I do not know what Alabama may do. That her action will be characterized by wisdom and firmness, I have not the least doubt. I am not here to dictate to her what she ought to do. I am the servant, not the leader of her people. Whatever they do, I shall do in despite of Executive menaces, and of all the bloody pictures other hands may exhibit to our view. Born upon the soil of the State while it was yet a Territory, we have grown up together. Time after time she has committed her interests to my hands. Again and again she has trusted and promoted me; and I recognize no allegiance to any power higher than I owe to her. When she commands, I will obey. If she determines to resist this law by force, by secession, by any means, I am at her service, in whatever capacity she desires to employ me. If this is treason, I am a traitor—a traitor who glories in the name."

Is not that in a noble strain? I have no doubt that there is not a heart here which does not glow at this high and brilliant annunciation of self-sacrifice and devotion to his native State. He continues:

"I know, sir, that the President, in his late letter to the Governor of Texas, has assumed the right of the Government to coerce a sovereign State. I deny that there is anything in the Constitution—anything in the laws—to justify such an assumption. The law is plain and clear—individuals, not States, are the subjects of coercion. If any State should secede, let him, if he dare, attempt to employ military force to compel her return. He will soon find, in that event, that he has more than a State to deal with, and that the powers and resources of this Government are wholly inadequate to the tasks he has undertaken. The Federal doctrine, that all power lodges here, has been somewhat widely repudiated; and the denial of State sovereignty, either North or South, can bring to the Executive nothing but contempt."

Mark how he speaks of State sovereignty—that to deny State sovereignty, can bring nothing, either in the North or the South, but contempt. I will afterwards show you that he denies that the States are sovereign at all, in the speech delivered here the other day. He continues:

"I hold that my first allegiance is due to my State; and that treason cannot be committed against any power while obeying her mandates. Such opinions have recently been unsparingly denounced; but let me warn those who resort to such weapons, that they may be used by more than one side. There are more traitors than traitors to the Union."

There are more traitors than traitors to the Union! He means, I suppose, that those Southern men who supported these compromise measures on this floor, and asserted that if a State should secede, it was treason—were traitors themselves. Mr. CLAY had made this assertion, and even expressed the hope that they (the secessionists) might meet a traitor's doom. It was in reply to that position, I presume, that the Senator from Alabama uses this language:

"Sir, I impugn no man's motives who lets mine alone. I question the purity of no man's conduct who does not provoke retaliation by assailing others; but when men intimate that obedience to the mandates of my State is treason, they must expect to hear in return that, in my opinion, there are those in this land, and about this Capitol, who would sell their souls to Satan for the privilege of having a hand in president-making, cabinet-making, and the subsequent distribution of the public offices. There are those who would sell their Saviour, were he again upon earth, for half the price that Judas accepted to betray him."

Denunciations, sir, are weapons that two can use, and it any one expects to employ them against me with impunity, he miscalculates sadly the character of the man he assails."

"I have said all I think it necessary to say. I did not mean to argue the bill here. I shall, if necessary, argue it at home."

Sir, he did argue it at home. He became a submissionist, and did all he could in his State to quell the proud spirit of resistance he himself had contributed to raise in Alabama. After all these brave and sounding words and fiery resolves, he repeats the course he had pursued in Alabama, and here in the Senate advocates the compromise from beginning to end—goes for submission utter and entire—and denounces those who will not follow his downward path in submission as traitors. He at first denounced on this floor those who went for the compromise as traitors, whilst he held forth defying resistance; now, he wheels round and denounces those who propose only to follow his brave counsels of resistance as traitors, because they will not bow to an ignominious surrender—to a gross outrage, as he characterizes it, they are traitors. What can censure from such a man be worth? In denouncing others, he but denounces himself, and stands forth self-convicted.

I come now to the speech delivered here the other day, the last in my series of proof. I will show you what Mr. JERRY CLEMENS, Senator from Alabama, is, in December, 1851. I have read to you the first paragraph of his speech. In a subsequent part he approves the whole compromise. He says:

"Mr. President, it was not my fortune to agree with those patriotic men who framed the compromise. I doubted its healing effects; but even when differing from them, I respected their motives, and felt that Rome, in its proudest day, never assembled a Senate of loftier intellect or purer patriotism."

Why, I thought he had denounced those Senators who voted for the compromise as men who would sell their souls to Satan for office—who would sell their Saviour for half the price Judas received. He continues:

"But now, sir, when the work is accomplished, and its good effects are visible everywhere, I bow to their superior wisdom, and ask only the humble privilege of assisting to maintain it."

It is indeed an "humble privilege." In my estimation, rather than make the speech which proclaims it, the Senator from Alabama had better, like Cranmer, have put his hand into the flames and have it burnt to ashes.

He formally denounced the admission of California as unconstitutional. In this speech he now affirms that it was constitutional. I will read what he says:

"The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. RIGGS] says the admission of California was unconstitutional, because the Constitution provides only for the admission of States. If I had not heard this same argument advanced at home by able men than the Senator, I would not hesitate to pronounce it pure nonsense. The Constitution provides only for the admission of a State. True; but it is the act of admission which makes it a State. Some thirty-three years ago, you, sir, were sitting in a convention in the then Territory of Alabama, framing a constitution upon which you asked to be admitted into the Union. Did you imagine that you were committing the folly of asking that which Congress had no right to grant? Suppose some wisecrack had risen in that convention and informed you that the Constitution provided only for the admission of States—that Alabama was a Territory, and therefore could not be admitted into the Union—what would have been your opinion, not merely of his constitutional learning, but of his common sense? From that period to this, with only a short intermission, you have held a seat in this body. Has it ever occurred to you that you were here unconstitutionally, and that in the very act of taking your seat you violated the instrument you were sworn to support? There are but three cases, I believe, in our history, in which States have been admitted into the Union—Vermont, Kentucky, and Texas. All the rest came in as Territories; and if the position of the Senator from South Carolina be correct, the early fathers of the Republic, the framers of the Constitution, knew nothing of the fundamental law they established. But, sir, while the Senator from South Carolina denies to California the right to come in because she was not a State, he yet contends, with that remarkable consistency which characterizes many of the opponents of the compromise, that Missouri did have that right. Now, sir, the only difference between the two cases is, that Missouri had a regular territorial government, and California never had. But they were both Territories nevertheless, and neither could ever become anything else without the assent of Congress. The people of both adopted a constitution, and sent it here for approval; when approved, they both became States, but not until then."

Now here is his affirmation that California was constitutionally admitted, because, as he argues, she was admitted precisely like other States; they were Territories as she was, and the act of admission made her a State. All the other States, Alabama included, were Territories when they were admitted; so California, being a Territory when she was admitted, was admitted as constitutionally as they were admitted. There is the argument. I have in my hand the act of Congress admitting Alabama as a State into the Union. The truth is, Mr. President, and you know it very well, no Territory has ever been admitted into this Union as a State. In every instance the course pursued has been this: Congress passes an act authorizing the people in the Territory to adopt a constitution and form a State. The people get together, make a government, adopt a constitution, put the machinery of their State government into operation, and apply here for admission as a State. They are States, and they come in as States. Under the clause of the Constitution authorizing Congress to admit new States into the Union, their territorial garb is thrown away, and they come here robed in all the dignity of free and independent sovereignties. Alabama, the Senator's own State, was admitted in that way. The act of Congress passed for the admission of Alabama, begins thus:

"That the inhabitants of the Territory of Alabama be, and they are hereby authorized to form for themselves a constitution and State government, and to assume such name as they deem proper; and that the said Territory, when formed into a State, shall be admitted into the Union upon the same footing with the original States in all respects whatsoever."

They agreed to form themselves into a free and independent State, and they did so. So it was with Missouri. Here is what the people of that State did:

"We, the people of Missouri, inhabiting the limits hereinafter designated, by our Representatives in Convention assembled at St. Louis on the twelfth day of June, 1820, do mutually agree to form and establish a free and independent republic, by the name of the State of Missouri; and for the government thereof do ordain and establish this constitution."

Missouri was a State; Alabama was a State; and all the other States that have arisen from Territories were full sovereignties when they came to be admitted into the Union. How was it with Missouri? Missouri adopted a constitution in 1820. She was not admitted, I think, until 1822. Where was she, then, before she was admitted into the Union? She had all her officers in full operation—her executive, her legislative, and her judicial departments of her government organized. And was she not a State? could she not have remained a State? Was not Alabama a free and independent State, as her constitution affirms, when she applied for admission? It must have been so, or she could not have been admitted. I hesitate not to say that if she had not been a State it would have been a gross violation of the Constitution to have admitted her into the Union. You, Mr. President, never supposed, when you came her to represent her as a State, that she was a Territory? No, sir. The Senator from Alabama does not know the birth of his own State.

How could the admission of Senators here make a State? Unless the people had previously organized the State, no act of Congress admitting them as States could make them such.

I think, then, the argument of the Senator in favor of the constitutionality of the admission of California, is not of great potency. It is based upon a denial that the people of his own State, were the authors of their own rights and liberty. They owe their existence, not to their own volition, but to others. Let him glory in such a parentage for his State, if he pleases. He must be hard driven for an argument to sustain his new position. After affirming that the admission of California was unconstitutional, he resorts to these expedients to prove the contrary, and to nullify his own previous arguments.

As I said, he now supports the whole compromise. So staunch is his adherence, that he even says he would not repeal the law by which the slave trade is prohibited in this District, under the penalty of emancipation. But the dangerous feature in this bill—all that the South cared to oppose—was the usurpation on the part of Congress, of the power to emancipate the slaves in this District. That is what we objected to in that act. Yet the Senator says he would not vote to repeal this act. He is willing to let the legislation by which slaves are emancipated in this District remain to be applied in future, by the same course of reasoning, to the States. He is certainly enamored of the compromise.

He becomes, too, an apologist for the manner in which the fugitive slave law is executed. Here are the meek, and comely, and honeyed words in which he apologizes for the execution of the act. He says:

"That it has been occasionally evaded in other places, is true; and that in some instances it has been resisted by violence, I do not deny. But that was to have been expected. It is so, and always will be so, of all laws in a country like ours. No man ever believed, when this law was passed, that it would be executed in every instance. No man ever believed so of any law framed by the wisdom of man. It is sufficient that this law has been executed as faithfully as other laws. Occasional failures by no means warrant any one in asserting that it is in effect a dead letter. There is not a law upon our statute books which is not sometimes evaded. There is not a year in which criminals do not escape the penalties prescribed by the law against murder; but that is no reason for the repeal of the law. It is better that the life of the citizen should be imperfectly protected than not protected at all. So in the present case, if the law does not secure the certain return of every fugitive, it does as much as any human law can do; and I can construe in but one way the conduct of that Southern man who desires to continue agitation about it."

His assertion is, that the fugitive slave law has been enforced as well as any other law—as laws against murder or theft. Now, what is the fact? Just about the time when the Senator was delivering his speech, the Christiana rioters were having a glorious triumph in their unanimous release from its penalties. The murder of a citizen of Maryland had been consummated under this very act, in the State of Pennsylvania. Yet, when in my speech I ventured to suggest that not a hair of the head of one of these Christiana rioters would be touched, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRODHEAD] rose and intimated that I cast an aspersion on his State, and broadly maintained that his State was true to the Constitution, and would enforce the laws. He feared rather that the innocent would be punished than that the guilty would escape. How stands the final result? Every one of the Christiana rioters have been released from all penalties, and released in such a form and manner, that I saw in the "Union," the other day, a letter from a Virginian, inquiring whether there was such a thing as getting back a negro at all in the free States? The writer said that there were a great many people in his part of the country who desired to recapture their slaves, but from the appearance of things, from the release of those men in Pennsylvania, it seemed to be hopeless for a Southern man to attempt to reclaim his slave. That was published here not a week ago; and yet the Senator from Alabama says, that this law has been enforced as well as other laws. Did he ever hear of other laws where a prisoner was rescued in a court of justice in open day, with all the guards and sanctity of justice around it? Does he know of any law of the land where those who go to enforce it are deliberately murdered? and every criminal, without any exception, from Massachusetts to Pennsylvania, have all gone free of punishment? Why, it seems that just in proportion as time develops the fact, that the South has obtained nothing by this compromise—that so far from having gained anything, she has only earned contempt—the sympathies, the feelings, and the support of some Southern men seem to cling closer to its support. The worse it is, the more they love it. The more they are degraded, the more they humble themselves. I see that, according to the census returns for the year ending the 30th of June, 1850, upwards of 1,000 fugitive slaves escaped to the North from the South. That amounts to $8,000,000 worth of property at the market value of slaves. Maryland alone has lost 379 fugitives during that year. How many fugitive slaves who have thus fled to the North, have been rendered up? Whenever one is recovered by stealth, by connivance, or assent, (for some of them come back of their own accord,) it is heralded forth as a great proof of the enforcement of the law; but how many of these 1,000 slaves has the law restored? Not one, probably, in one hundred. Yet, just at this time, when the census is printed, showing our condition in relation to this law—when the North everywhere treats this feature of the compromise with demonstrations of defiance and contempt—it is at this time, that a party rallies in the South, and goes for the compromise! the compromise! everything for the compromise! As my distinguished predecessor said in his dying moments, "The South! the poor South! God knows what is to become of her."

I have read to you extracts from the speeches of the Senator from Alabama, to show that he not only advocated resistance and secession, but said, that if a State seceded he would dare the Government to interfere. Now, what do you think he says in the last speech of his, to which I refer? He denies the right of secession; and he denies it first on authority, and then for reasons. I will read his authority:

"We are told that authority for the right of secession is to be found in the resolutions of '98 and '99. So many men have sought to sustain absurd theories by referring to these resolutions, that I presume we ought not to be surprised even at this last and weakest attempt of all. Nor in this age of progress is it to be wondered at, that the wisdom of the disciple should far outrun that of the teacher. John C. Calhoun and George McDuffie examined the resolutions of '98 and '99 for the right of secession, and could not find it. They found, as they thought, nullification; but nullification is itself a denial of secession. We all know that some of the ablest efforts made by both of these great men, was to establish that nullification was the rightful remedy."

Of Mr. Calhoun he said:

"(Sir, I believe I loved him better while living, and respect him more now, than any one of those who make use of his name to give respectability to treason. He was never a secessionist, and I am authorized to say that the proof will before long be given to the world. He regarded the attempt of a single State to go out of the Union as madness, and died in that opinion.")

Here is the assertion that the resolutions of 1798 and 1799 do not sanction secession. Now, I understand there is a proposition in circulation in the other branch of Congress amongst members to print the Virginia report and resolutions of 1798—'99, and by circulating them, let the people judge for themselves what are the doctrines they contain. Will the Senator from Alabama subscribe or not? If he will not subscribe, I will subscribe a thousand copies for him, if he will promise to frank them to his constituents, and by this means he will show his sincerity and put down secession. Sir, they do advocate secession, because they do advocate State sovereignty. They deny what he affirms, that the Supreme Court of the United States is the arbiter between States. They affirm, that each of the States has a right to construe the compact of the Constitution existing between them, and construing the compact, they have a right to determine whether it has been violated, and the mode and measure of redress. These are the positions assumed in the report and resolutions of 1798 and 1799.

The only difference between the Republican party and South Carolina in 1832 and 1833 as to nullification, was this: The Republicans in Virginia and elsewhere maintained that the resolutions of 1798 and '99 affirmed secession; we maintained that they affirmed nullification. They said we could not remain in the Union and nullify its laws; but that each State had a right to secede from the Union as a consequence of her sovereignty. There is really no incompatibility between these positions. They perfectly harmonize. If a State has a right to nullify, it has a right to secede.

But the Senator says that John C. Calhoun was not an advocate of secession; and that it will soon be proved by somebody that he denied this right in a State. On page 301 of Mr. Calhoun's late work, the Senator from Alabama, if he ever reads it, will find these words:

"That a State, as a party to the constitutional compact, has a right to secede, acting in the same capacity in which it ratified the Constitution as a compact, cannot, with any show of reason, be denied by any one who regards the Constitution as a compact. This results, necessarily, from the nature of a compact where the parties to it are sovereign, and of course have no higher authority to which to appeal."

These are the words of Mr. Calhoun, holding his dying pen; and if he had said anything else he would have belied all his doctrines and his intelligence itself. Let the man step forth who will prove that Mr. Calhoun was opposed to secession. I hope the Senator will soon bring him out into open day. That man does not live who will venture to attempt to prove that Mr. Calhoun falsified his own great work by contrary opinions; and, mark what I say, if he does live, and ever had any such design, he will never lift his head to assert it. Mr. Calhoun was surrounded by too many friends when living, to be abused by his enemies when dead. He has sons who regard the honor of their parent, and who will protect his name and his reputation. And let the slanderers stand forth and dare to say, that in defiance of his whole course of life, and his last written work, he denied the right of a State to secede; let them come forth if they dare.

Sir, neither Mr. Jefferson, nor Mr. Calhoun, nor Mr. McDuffie, nor the resolutions of 1798 and 1799, deny the right of secession. I will not say anything about Mr. Jefferson. His most malignant enemies—the consolidationists and abolitionists—dare not attribute such a sentiment to him. John Quincy Adams, holding the pen and describing Mr. Jefferson's opinions, could not so stultify himself as to do otherwise than acknowledge that Mr. Jefferson maintained the right of a State to secede from the Union. Consolidationist, as he was, he had too much integrity and honesty to falsify the opinions of a dead statesman. These are the authorities of the Senator from Alabama; and now let me come to his reasoning, which is just as conclusive as his authorities. He says:

"I apprehend, Mr. President, that a great deal of the misapprehension which exists in relation to this matter grows out of the too loose application of the word 'sovereign' to the States. We speak habitually of sovereign States; as if their sovereignty was absolute and unquestioned. But there is no such thing as a sovereign State within the limits of this Union. The Constitution has expressly denied it."

There is assertion broad and strong. "There is no such thing as a sovereign State within the limits of this Union," says the Senator from Alabama. "The Constitution has expressly denied it." Where? In what clause? I have read the Constitution all over, and can see no expression in it denying the sovereignty of the States, or the consequent right of secession. If there be any such clause in the Constitution, let it be produced. It will settle at once the whole question.

The Senator continues:

"The Constitution has taken away from the States some of the highest and most essential attributes of sovereignty. They cannot coin money; they cannot emit bills of credit; they cannot punish treason against themselves; they cannot go to war; they cannot enter into compacts with other States; nay, more: the Constitution provides that the Constitution and laws of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. Now, who ever heard of a sovereignty with the laws of another power superior to its own within its own limits?"

Because the States have surrendered the power of coining money, and making war and peace, to the General Government, therefore he argues that the States are not sovereign. Are not alliances, offensive and defensive, common among nations, in which they agree to make war and peace together? Did any one ever suppose that they renounced their sovereignty by such agreements? As to coining money, it has been gravely proposed in Europe that all nations should consent to one coinage. That is a mere matter of commercial convenience. But there is one test, the power to punish treason which the Senator says the States do not possess. If this is true, I will give up the question; and I will never again open my mouth in defence of State sovereignty and State rights. If a State cannot punish treason, it is clear it cannot be sovereign. The very definition of sovereignty is supremacy. Its duty is protection. The duty of the citizen is allegiance; and treason is a violation of allegiance. If, therefore, a State cannot punish treason—if it cannot punish a violation of allegiance—there cannot be such a thing as State sovereignty. But how stands the matter? The Senator is altogether mistaken in his assertion. His own State constitution has a clause punishing treason, which I will read to the Senate. In the constitution of Alabama, the sixth article and fifteenth clause reads:

"Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against it, or aiding or adhering to its enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or his own confession in open court."

There is the constitution of his own State, upon which she was admitted into this Union; and that constitution distinctly affirms that she has a right to punish treason, and therefore that she is sovereign. I have not looked into the constitutions of all the States; but in the constitution of Missouri, (13th article, 15th clause,) there is the same provision; so in the constitution of Kentucky, (6th article, 2d clause,) Indiana, (article 11th, clause 2d,) Louisiana, (title VI, article 90,) Mississippi, (article 7, clause 3,) Florida, (article 16, clause 4,) Arkansas, (article 9, clause 2,) Texas, (article 7, clause 2,) Wisconsin, (article 1, clause 10,) and last of all, Iowa, (article 2, clause 16.) Every one of these—all of them new States—have been admitted into the Union with this clause in their constitutions, in which they assert the right of punishing treason, and, consequently, the right to the allegiance of their citizens, of which treason is the violation. Look at the construction these facts afford. Congress, at every successive act approving of these constitutions, indorses the right of the States to punish treason; and therefore affirms the sovereignty and independence of the States. That is in perfect consistency with the Constitution of the United States. That Constitution says, that treason against the United States shall consist in levying war against them, and in adhering to their enemies, and giving them aid and comfort. "Their enemies"—enemies of the States. The Constitution itself describes the States as sovereigns, against whom treason may be committed in their united capacity. And when, afterwards, Congress approved the State constitutions, in which treason is defined, and a power is expressed to punish it against the States, it is in perfect harmony with the Constitution of the United States; and both the Constitution of the United States and the constitutions of the States which have been admitted into the Union, go to show that the States alone are sovereign. The Constitution does not say that treason may be committed against the Government of the United States or the Union. No, sir; it is against the States that treason can alone be committed, whether acting together in the Union, or as separate States. It is in being "their enemies," and giving their enemies aid and comfort, that the offence consists. Therefore I say that the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of all the States teach but one doctrine, contrary to the affirmation of the Senator from Alabama, and that doctrine is, that the States are sovereign. His own State punishes treason. If he can nullify the constitution of his own State, and cast her out of existence—if he can degrade her into a wretched dependency on this Government, which can be trampled upon with impunity, and dares not lift the front of resistance—let him do it, and take all the glory of such an achievement. For my part, it is my glory as well as my privilege that I am a citizen of a sovereign State—the State of South Carolina. To her, as the Senator from Alabama formerly said of his State, I owe my allegiance. With her I live; and at her mandate I trust I am prepared to die. And I care not what consolidationist, whether from the North or South, dares to assail her in the exercise of her sovereignty, so far as I am concerned, with the little power I possess, at her command I will resist, and resist to the last. She is my sovereign; and she at least will not tolerate the doctrine that treason cannot be committed against her. Let any man within her limits take up arms against her, in obedience to any power—there stands her statute; her incorruptible judiciary; her Executive armed with the sword of authority to protect her sovereignty. Their fate will be death.

Mr. President, I am exhausted; and I presume that the Senate must be fatigued from the length of time I have tried its patience. I have here before me many other points in which the inconsistencies of the Senator from Alabama are exposed, and which I promised to expose. I must leave them to be read and compared, as they are contained in his last speech. His inconsistencies with respect to the dismemberment of Texas—his beautiful picture of the blessings of the Union—and his tragic delineations of the horrors of disunion, I must leave unquoted. I turn, in conclusion, to a public matter which has lately come to light in Alabama. It has been in the public prints for many weeks, and I have not seen it contradicted. I take it to be true. It may go far to explain the inconsistencies of the Senator from Alabama.

It is well known that when that Senator was elected to his seat in this body, he was elected by the Whigs. The Democratic party, by an overwhelming vote, I learn, nominated his competitor, Mr. Fitzpatrick, to be their candidate for the Senate. The Democratic party had a majority in the Legislature; but a few of the gentleman's friends, in combination with the Whigs, elected him to his present place. I hold in my hand the statement of Judge Buford. You know the man, Mr. President; and a more honorable and truthful man does not live within the confines of Alabama or the South. I know him also, sir; and I suppose his veracity and honor would not suffer in comparison with that of any man on this floor. Here is a statement he has placed before the world. He was a Senator at the time in the Alabama Legislature:

"On the night before the final balloting by the Legislature for a United States Senator, a caucus of the Whig members was held, at which it was announced that Mr. Clemens had verbally pledged himself, if elected, to support the Administration of General Taylor. Objections were made by members of the caucus to receiving a verbal pledge, and it was insisted that it should be reduced to writing. Accordingly, soon after, a small strip, containing a written pledge, was brought in the caucus by Mr. Rip Davis of Limestone. It was nearly or exactly in these words:

"If elected to the United States Senate, I promise to support the administration of General Taylor."

JERE: CLEMENS.

"It was further stated by Major Buford that he had seen the written pledge, and that it was represented and believed to be in Mr. Clemens's handwriting."

Another Whig member of the Alabama Legislature, who was in the caucus, comes out with a statement confirming that of Mr. Buford. Here is what he says:

EUFULA, (Ala.), January 29, 1851.

GENTLEMEN: Your note of this date is received. For my own part, I never recognized any obligation of secrecy in relation to the Clemens's affair. I supported Mr. Clemens (as is well known) with extreme reluctance, and with the reservation of the right to make any explanation of the reasons I might think proper; and besides, I heard of no pledge of secrecy in the caucus. I would not, however, have volunteered my testimony in this matter, nor have given it, but for the reasons stated in your note.

On the eve of Mr. Clemens's election to the United States Senate, there was a caucus of the Whig party; I did not contemplate attending, but went at the urgent request of my colleague, Mr. Gardner. When we arrived we found the caucus organized—the only question was whether the Whigs, as a party, should support Mr. Clemens. Some of his friends gave verbal assurances that he would, if elected, act with the Whigs, and said they were authorized by him to say so. It was objected that it was unsafe to support him without a written pledge, and the caucus being unable to agree, a member from Greene stated that a pledge could be obtained, and called on Mr. Rip Davis, from Limestone, who rose and produced a small scrap of paper, and read it as near as I can remember, in these words:

"If elected to the United States Senate, I pledge myself to sustain General Taylor's administration."

JERE: CLEMENS.

"A good many gathered around to inspect the paper, and some seemed to question its being in Mr. Clemens's handwriting, when Mr. Davis said in substance, 'I pledge my honor as a gentleman it is Mr. Clemens's hand, and written by himself.'"

"The same gentleman who had called on Mr. Davis, as above stated, then took the paper, and holding it up, read it out in a louder tone, and in the same words."

Yours, &c. PAUL MCCALL.

Mr. President, I have done. The Senator from Alabama, without any provocation on my part, thought proper to arraign me before the Senate. I stated what my purpose was—that I would discredit the witness—that I would show that the authority which has presumed to impugn the honor and character of other Senators was not so high as to injure the reputation of any man, much less that of a Senator. I have fulfilled my task. It has been most reluctantly performed; but I could not avoid performing it. I have only acted on the defensive; and while I deprecate the necessity which has compelled me to this course of action, I, at the same time, must render my profound acknowledgments to the Senate for the courtesy which has afforded me the opportunity of doing what I have done, in the vindication of truth and justice.

Mr. CLEMENS. Mr. President, yesterday about two o'clock, when at my room, I received the following formidable missive:

SENATE CHAMBER, February 26th, 1852.

DEAR SIR: I have been directed by the Hon. Barnwell Rhet to inform you that to-morrow he will address the Senate upon the subject of personalities between you and himself, and that he has given notice this morning to the Senate, to that effect.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant,
R. BEALE, Sergeant-at-Arms.
Hon. J. CLEMENS, United States Senator.

If that notice had been given to me alone, I might have supposed that the Senator from South Carolina intended to give me an opportunity of preparing to die with decency. But, not satisfied with directing this note to me, I see from the morning papers that he gave, in addition, a formal notice to the Senate, to the galleries, to the reporters, and the letter-writers, in order that they might all appear on the present occasion, to witness his triumph and my discomfiture. It may happen, that the vain self-conceit which has induced him to overlook the means of assault, has equally induced him to undervalue those of the defence. The Senator from South Carolina has manifested an ignorance of the history of this compromise; an ignorance of my position in relation to it; he has drawn deductions from it so false, and so unjustifiable, that I can attribute it to nothing but that blind and rabid spirit of disunion which prevents him from seeing things, that, to other men, are as apparent as the noon-day sun. He says that I called him a knave and a traitor. No man who heard that speech of mine, ever entertained such an opinion, but himself. The allusion to knavery was an illustration, not a charge. But, if I had done so, the subsequent course of that Senator justifies me in adding the epithet of coward, to that of knave and traitor.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator must not use expressions of that kind.

Mr. CLEMENS. I am not out of order, Mr. President, and I intend, if I can, to keep within the rules of order; but there are some things which I must say, and which I will say. If, when he believed that the charge of knavery was pending against him, he brooded over it, and took more than two months to prepare himself for a deliberate speech to answer it on the floor of the Senate, he does not deserve the character of a man. No man, with the feeling of a man in his bosom, who believed such a charge was pending against him would have sought redress here. He would have looked for it elsewhere. He submitted to it then, and now comes here not to ask redress in the only way he should have sought it, but, as he says, to discredit the witness; and how does he propose to do it? He begins with the evidence of two of his co-conspirators. Now, in my State, they are not allowed by law to give evidence for one another. But that is not all. He has evaded the point. He has sought to create a false impression upon the Senate and the country. He has endeavored to make this Senate believe that I intended to charge them with open applause of his conduct. I meant no such thing; and every man knew that I did not mean it. But will he deny that they went to him and shook hands with him, congratulating him upon the speech that he had made?

Mr. RHETT. I deny it.

Mr. CLEMENS. Mr. CHASE, did you not do it?

Mr. CHASE. I do not remember whether I shook hands with the Senator or not. I know I expressed then, as I express now, my concurrence in the State rights doctrines of the speech, but not in its disunion sentiments; just as when the Senator from Alabama, the other day, delivered an eloquent speech upon another subject, I expressed to him my gratification and, so far as I concurred in it, my approval of it. And now I ask the Senator from Alabama upon what authority he says I am a co-conspirator with any one upon this floor?

Mr. CLEMENS. I will attend to one at a time. Now, what witness is discredited? The Senator from South Carolina alleges that there was no such congratulation. Before the words are cold upon his lips, the Senator from Ohio contradicts him. Where, then, is the witness who is discredited? Here are witnesses who saw it. The Senator from Ohio does not pretend to say that he did not do it. He does not pretend to say anything of the sort. He says merely he does not remember shaking hands. But, sir, it is no extraordinary thing—it is nothing extraordinary for the Senator to be upon friendly and intimate terms with those whom he professes extreme anxiety to destroy. I am not saying anything disrespectful of these gentlemen. The point which I mean to make is this; that the Senator from South Carolina at home denounces them as traitors—that everywhere throughout the land he has assumed the ground that they were worse than Arnolds—and yet in the face of all this, we find his personal relations with them so warm that they can afford to go and congratulate him upon his efforts in favor of disunion. I do not mean to say there is anything discreditable to them in that association; but what I mean to say is, that it is extraordinary—that it is something which is strange to the country, that this uncommon intimacy should exist between them. But that is not all. The Senator has given us another illustration of his facility for forming such associations. In that very speech which he made here in the course of his reply to Mr. Foote, he let out the fact that he had private consultations with Thomas H. Benton behind one of the columns of this Capitol in relation to Mr. Foote's conduct towards Mr. Calhoun. Who, in South Carolina, would have believed that BARNWELL RHETT would have gone to Thomas H. Benton to consult about the interests of John C. Calhoun?

There was another witness whom the Senator did not call to the stand—possibly, because he is not here—possibly, because his testimony would not have suited him quite so well—and that is the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] who was actually so delighted that he left his seat and came over to this side of the House to listen to the whole of that harangue. Yet the Senator from South Carolina now attempts to create the impression upon the country that I have made a false charge against him; of being on terms of intimacy with these gentlemen. There is one thing which we all know: if there is no concord of sentiment between him and them, there is a concord of sentiment between him and those whom they represent. We all know that the Abolitionists have declared that the Constitution of the United States is "a covenant with death and an agreement with hell;" and we all heard the Senator utter sentiments equally as atrocious.

He says that I calumniated him. Calumniate him! It is beyond the power of man to do it. How, though, did I calumniate him? What word did I utter, which he has not avowed on the floor of the Senate? Did he not get up, and proclaim himself a traitor? And does he call it calumny, when I charge him with being precisely what he has avowed that he is? Is that the standard by which he measures calumny? Sir, I could say nothing worse of him than he has said of himself; I never intended to say anything half as bad. It is true, he is a man for whom I never had any fancy. It is true, I never sought his acquaintance. It is true, that when he came here, I refused to extend to him that courtesy which is usually extended to new Senators, and refused to be introduced to him. That is the reason he does not know me. But I never intended to make his character nor his conduct the theme of discussion in the Senate. The subject is too small. I have heard or rather I have read, a description by one of the English poets, of a certain period of darkness when vipers crawled among the multitude, "hissing, but stungless;" and I knew well that it applied to him. We can hear his hiss, but there is no sting about him.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me, I will suggest that it is impossible for him to-day to answer the speech of the Senator from South Carolina; and, with his permission, I will move that the Senate do now adjourn till to-morrow, twelve o'clock.

Mr. CLEMENS. There is another matter to which I wish to advert, and I will give way in ten minutes.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. CLEMENS. There is a matter which has been brought into this controversy which I choose to notice now. I do not wish that any false impressions shall go abroad to the country. The Senator from South Carolina has ventured to do here to-day what no man in Alabama was ever found bold enough to do in my presence. The retailer of a slander is as bad as the originator. Indeed, he is, if possible, worse than he who originated it. He has charged me with owing my election to a corrupt bargain with the Whig members of the Alabama Legislature, and he has read a letter from Jefferson Buford and Paul McCall on the subject. I choose to notice them now. If he had only waited two days longer, I think the probability is he would never have ventured to make the charge; because the refutation of it has gone home so strong, that no man would have dared to repeat it. The fact is this, that so far from making any pledge, that slip of paper to which Mr. Buford alludes contained no expression of opinion at all. Sir, you were in Montgomery at the time. Although of course you cannot be presumed to know what was done by the Whig party, yet your conduct from that day to this has manifested that you did not believe one word of the calumny. It was a simple note of authority to Mr. Davis to state what my opinions were. He was a warm, personal friend, perfectly familiar with those opinions; and I told him, who had heard them repeatedly, to state what they were. There is now a member in the other House who was a leading member of that Legislature—one of the individuals whom it is alleged knows most about it—who has, again and again, authorized me to pronounce it a calumny. Mr. Davis has again and again authorized me to do the same. A number of other gentlemen have written letters denouncing it, or authorizing me to do so. But the Senator brings up that dead carcass on the floor of the Senate, and makes it a charge against me to account, as he supposes, for what? An abandonment of Democratic principles? Who charges me with having done so? Who alleges that I have ever given a vote that was not according to the strict Democratic faith? Who charges me with not being in full association with every Democratic member of this body?

I promised long ago, and it is a duty which I mean now to discharge, that if ever I could meet a man in Alabama who would allege that thing to be true, I should brand him as he deserved; and I want the Senator to mark now what I have to say on the subject, and apply it. The charge, emanate from whatever quarter it may, circulated by whom it may, is a foul lie, unmitigated and unredreemed by the slightest semblance of truth. I am now willing to adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 27, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BOUNTY LANDS.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order, the special order of the House, being a bill entitled "An act explanatory of the act approved September 23, 1850, entitled, 'An act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States,'" as amended by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that the pending question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BOWIE. I move that the special order be postponed, with a view of going into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move to postpone it to a day certain?

Mr. BOWIE. Until Monday next.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I would suggest to the gentleman that the bill which is the special order, is now upon its passage, and that one vote will dispose of it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Can the special order be postponed without unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. JONES. It took two-thirds to make the special order, and it seems to me that a majority cannot defeat that special order by postponing it. There is another special order coming up on Tuesday, and if a majority are disposed to get clear of that special order, they can, by postponing it from day to day, defeat the rule which required two thirds to make it a special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it has been the practice of this body to postpone a special order from day to day, by the vote of a majority of the House, and that that is one form in which the House may dispose of a special order. The rule is, that "when a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lie on the table, for the previous question, to postpone to a day certain, to commit or amend," &c.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It certainly defeats the object in making a special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the bill may be recommitted or postponed to a day certain.

Mr. JONES. I call the attention of the Chair to his decision made on yesterday about this very bill, as reported in the Globe of to-day:

"The SPEAKER. That would be the regular order of business for the morning hour, but for the fact that the special order reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon yesterday, becomes the regular business, from day to day, until disposed of. Being a special order, it overrides all other business."

The SPEAKER. It overrides all other business, and is to be disposed of under the rules of the House.

Mr. JONES. I think it takes two-thirds to postpone it, as it is a special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the practice of the House has been different, and that a majority may postpone, from day to day, as a majority may commit. That is the recollection of the Chair respecting the practice of the House.

Mr. OLDS. I raise another point of order, and it is this: that Friday being set apart as private bill day, by a special rule of the House, that special rule overrides the special order of the House, and that it is in order to move to take up the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The special order certainly sets aside all the standing rules—that in relation to private bill day as well as the others. There can be no question, in the mind of the Chair, upon that point; and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OLDS. If then a special order sets aside all the standing rules of the House, how can it be made without one day's notice?

The SPEAKER. The House suspended, by a vote of two thirds, all the rules of the House, and made this a special order, to be disposed of under the rules of the House, and it must affect private bills as well as other business.

Mr. OLDS. In order to test this question, I move to go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that motion to be out of order.

Mr. OLDS. From that decision I take an appeal.

Mr. HALL moved to lay the appeal on the table.

The question was taken, and there were, upon a division—ayes 81, noes 52.

So the appeal was laid upon the table.

The question recurred upon the motion to postpone the special order until Monday next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair that it is in order for a majority to postpone from day to day, and thus defeat a special order made by two thirds of the House.

Mr. HALL. Is it in order to move to postpone the bill indefinitely?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HALL. Then I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. There is a prior motion, however, and the Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the rule upon the subject. It is as follows:

"When a question is under debate, no motion shall be made but to adjourn, to lie on the table, for the previous question, to postpone to a day certain, to commit or amend, to postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they are arranged."

The motion of the gentleman from Maryland to postpone to a day certain must, therefore, take precedence of the motion submitted by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. HALL.]

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. As a point of order, I suggest whether the subject-matter must not be under discussion, before the House, before a motion to postpone at all—either to a day certain or indefinitely—can be entertained. If the subject-matter be before the House, I shall move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced that the special order was the first business in order, and it is now before the House and under discussion. It is under discussion, according to the meaning of the rule.

Mr. MARSHALL. Then I move the previous question on the passage of the bill, which, as I understand it, takes precedence of the motion to postpone.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair be correct in its decision that the bill may be postponed to a day certain, the effect of the previous question will be to bring the House to a vote upon the postponement.

Mr. MARSHALL. And also upon the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. And upon the passage of the bill, in case the motion to postpone is disagreed to.

Mr. MARSHALL. The rule gives a motion for the previous question precedence over a motion to postpone to a day certain; and under the decision of the Chair, therefore, the motion for the previous question must take precedence of the motion to postpone.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It not only takes precedence, but, if I understand the rule, it cuts off the motion to postpone. Until the last Congress the previous question cut off a motion to refer; but by a special rule it was provided that the previous question should not cut off a pending motion to refer, but that the House should first vote upon the motion to refer and then upon the amendments, and everything else is cut off except the motion to refer and the amendments.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That is clearly right. There can be no doubt about it.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Tennessee turn to the rule upon which he relies?

Mr. JONES. Rule 46 is the one that prescribes the order of motions. The 50th rule provides that "The previous question shall be in this form: 'Shall the main question be now put?' It shall only be admitted when demanded by a majority of the members present, and its effects shall be to put an end to all debate, and bring the House to a direct vote upon a motion to commit, if such motion shall have been made; and if this motion does not prevail, then upon amendments reported by a committee, if any, then upon pending amendments, and then upon the main question."

Now, the previous question cuts off, as I think, everything except what is specified in that rule.

The SPEAKER. The direction of this whole matter must depend upon the correctness of the decision of the Chair, that this bill may be postponed. If the Chair is right in supposing that it may be postponed to a day certain, the Chair thinks it follows, very clearly, that the previous question will bring the House to a vote upon the postponement, just as it would bring the House to a vote upon a motion to commit.

Mr. JONES. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the 50th rule provides that a motion to commit shall not be cut off by the previous question. A motion to commit was cut off by the previous question until the adoption of this rule on the 5th of August, 1848.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee remember what has been the practice of the House with reference to debate upon a proposition to postpone to a day certain?

Mr. KING, of New York. It is not in order.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order upon a proposition to postpone to a day certain, and hence it is not enumerated among the votes that the House must be brought to under the operation of the previous question. The Chair is very certain that he has decided this question in accordance with the practice of the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would suggest to the Chair that this whole discussion is out of order. The previous question has not been sustained, and until it is sustained the House cannot decide upon the effect of that motion. I submit that this whole discussion is premature, and out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remark, that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] does not involve the one raised by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] or the operation of the previous question.

The Chair decides that this special order may be postponed to a day certain. The gentleman from Tennessee differs with the Chair, and appeals from this decision, and the question before the House is on that appeal.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee to rely upon the ground that the previous question would cut off the motion to postpone, but until it is put and sustained, the effect of it cannot be inquired into by the Chair or the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is right in that.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand the point decided by the Chair is, that this special order may be postponed to a day certain, by a majority vote of the House. That is the point, and not the effect, of the previous question, as supposed by the gentleman from North Carolina. If that be correct, then a majority of the House can undo what two thirds have done.

Mr. JONES. At the time I took the appeal from the decision of the Chair, the gentleman from Kentucky had not moved the previous question. I will now withdraw my appeal, and if the previous question is sustained, and the Chair then decides that the motion to postpone takes precedence of the main question, I shall renew the appeal.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, then moved the previous question.

The previous question received a second, on a division—ayes 84, noes 60—and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Several MEMBERS. What is the effect of the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the effect of the previous question is to bring the House first to a vote upon the motion to postpone till Monday next.

Mr. JONES. From that decision I appeal, and I ask for the reading of the 46th and 50th rules, together with the note to the 50th rule.

The Clerk read the rules, as follow:

46. "When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lie on the table, for the previous question, to postpone to a day certain, to commit or amend, to postpone indefinitely; which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they are arranged."

50. "The previous question shall be in this form: 'Shall the main question be now put?' It shall only be admitted when demanded by a majority of the members present; and its effect shall be to put an end to all debate, and bring the House to a direct vote upon a motion to commit, if such motion shall have been made; and if this motion does not prevail, then upon amendments reported by a committee, if any, then upon pending amendments, and then upon the main question."

Note to the 50th rule:

"The previous question was recognized in the rules established April 7, 1789, and could be demanded by five members, (the parliamentary law places it in the power of two members—one to move, the other to second.) On the 23d December, 1811, it was placed on a footing with the yeas and nays—that is, at the command of one fifth of the members present. It remained so until the 24th February, 1812, when the rule was changed to its present form of a majority. According to former practice, the previous question brought the House to a direct vote on the main question—that is, to agree to the main proposition, to the exclusion of all amendments and incidental motions; but on the 14th January, 1819, it was changed to its present form—first to embrace pending amendments, and then the main proposition."

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, moved to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays upon that motion; but they were refused.

Mr. STUART demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. SREYENS, of Pennsylvania, and STANTON, of Tennessee, appointed.

And the question being put, it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 83, noes 65.

So the appeal was laid upon the table, and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

BOUNTY LAND BILL.

The question then recurred on the motion to postpone the special order till Monday next.

Mr. CLINGMAN, on that motion, demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. GENTRY. If the motion to postpone prevail, will this business come up again on Monday morning?

The SPEAKER. It will come up as a special order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Do I understand the Chair, that the business will come up on Monday next as a special order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so decided.

Mr. JONES. Will it not be in order, on Monday next, to move to suspend the rules, in order to introduce resolutions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it comes up.

The question was then taken on the motion to postpone, and resulted—yeas 77, nays 99—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. John Appleton, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Bartlett, Bowie, John H. Boyd, Brooks, Lewis D. Campbell, Caskie, Chandler, Chastain, Clark, Cottman, Currie, Daniel, Dean, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Hamilton, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Haven, Hebard, Hubbard, Horsford, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Jackson, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, McEacham, Meade, Murray, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Peaslee, Penningman, Rantoul, Robie, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Schoolmaster, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Snow, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Sutherland, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Toombs, Townshend, Wallace, Washburn, Welch, and Wildrick—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Allison, William Appleton, Babcock, Thomas B. Bayly, Bell, Bennett, Bissell, Breckenridge, Brenton, Briggs, Burrows, Bushy, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chapman, Churchwell, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dunham, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Giddings, Goodenow, Gorman, Grey, Grow, Hall, Hascall, Hendricks, Houston, Hunter, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, George W. Jones, George G. King, Kurtz, Landry, Letelier, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morrison, Murphy, Newton, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Price, Richardson, Robbins, Savage, Schermerhorn, Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Thurston, Walbridge, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Williams, and Yates—99.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I desire to ask, if it will be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I make that motion, and I ask the indulgence of the House to submit a single remark, in order to explain why I make it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That question is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot submit his remarks, except by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I object; and move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CHASTAIN. If I am cut off from giving my reasons, I will not submit the motion.

Mr. SMART. Will it be in order to move to have the eighth section of the bill read?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order.

Mr. SMART. I hope that it will be read. I understand that it neutralizes entirely the effect of the fourth section, and cuts off the militia and volunteers ordered out by the Governors.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Read the whole bill.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I ask if this is not the same bill which has been printed in the Congressional Globe? Gentlemen can refer to it there.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CABELL. Then I object to its being read.

Mr. JONES. I think we have a right to demand that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Tennessee is correct.

The bill was then read through, as heretofore published.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the question now upon the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that the bill do now lie upon the table, and upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 100, nays 84—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Andrews, John Appleton, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Bartlett, Beale, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Briggs, Brooks, Buell, Burrows, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Conger, Curus, Daniel, George T. Davis, Dean, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Evans, Fitch, Fowler, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Giddings, Goodenow, Grow, Hall, Harper, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Heim, Hubbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Hunter, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, McCorkle, McDonald, McQueen, Meade, Henry D. Moore, Murray, Newton, Orr, Outlaw, Peaslee, Penningman, Perkins, Phelps, Price, Rantoul, Robie, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoolmaster, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Smith, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Toombs, Townshend, Walbridge, Wallace, Washburn, Wells, and Wildrick—100.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Willis Allen, Allison, Babcock, Thomas B. Bayly, Barrere, Bell, Bennett, Bissell, Bowie, Breckenridge, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, Bushy, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Caldwell, Thompson Campbell, Chastain, Churchwell, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Cottman, John G. Davis, Disney, Dockery, Dunham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ewing, Ficklin, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Gihmore, Gorman, Grey, Hamilton, Hendricks, Houston, Thomas Y. How, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Kurtz, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Molony, John Moore, Morrison, Murphy, Nabers, Olds, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Polk, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, Savage, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, St. Martin, Strother, Taylor, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alexander White, Williams, and Yates—84.

So the bill was ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. FOWLER. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. WALSH. Upon that motion, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was then taken, and the motion to reconsider was ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. BOWIE. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion for a single moment.

Mr. BOWIE. I will withdraw for the gentleman from Virginia.

THE COMMISSION UNDER THE CONVENTION WITH BRAZIL.

Mr. BAYLY. Mr. Speaker, there is a bill upon the Speaker's table which it is indispensable that we should pass immediately, or it will be too late to have any effect. I ask that the House will indulge me for a single moment. I think I can show that it is a bill against which there can be no possible objection.

A MEMBER. What is your bill?

Mr. BAYLY. That is precisely what I want to state. [Laughter.] Under our convention with Brazil, the period of the existence of the Board for adjudicating American claims will expire this week. In consequence of the conflicting testimony, over the wide extent of Brazil, there are some of the claimants who have not been able to perfect their testimony. The whole fund is not distributed, and the commissioner's salary is provided for four months longer than the period at which his duties by law terminate. The President recommends, and the commissioner himself says it is but justice, that this period should be extended, and that is all we ask.

Mr. TOOMBS. I ask permission to say, that there is already an appropriation made to pay the salary of the American commissioner to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. BAYLY. Yes, his salary is already provided for; and the only question is, whether his time shall be given for the investigation of these cases. If it is not, these American claimants will be the losers, and the Court of Brazil are the gainers.

Mr. SCURRY. Will not the consent of Brazil have to be obtained?

Mr. BAYLY. It will not.

Mr. GENTRY. If I understand the gentleman's explanation, if we do not pass the bill, we shall have to pay the salary of the commissioner for four months for doing nothing. But if we do pass it, we shall have to pay nothing in addition, and the commissioner will be at work during the four months in the performance of his commission.

Mr. BAYLY. That is its effect.

The joint resolution extending the time for the continuance of the commission under the convention with Brazil, was taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not understand the object of extending the time.

Mr. BAYLY. It is because the time is limited, and after it has expired, the commissioner cannot adjudicate another claim. There are claimants who, from the extent of country over which they have been obliged to collect their testimony, have not been able to complete it in time.

Mr. FLORENCE. How many gentlemen have presented claims which have not been adjudicated?

Mr. BAYLY. There are a few more. I do not know the precise number.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is not the number thirteen?

Mr. BAYLY. I think it is.

Mr. FLORENCE. How many have been presented in all?

Mr. BAYLY. I do not know the precise number.

Mr. TOOMBS. I am told that these claimants are very anxious to have this time extended, and I hope in justice to them it will be done.

Mr. FLORENCE. I merely asked the questions for information, and I am entirely satisfied.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, was read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. BOWIE. I will inquire if there are not some bills on the Speaker's table which were reported from the Committee of the Whole last Friday, and which have not been acted upon by the House?

The SPEAKER. There are several.

Mr. BOWIE. Then I will move that those bills be disposed of before we go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It requires no motion; they came up in order, the gentleman having withdrawn his previous motion.

The first bill in order was Senate bill 42, being a bill entitled, "An act for the relief of Richard Chaney and others," upon which a motion was pending to refer to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The question was taken, and the bill was so referred.

The next bill in order was House bill 97, being a bill for the relief of James McCormick, assignee of Robert A. Parker, upon which a motion was pending to recommit to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The question was taken, and the bill was recommended.

The next bill in order was the bill for the relief of Cornelius Hughes, of Tennessee—the question being, "Shall it be engrossed and read a third time?"

The bill was read through, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, was read a third time and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. There are some three or four bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. They have been fully discussed, and I hope they may all be taken up and passed together.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CARTTER. I object.

The following House bills coming up in order, were then severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, were read the third time and passed, viz:

99. A bill for the relief of Francis Tribou.

100. A bill for the relief of James Wright, jr.

101. A bill for the relief of John Kerbaugh.

102. A bill for the relief of Ichabod Weymouth.

103. A bill for the relief of John McIntosh.

135. A bill for the relief of Charles S. Mathews, Charles Wood, and James Hall.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. CHURCHWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled, "A bill granting public lands to the several States of the Union, for the purpose of establishing a permanent and efficient system of common schools;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. C. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed.

Mr. COBB. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GENTRY. I hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] will see the propriety of withdrawing his motion to refer it to the Committee on Public Lands. The bill relates to the public domain generally—to all the States of the Union; and the Committee of the Whole, having charge of the interests of the Union generally, it seems to me that such committee is obviously the proper one to which it should be referred.

Mr. COBB. I think not. The Committee on Public Lands have that subject now before them. The question being first taken on the motion of Mr. CHURCHWELL, it was agreed to.

So the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COBB, at a subsequent stage of the proceedings, entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

SUNBURY AND ERIE RAILROAD.

Mr. CHANDLER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled, "A bill granting public lands to the State of Pennsylvania, to aid in the construction of the Sunbury and Erie Railroad in Pennsylvania;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. C. I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed.

Mr. GAYLORD. I move that the bill do lie upon the table.

The question was first taken upon the motion of Mr. GAYLORD, and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurring upon the motion of Mr. CHANDLER—

Mr. HART moved to amend that motion, by substituting the Committee on Public Lands, for the Committee on the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The question upon referring to the Committee of the Whole upon the state of the Union must first be put, under the operation of the positive rules of the House.

The question was then taken on the motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given.

Mr. DANIEL. I object; and insist upon the motion that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will withdraw his motion for a moment, and allow me to present a memorial from the workmen who have been engaged upon the Capitol.

Mr. DANIEL. It can be presented under the rules.

Mr. WALSH. They want their statement to be heard.

Mr. GENTRY. Hear the workmen.

Mr. WALSH. If gentlemen will hear the statement, they will grant relief, I have no doubt; and I hope it may be received and read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina insists upon his motion to go into Committee of the Whole upon the Private Calendar.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. DANIEL, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar, (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair.)

GENERAL JAMES C. WATSON.

The CHAIRMAN. The first bill in order for consideration is House bill No. 136, being a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of General James C. Watson, late of the State of Georgia.

Mr. DANIEL. There is a standing objection to that bill, and it must go over, as a matter of course, under the 30th rule of the House, which provides that on the first and fourth Friday of each month the calendar of private bills shall be called over, and the bills to the passage of which no objection shall then be made, shall be first considered and disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. It will go over under the rules.

The following bills on the Calendar, coming up in their order for consideration, were objected to, as indicated below, and lie over under the rule:

House bill No. 137, being "A bill for the relief of Osborn Cross, of the United States Army," which provides that he shall be credited, in his account with the Government, the amount of certain Treasury notes, which were stolen from him in the city of New Orleans in the year 1842. [Objected to by Mr. MACE.]

Senate bill No. 67, being "An act granting relief to John A. McGaw, of New York;" by which the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay him the sum of $1,400, being the amount due him for demurrage of the ship Charlotte, while in the service of the United States. [Objected to by Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky.]

House bill No. 147, being "A bill for the relief of the Monroe Railroad Company and their securities;" which provides that the petitioners be relieved from three duty bonds, amounting to $7,205 14, given as securities for the laying down certain railroad iron, imported at Savannah, in the year 1841. [Objected to by Mr. SACKETT.]

House bill No. 149, being "A bill for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Bartlett Hinds;" by which it is provided that they shall receive five years' full pay of a lieutenant, as commutation under the resolution of the Continental Congress. [Objected to by Mr. AVERETT.]

The following bills, coming up in their order, were considered; and no objection being made, they were laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that they do pass:

House bill No. 139, to authorize the issuing of a register to the brig "America."

House bill No. 140, a bill for the relief of William S. Payne; by which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to refund to him the sum of $50, being the amount of fine imposed upon and paid by him for neglecting to renew the license of a vessel.

House bill No. 142, to authorize the issuing of a register to the ship "Kossuth."

Senate bill No. 88, entitled, "An act for the relief of Rufus Dwinel; by which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay him the sum of $13,037 72, with interest from the 4th of March, 1837, for damages sustained by him on account of a change in the terms of a contract for carrying the United States mails."

House bill No. 148, for the relief of Andrew Smith; by which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay him the sum of $100, in satisfaction of two Treasury notes, specially indorsed to his order, but which were lost in their transmission through the mail, and subsequently paid to other persons, on a forged indorsement of his name.

The next bill that came up in order for consideration, was House bill No. 150, for the relief of Robert Nelson, providing that he may, by way of exchange, convey certain lands in Missouri to the United States, and be permitted to enter other lands in lieu thereof.

The bill having been read through,

Mr. SCURRY moved that the committee rise.

Mr. FOWLER demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. INGERSOLL and STANTON, of Tennessee, appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 29. No quorum voting. [Cries of "Call the roll!" "Call the roll!"]

Mr. FOWLER. Less than a quorum can order the committee to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not require a majority to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration various bills on the Private Calendar, and had instructed him to report to the House the bills of the House, Nos. 139, 140, 142, and 148, and Senate bill No. 88, with a recommendation that they do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to proceed to pass upon the bills in gross?

Mr. FICKLIN. Let them be acted upon singly.

Mr. APPLETON, of Maine. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE called for the yeas and nays upon that motion; but they were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were, upon a division—ayes 93, noes 48.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer a resolution asking for information.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House what inquiry and report has heretofore been officially made upon the propriety of establishing some safe depôts for the preservation of the gunpowder of the United States, and whether the establishment of depôts for this purpose is required for the public service.

Mr. TOOMBS objected, and the resolution was not introduced.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled, "a resolution to extend the time of the commission under the Convention with Brazil;" which then received the signature of the Speaker.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana, by unanimous consent, presented three several resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana; which were referred and ordered to be printed, viz:

Resolutions asking that a naval depôt and navy-yard be established at New Orleans, for the construction and repairing of United States vessels;

Resolutions asking that a post-office be established on Grand River, on the mail route between Donaldsonville and Opelousas; and Resolutions asking a donation of the military reserve at Fort Jesup, for a seminary of learning.

Mr. SACKETT. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. Will the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Orr] allow me first to introduce a set of resolutions from the Legislature of Pennsylvania?

Mr. ORR. I must insist upon my motion.

Mr. HEBARD called for tellers on the motion to adjourn; which were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER and STANTON, of Tennessee, appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 50.

So the House adjourned to meet on Monday next at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, which was instructed, by a resolution of the Senate, to inquire into the expediency of establishing a naval depot at Key West, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to provide for the establishment of a naval depot at Key West; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to which was referred the petition of the legal representatives of Joseph Ford, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

DISTRICT JUDGE OF ALABAMA.

Mr. CLEMENS submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the salary of the judge of the United States court for the district of Alabama.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was received by Mr. M. P. FILLMORE, his Secretary, communicating that the President of the United States had approved and signed, the 27th instant, an act to admit the hermaphrodite brig "Sylphide" to registry; also, the joint resolution extending the time of the commission under the convention with Brazil.

BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read a first and second times by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

An act for the relief of Cornelius Hughes, of Tennessee;

An act for the relief of Francis Tribou;

An act for the relief of James Wright, jr.;

An act for the relief of John McIntosh;

An act for the relief of Ichabod Weymouth; and

An act for the relief of John Kerbaugh.

The following bill from the House of Representatives was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of Claims:

An act for the relief of Charles S. Mathews, Charles Wood, and James Hall.

COMPROMISE RESOLUTION.

The resolution submitted the 4th of December, in relation to the adjustment of questions growing out of the institution of domestic slavery was again taken up.

Mr. CLEMENS. Mr. President, I observed a paragraph in one of the papers of this morning, lamenting that the Senate had been disgraced on yesterday by the use of "coarse and scurrilous" language. When the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. RHETT] gave a formal notice to his peculiar friends to be present on that occasion, for the purpose of hearing him indulge in personalities; when he caused a notice to be served upon me, that it was his purpose to engage in that particular species of amusement, I hope that neither he nor they supposed the war would be confined entirely to one side. It is to be regretted, doubtless, that the invitation to my funeral should have turned out to be so sad a mistake. The guests were all present; the preacher was at his post, and proceeded regularly with the ceremonies; but then came the resurrection, and now, instead of the triumphant notice which the Senator no doubt anticipated, we have a short paragraph deprecating the use of personal language in the Senate. If that Senator had taken the course he ought to have taken, there would have been no syllable uttered by me to which the greatest stickler for propriety could object. If he had confined himself to attacks upon my political course; if he had commented in language, no matter how severe, upon what he chose to regard as my inconsistencies; or my abandonment of State-rights, I should have replied with perfect temper, and uttered nothing offensive to him or others. But when he went to the columns of a low and scurrilous newspaper to hunt up a foul and loathsome calumny; when he brought that calumny here, and sought to give it dignity and importance by parading it in the presence of the Senate, I did feel some degree of irritation, and gave the only answer it became me to make. For the language used I have no regrets; nor have I the least disposition to recall or explain it. Previous to that, he had said nothing which excited a feeling of anger. If he imagined he was saying anything new—anything which had not been heard from every stump in Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi—he knows but little of the contest through which the Union men of the South have recently passed. His mode of assault was too familiar to me to cause annoyance; I have met it again and again, and expected to meet it here.

If I had been permitted to conclude on yesterday, I should have said other things quite as unpleasant as those to which he has already listened; but a night's reflection has satisfied me that enough has been said, and that however much he may deserve it, it does not become me to utter more. I shall, therefore, confine myself to a defence of that consistency he has arraigned, and in the course of my remarks, I shall endeavor to show that he knows nothing whatever of the subjects on which he has undertaken to speak. He promised in the outset to prove that, in 1850, I was a thorough State-rights man, and in December, 1851, (the date of my speech on Foote's resolutions,) I was a Federal consolidationist. To establish this, he quoted an extract from a speech of mine, which he either could not, or would not understand. In that speech the term "sovereign" is indeed applied to a State, and there is a denial of the right of the Executive to use force. It was based upon a letter of the President, in which he claimed the right to employ the military of the United States against Texas. I denied it, and said, "the law is plain and clear—individuals, not States, are the subjects of coercion." I had the law before me at the time, and meant only to assume the ground taken by General Jackson in the memorable nullification era. When South Carolina proposed to nullify a law of the land, General Jackson applied to Congress, and said, that the powers vested in him were not sufficient to subdue the forcible resistance of a State, and therefore he asked for the passage of a law to meet the emergency. The force bill was the result. So I held, and hold now, that the Executive has no power to resort to coercion in the event of resistance by a State, but Congress has, and Congress may at any time authorize him to do so. It will be difficult for the Senator to find any language of mine denying this right on the part of the law-making power of the Union. It is a right essential to its very existence. Take it away, and our Confederacy would be worse than the old Amphictyonic league. If there is no power to coerce a State, the new States might appropriate all the public lands within their respective limits. The Atlantic States might seize upon the revenues from imports. One State might block up the navigation of a particular river, and another abolish the collection of debts in the United States courts, or the punishment of offences against the United States laws. The Republic could not endure for a year unless Congress possessed the power of coercion. With a characteristic attempt at special pleading, the Senator has seized upon my use of the words "sovereign State," and thus seeks to convict me of inconsistency. Why, sir, in the speech to which he professed to be replying, I admitted the too loose use of these words. In common with every other public man in the country, I have often spoken of the States as "sovereign," and it is possible, as I have before said, that we have thus contributed to the errors which pervade certain portions of the country. The ordinary reader when he sees the word sovereign in the speech of a public man, will attach to it the meaning given by the dictionaries, and it will not always be present to his mind that when we so speak, we speak of a sovereignty circumscribed by the Constitution. I have again and again asserted, that some of the highest and most essential attributes of sovereignty have been taken away from the States; and who will dare deny it? The Senator from South Carolina has not ventured to do so. Of the many cases I enumerated, he has seized upon one which he takes to be the weak point, and labors to prove that I am mistaken in asserting a State cannot punish treason against itself. In the exultation of his fancied success, he adds, "if I am right in that, it is indeed true the States are not sovereign." Well, sir, I shall show that I am right, and that the Senator, in his ignorance of the Constitution, has made an admission fatal to his case. He enumerates, as conclusive of the question, certain States which have passed laws for the punishment of treason. Now, sir, I have not been guilty of the folly of asserting that a State may not call murder treason, and so punish it. I have not denied but that she may designate in her laws a riot as treason, or a forcible rescue as treason. But what I do say is, that a right to punish treason, as appertaining to sovereignty, is something which is absolute, uncontrolled, and unlimited. Any restriction whatever of the right is its destruction. There is one kind of punishment for treason a State cannot inflict. There are cases in which she cannot punish at all. One of the most common modes of punishing treason is by bill of attainder. The Constitution has expressly taken away from the States the right to pass bills of attainder. Here then is a restriction which, according to his understanding, as well as to mine, is a destruction of the right as an attribute of sovereignty. But let me give a stronger illustration. I read first from the Constitution:

"This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

I will suppose a case which has once occurred. I will suppose that Congress passes a revenue law which gives great offence to the authorities of South Carolina. The Legislature, sitting in the interior of the State, declares it a nullity, and arms a portion of the citizens to resist it by force. The officers of the United States in the city of Charleston call upon the citizens to aid them in the execution of the law. In obedience to the supreme law of the land that aid is given, and force repelled by force. Will any one pretend that for thus resisting the constituted authorities of the State by arms, a citizen could be rightfully punished for treason? They might hang him if they caught him—they might doubtless indulge in all those delectable amusements which the Senator painted for us on yesterday—but then it would be a question of might, not a question of right. If carried before any just judge, he would only have to point to the Constitution and then to the law he obeyed, to insure his discharge. No judicial officer, with a proper regard for his oath, would hesitate to declare that a State had no power to punish a citizen for obedience to the laws of the Union. The Constitution must first be destroyed. When that is done—when a successful revolution has enabled a State to resume the powers with which it has parted—then, but not until then, will the laws of the United States cease to be supreme, and obedience to them be punished as treason.

There is a tribe of constitutional exponents in our land who have learned by rote the words federalist, consolidationist, and submissionist, and who apply them indiscriminately to every one whose arguments they cannot answer. From such men I have nothing to expect but detraction, and to such men I do not address myself. I look to the calm, good sense of the people to rebuke the dangerous heresy that we have a national Government in name only, not in fact—a Government equally powerless for its own protection or the protection of the citizen—a Government which the whims or caprices of every petty State may at any moment dissolve, and involve the land in all the horrors of anarchy.

The Senator has read, with great seeming satisfaction, a declaration of mine, that wherever Alabama went I would go with her. Certainly, sir; I did use such language; and I repeat it now. But it by no means follows that I believe Alabama has a right to secede. It only follows that my affections are there, and whether right or wrong I shall go with her. Upon the same principle I would assist a brother or a friend if I found him engaged in a personal difficulty, without stopping to inquire into the cause of the quarrel. I shall do, as I have done, all I can to prevent Alabama from rushing on to her own destruction; but if those efforts fail, her destiny must be mine. I shall go, however, with my eyes open; claiming no right of peaceable secession, but asserting the right of revolution—a right to be enforced by the armed hand, and the armed hand only. The difference between the Senator and myself is, that I hope the time may never come when I shall be compelled to choose between the Union and my native State. Hence I have sought to remove all causes of bitterness, and to quiet that restless feeling of discontent which must ultimately lead to such painful results. The Senator, on the other hand, has been engaged in the opposite task of creating prejudices and exciting animosities where none before existed. I shall leave it for others to decide which best becomes the character of a patriot.

In his indictment against me, the Senator has included a resolution of inquiry which I had the honor to submit to the Senate in the performance of my duties here. This is a striking illustration of that Senator's peculiar mode of reasoning. Who, save the Senator himself, ever dreamed of attributing opinions to another, and proving it by a resolution of inquiry? In the very nature of things, such a resolution implies that we are in doubt, and want information upon which to base an opinion. But suppose I did believe at that time—as indeed I did—that the President had interfered in the affairs of California to a censurable extent, there is nothing in my present position at all inconsistent with it. The President denied it—my old friend, General Riley, denied it. The proof sustained them, and the prosecution was abandoned. I know of no one man upon whom a heavier responsibility rests for the admission of California than R. BARNWELL RHETT himself. The Journal of the other House will prove that if California is now a State, the Southern members of that body, including the Senator, are accountable for it. They had it completely in their power to defeat the appropriation bills entirely, or compel the adoption of the Senate's amendment, known as "Walker's amendment." If the Senator had merely resorted to the legislative expedient of making dilatory motions, and calling the yeas and nays, California would have had a territorial government, and thus all the angry discussions upon her admission as a State would have been avoided. A northern man (Mr. WALKER, of Wisconsin,) proposed a satisfactory settlement. The Senate passed it—the House rejected it, and the Senator from South Carolina, then a member of that body, made no effort at resistance. He who is now anxious to resort to violence and bloodshed shrank even from adopting a legislative expedient, unusual indeed and rarely to be justified, but still far preferable as a preventive, to revolution as a remedy. The people of California did not want a State government, for the support of which they would necessarily be loaded with taxes. They desired to be organized into a Territory, the expense of which would fall on us, not on them. They adopted a constitution and form of State government as a last resort, because they could adopt no other, and their necessities demanded a government of some kind. Upon the principle that we are responsible for acts of omission as well as commission, the Senator is chargeable with a full share of guilt for whatever wrong the admission of California may be supposed to inflict.

It is well known to you, Mr. President, that I have never justified the admission of California; and in that respect I have no inconsistencies to answer for. In the last speech I made upon the compromise, I stated distinctly and emphatically that my original opinions were unchanged; that I submitted to it because, among other things, resistance was a folly and a madness. Two of the most powerful Southern States had given overwhelming majorities for the bill. Did the Senator expect me to go home and preach the duty of secession from Tennessee and Kentucky—from Virginia, Maryland, Texas, Missouri, North Carolina—from all but the few States usually designated as the "cotton States?" Did he expect me to aid him in the establishment of a little Confederacy upon the Gulf, within whose narrow limits such men as the Senator might figure conspicuously? I resisted the passage of the law. When passed—and by the aid of Southern men who had as good a right to judge as I had—I submitted to a decision I could not prevent.

The Senator says I denounced the admission of California as unconstitutional. It will be difficult for him to find such language in any speech of mine. But suppose such was the tendency of my argument, was I to insist on that opinion as infallible in opposition to the opinions of so many Southern men older and abler than I am? My own construction of the Constitution would of course govern me, so long as I was called on to vote or speak in this Chamber; but when the matter had passed from us, when it became a question of submission or civil war, I was fully at liberty to distrust my own judgment, and to hesitate before I advised a resort to that last dreadful alternative. I trust that I am free from the arrogance of supposing that my judgment is infallible, and that no man can be an honest and incorruptible friend of the South whose opinions do not coincide with mine. I did not believe, and I would not say, that many of our best men (yourself included) were either traitors to the South or ignorant of the Constitution. I thought it quite as likely that I might be mistaken as that you were, and acted accordingly.

The Senator says, that at one time I counselled a dissolution of the Union. Not so. The very speeches from which he has read prove the utter falsity of the charge. On the 11th of February, 1850, in the speech from which he has read, I used this language:

"I know that to me individually there has been attributed a deliberate design to dissolve this Union. Great God! what have I to gain by such a course? I have no bitter enemies against any section, or against any party. I have no disappointed aspirations urging me on to desperate expedients. There is not in this broad land a single individual with fewer motives to disturb its harmony. I have friends, and warm ones, in all its parts. For a long time I commanded a New England regiment. For a long time I was associated with Northern men in all the scenes which make up the changeable drama of a soldier's life. Does any one suppose that I can contemplate with satisfaction the possibility of standing side to side with those by whom I have so often stood side by side as friends? The charge is a gross absurdity; but even absurdities may come to be believed by constant repetition."

•How was it possible for me to have used stronger language in repelling the charge of disunion? It seems to me that it would have been impossible to select words of plainer import.

Again, sir, I said:

"Much of this I cannot prevent; but when the charge is made here in my presence, that I am a factionist, or that those who act with me are so, I shall repel it in terms which admit of no double meaning. Sir, I do not believe that there is a single man in the entire South who desires disunion for itself."

Here I not only repelled it for myself, but for all who were acting with me. At that day I believed what I said. At that day I believed there was not a traitor to be found in the broad savannahs of the South. I regret that I have been compelled to change that opinion. In that respect I have been inconsistent; and if the Senator had based his charge upon that ground, I should have entered no defence. It is with pain and mortification I acknowledge there are those among us who have avowed not merely a willingness but an anxiety to level this fair fabric with the ground. I know that in the eyes of such men I have committed a deadly sin. But it is one of which I have not repented; and I now repeat, that as long as a hand of mine can be raised to prevent it, not one stone, not one atom, of that glorious edifice shall be removed.

Another extract, and I shall leave this branch of the subject. It is from my speech of the 20th of February, 1850, in reply to Mr. CLAY:

"The Senator is mistaken if he supposes he can say anything of the possible consequences of disunion which has not occurred to us. We have often manifested our sense of the evils of disunion, and never more so than at the present time. We do not mean to dissolve," &c.

After these emphatic declarations, made at all times, not only during the pendency of the compromise measures, but before their introduction; not made after it was ascertained that Southern men had voted for and sustained them, but before I could possibly know what course they would pursue, what right did any man have to suppose that I would advocate secession, both from the North and a large portion of the South? The truth is, that no man did believe it. No one at that day dreamed of disunion, save as a desperate remedy for intolerable oppression. None looked to it as a thing to be desired. It was contemplated by all with a shudder, although some of us certainly believed it might become a necessity; for whatever violent language may have been used by me or others, there was an excuse in the attending circumstances not now to be found. We came here claiming certain rights and privileges, which it was alleged had been denied us by the previous Congress, of which the Senator from South Carolina was a member. In that state of the case, smarting under what we believed to be serious and aggravated wrongs, it was not to be expected that the language employed in our speeches would be characterized by great moderation. In that speech of mine upon the Vermont resolutions, which has so delighted the Senator from South Carolina, I did comment, in strong terms, upon many acts of injustice which had been perpetrated upon the South. I took occasion to warn Northern men that they must not only pause, but they must retrace their steps. They did so. Previous to that time, every northern State, except Iowa, had instructed their Senators to vote for the Wilmot proviso. Before the session was half over, the proviso was dead. In some cases, the resolutions of instructions were repealed, and in others, those thus instructed took the responsibility of voting for territorial bills without it. We had no bill for the recapture of fugitive slaves. That Congress passed a bill in all respects such as the South demanded. We had been, ever since the date of the Missouri compromise, excluded from all territory north of 36° 30'. This restriction was removed, and a territorial government established for Utah, whose southern boundary line is 37°, containing an express guarantee that it might come into the Union with or without slavery, as her constitution might prescribe. The spirit of fanaticism which had been abroad at the North everywhere began to disappear, and the action of both Legislatures and Conventions indicated a determination to respect the constitutional rights of the South. There are now two Senators on this floor whose election was a consequence of this happier state of feeling. I mean the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. STOCKTON,] and the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. JAMES.] I know they will not take it unkind in me for thus referring to them, and adding, as I gladly do, that there are no two men in this body more firmly determined to mete out equal and exact justice to every section of the Union. Could I, with any regard to truth or decency, with these facts staring me in the face, persist in a course of denunciation which could only have the effect of exasperating those who were conscious of doing all they could to merit kinder treatment? Such a course might, indeed, have been gratifying to the Senator from South Carolina, and to those who, like him, seek a dissolution of the Union; but it would neither have been creditable to me, nor acceptable to the honest and patriotic people I represent. If the same state of things existed now which did exist at the date of that speech, it is quite possible I might employ language as strong as any then used. But that state of things has passed away, and it is the part of a good citizen to bury with it all memory of the bitterness to which it gave rise.

The Senator has been exceedingly cautious not to touch that part of my argument which relates to the territorial bills. Even he felt that was impregnable, and he chose rather to indulge in complaints of my laudations of the Union. On that, as on other points, he misunderstands me. I sing no hosannas to a Union which is one in name only, not in spirit. I do not wish to see this people tied together by a hateful bond, while discordant interests and rankling jealousies gangrene its separate parts. It was not such a Union which Washington and Jackson meant when they urged us to preserve it. They wished—I wish—all of us should wish—a Union of a different kind—in which each member cherishes an habitual respect for the rights of the others—in which all are taught to believe that it is impossible for any of its members to deliberately intend to do wrong—that some charity is due to errors and mistakes—that injustice must be temporary only—that a common interest, the recollections of past glory, and the anticipations of future greatness cannot fail in the end to correct whatever evils passion or prejudice may have spoken into being. It is for a Union of this sort only that I have been earnestly pleading with my countrymen. The Senator has been as zealously engaged in seeking to destroy it. His mission is to inculcate jealousies of the North. Addressing himself to those who have not the time or the opportunity to investigate for themselves, he says that the people of the Northern States are a horde of robbers, whose chief occupation consists in devising schemes to rob the South—that there is among them a reckless disregard of law, which prevents the execution of Congressional enactments—and that murder has ceased to be a punishable offence, if committed upon a citizen of the South in pursuit of his property. It is not surprising that he has thus succeeded, to some extent, in estranging one portion of the country from the other. His collaborators at the North have also met with some success. It has thus become the duty of every patriot to address himself to the task of removing these discontents, and to inculcate the high duty of loving one another. Let the voice of the demagogue everywhere be answered by truth and reason, and we shall soon witness a better and a brighter era.

With his usual inaccuracy, the Senator from South Carolina has ventured to assert that no State has ever been admitted into the Union without a previous act of Congress, authorizing the adoption of a constitution and form of State government. The Senator might have learned, even from my speeches if he had read them for any purpose but to garble and distort, how utterly at variance this assertion was with the facts. I had occasion once before to refer to all the acts of Congress upon the subject, and now read from the tables then prepared, the accuracy of which cannot be questioned.

In Vermont there was no act of Congress authorizing the people to form a constitution and State government; in Kentucky there was none; in Tennessee there was none; in Maine there was none; in Arkansas there was none; in Michigan there was none; in Florida there was none, and in Iowa there was none. Here, sir, are nine States which, according to the logic of the Senator, are illegally and unconstitutionally members of this Confederacy. Some of them were admitted immediately after the adoption of the Constitution, when the framers of that instrument themselves held seats in Congress, but no one heard at that day of the miserable quibble that "States" only could be admitted. The practice of the Government, from its foundation, has been to look to the attending circumstances. In some cases they have passed acts authorizing the establishment of State governments; in others they have not. They have always claimed and exercised the power of dispensing with formalities, and of being governed by what seemed to be the public good.

The Senator from South Carolina exultingly informed us that he was performing the same operation upon me that I had performed upon Mr. Foote. I think he has found out by this time that he had a troublesome subject. The operator himself has not escaped without suffering. But he may console himself by the reflection that he is not alone. He is not the first man who has undertaken the task and regretted it before it was concluded. I did quote extracts from some of Mr. Foote's speeches; but it was done in a spirit of kindness and courtesy, with none of that ran-or-ous bitterness which characterized the effort of the Senator from South Carolina. It was sudden and unpremeditated—not brooded over for months. I did not hug to my bosom a cherished hatred, and watch an opportunity to stab the reputation of another.

The extract from my speech which has been selected by the Senator as the theme of his discourse, is not the part which rankled. He has chosen to dwell upon that, but I know well where the sting was found. I did not express any great admiration for his abilities, and that is the wound his vanity could not pardon. Sir, he had no right to complain of my denouncing, in strong terms, his disunion sentiments. I but followed an example he had set me. When John Q. Adams presented a petition in the House of Representatives, praying a dissolution of the Union, a resolution was immediately introduced to expel him. After much discussion, Mr. Boots, of Virginia, moved to lay it on the table. The Senator from South Carolina voted against the motion, thus showing that, in his opinion, Mr. Adams ought to be expelled for merely presenting a petition in favor of disunion. I have not said the Senator ought to be expelled. I have said nothing of him as strong as that vote said of Mr. Adams, and yet the crime of the one was as nothing, compared to that of the other. Mr. Adams acted in accordance with what he believed to be the right of the people, to be heard by petition. Mr. RHETT, for himself, proclaims again and again upon this floor that he is a disunionist. I shall not indicate what punishment he deserves, if measured by his own standard.

The Senator arraigns my vote upon the boundary of Texas, and, as usual, falls into error. Indeed, sir, while listening to him, I felt utterly astounded that, after so long a preparation, he should have been so wholly uninformed. The Texas bill, for which you and I voted, never formed a part of the "omnibus." It was introduced by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] after the "omnibus" was killed. It established for Texas totally different boundaries, and gave to her nine hundred miles on the Rio Grande, and enough territory for two States more than Mr. Calhoun said belonged to her.

The Senator descanted on the fact that I said I would not vote to repeal the bill abolishing the slave trade in the District of Columbia; and announced, with great emphasis, that it is not the mere fact that the slave trade is abolished in the District of Columbia to which he objects, but that it is the penalty affixed to a violation of the law. Does not that Senator know that that very penalty has been affixed to it since 1801? Does not that Senator know that the only effect of the bill which passed at the last Congress was to extend the provisions of the law of 1801 to the citizens of Maryland? It was copied, word for word, from the Maryland law, which had been extended to this District ever since 1801, except as to Virginia and Maryland. There has not been a time since 1801 when that Senator, or any citizen of South Carolina, could have brought a slave here and offered him for sale without incurring the penalty of emancipation. Yet this is now raised as a bugbear with which to frighten grown men at the South. It has not alarmed us much heretofore; we have submitted to it with a very great degree of patience. It is too late now, when it is only extended to the State of Maryland, for us to raise complaints upon the subject. That bill of 1801 was approved by Thomas Jefferson; and Maryland, the only party interested, heartily approves of the law of 1850.

There is another matter to which I must refer. The Senator from South Carolina chose to read an extract from my speech, upon which he put a construction which he knew, or ought to have known, it would not bear. In reference to Mr. Calhoun, I said:

"He was never a secessionist, and I am authorized to say that the proof of it will before long be given to the world. He regarded the attempt of a single State to go out of the Union as madness, and died in that opinion."

I did not mean to assert that Mr. Calhoun did not believe there might be a right of secession. I used the term "secessionist" as the Senator understands it. And I state again, that Mr. Calhoun did hold the opinion that the secession of a single State would be madness. In a conversation which I had with him, but a short time previous to his death, he said: "We could have carried matters much further than we did in 1832, but then Tennessee would have been arrayed against South Carolina, Kentucky against Virginia, and other Southern States against each other, and that would have defeated the very object we had in view. My object was to consolidate the whole South, to unite them upon one platform, and I never would do any act which could estrange one portion of them from another." That was his policy, honestly entertained, however wrong I may think it to be. But as for the secession, the peaceable secession of a single State, he always knew it was madness. It was something which his great mind could not comprehend.

I am charged with saying, on a former occasion, that disunion might be peaceable. True, I did say so, and I say so again. If the whole of the Southern States should determine to leave the Union, I think they would be permitted to go peaceably, because any attempt at coercion would be folly. But even then I have no idea that peace could exist for any length of time. With a long line of frontier, upon which posts and garrisons would necessarily be kept up by both parties, causes of dissension would soon arise, and war, with all its evils, would soon be upon us. That, however, is a totally different thing from the attempt of one, or two, or three States to go out by themselves. In that event, force would certainly be used. Those whose sympathies were on the side of the invaded State, would rush to her rescue, and thus the whole Republic might become involved in a war which would terminate only with the termination of our liberties.

The Senator complains that I went from Washington a "submissionist." I did go from here prepared to submit to the law, and to perform my part as a good citizen under it. I went from here with the impression that although we had not obtained all we asked, still we had obtained something with which we could afford to be content. When I reached Alabama I found demagogues haranguing the people all through the State, endeavoring to persuade them that they had been wronged, outraged, and robbed; and I did there what I hope I shall do on all similar occasions—I dared to get upon the stump and tell them the truth. The August election proved that the people were with me, for there was not one solitary candidate in the whole State of Alabama who did not, before that election closed, deny that he was a secessionist or disunionist. A man could not have been elected constable in any respectable beat in the State, who would have proclaimed such sentiments as have been uttered by the Senator from South Carolina.

Sir, I am a submissionist, and the people of my State are submissionists; but we are Southern Rights men nevertheless. Better Southern-Rights men than those who not long since were warring against us, but who now come here and take seats cheek-by-jowl with PRESTON KING, RANTOUL, CHASE, HALE, and SUMNER. We have manifested our devotion to the South, as well as our devotion to the Union, and we will do it again whenever a proper occasion arises.

And now, Mr. President, I leave the Senator from South Carolina to the enjoyment of all the laurels he has acquired by his assault upon me.

Mr. RHETT. Mr. President, the course of the Senator from Alabama is precisely that which I expected it would be. I anticipated it in a conversation with a friend before I spoke. He had, without any cause on my part, stigmatized me here on this floor—as one guilty of treason and knavery. I knew very well that a man who would commit such an offence, who would insult without provocation, would not hesitate, under the exposure I intended to make, to add insult to insult. Therefore, when he yesterday pursued the course which he did pursue, it was precisely what I expected.

I did not, as the Senator charges, brood two months over his attack. He heard what I stated on this point in his presence in the Senate. I stated that I neither knew nor heard of what he had said concerning me, until just before I was leaving my home in South Carolina to come to this city. On my arrival here, I waited for the resolution, on which he had attacked me, to come up for consideration. Seeing the course of things, I was in no hurry to read his speech. But, not many days since, about ten days, I suppose, I got the Senator's speech from the folding room, and read it. I sent also for a copy of the speech of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] who, I heard, had honored me with his notice. It did not require much brooding to determine my course. I made up my mind that it became me, as a man and as a Senator, not to allow these imputations to pass unnoticed in the Senate. I was equally convinced that my reply to the Senator from Alabama would be followed by additional and probably aggravated insult. If he insulted me gratuitously, what right had I to expect that when exposed before the Senate, he would be more forbearing. He is come up precisely to the estimate I had put upon his character.

The Senator from Alabama denies that he meant to charge me with knavery and treason. Now I will read his words again to the Senate, and then I will leave the Senate to judge what their import is; and I will call upon the Senator from Alabama to say, if that is not their import, what they do mean. Here is what he says:

"There was the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] and the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] gathered about him in a sort of fraternal ring, while the countenance of the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] was radiant with gladness. Thus was exhibited the spectacle of an extreme Southern Senator denouncing, in no measured terms, the Government of his country, and declaring himself a disunionist, on account of alleged wrongs heaped upon him, with four as rabid Abolitionists as this land contains drinking in his words with eager approbation—applauding, cheering, and encouraging him. All this was nothing new to us, however strange it may appear to the plain and honest yeomanry of the country. Nor was it, when calmly considered, at all unnatural."

"A fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind."

There is a sympathy in treason as well as in knavery; and those who are earnestly striving to accomplish the same end need not quarrel about the separate means employed."

Now, here the Senator charges that there is a sympathy between these Senators and myself upon the matter of disunion; and he then observes, that there is a sympathy in treason as well as in knavery. Is not that plainly charging us with treason and knavery? I will leave the Senator from Alabama to explain if that is not his meaning of his words.

Mr. CLEMENS. There is not a Senator on this floor who does not understand it precisely as I do. There is no more charge of knavery against him than there is against the Senator from Massachusetts, or the Senator from Ohio—against whom I never meant to make such a charge. There is a charge of disunion; and he had himself avowed that he was a disunionist.

Mr. RHETT. If that is all the Senator has to say, his words stand unexplained. I ask him to explicate from his words I quote, another meaning than that I put upon them. He does not attempt to do so. He says that they do not contain the charge I allege they do contain. That is denial; but it is no proof. In his failure to show that they contain any other meaning than that I put upon them, he virtually admits that he cannot make his disclaimer consistent with his words. His words mention persons—declares that they are in concert to accomplish a certain end, and then asserts that "there is sympathy in treason as well as knavery." The Senator can take his choice between two alternatives. He was either using words without meaning anything by them, and thus talking nonsense to the Senate, or he did by his words make the charge I deduced from them. No man of sense can draw any other meaning from his words.

Now, Mr. President, I admit that this was a gross and wanton insult, and I admit, too, that acting upon "the code of honor," I ought not to have waited a month, or a day, or a moment, before I had required him to retract or fight. That is the course we are accustomed to pursue in the State I represent. I was perfectly aware of my position. I did not require the Senator from Alabama to tell me what I ought to have done, as a man of the world and a man of honor. But, sir, I am a professor of the religion of Christ. I did not think it proper to challenge the Senator for two very important reasons. The first was, because I had another object in view, and still have it, far above the vindication of myself from any personalities or insults that the Senator may have offered. Whilst vindicating myself on this floor, I would also vindicate the great cause with which I am identified. I have very feebly indicated my purposes in my defence, if the Senate has not perceived that I have used the Senator from Alabama, if not for my scorn or laughter, to bring up again the wrongs perpetrated by this Government upon the South, and the consequent dangers which surround her; and again to place forward for public consideration those great conservative principles arising from State-rights and State-sovereignty, which alone can give her peace or safety.

Sir, without sovereignty in the States—without the right of secession in the States—we live under a consolidated despotism; and I am in favor of the exercise of the right of secession if for no other purpose, for the purpose (as I intimated in the speech I delivered the other day) of testing the form of government under which we live.

But my second reason for not calling the Senator from Alabama into the field was of a still higher and more controlling nature. For twenty years I have been a member of the church of Christ. The Senator knows it—everybody knows it. I cannot, and will not, dishonor my religious profession. If he, or any one else, supposes that I am so much afraid of his insults, or the opinion which requires them to be redressed in the field, as to be driven by them to abandon the profession of twenty years, he is entirely mistaken. I frankly admit that I fear God; and that I fear him more than man. Although desirous of the good opinion of all men—for our usefulness is very largely dependent on the good opinion of our fellows—we can never obtain it by an abandonment of the principles we profess. True courage is best evinced by the firm maintenance of our principles amidst all temptations and all trials. I did not assail the Senator from Alabama. He assailed me. I have defended myself; and in doing so, if he has seen any fear of him indicated by me, he is welcome to all the pride and gratification it can impart. If firmness in maintaining even wordly principles or a course of worldly policy be any indication of courage, I might not suffer from a comparison with even the Senator from Alabama. I have not here threatened and tried to bully the North; and when the North will not be bullied, and puts upon me the outrages and dishonors to which I had declared resistance, I have not quietly submitted, and then begged the "humble privilege" of supporting them. I have not afterwards turned round upon one of those who was battling with me, and who would not yield, and accused him of fear, of cowardice. Sir, I profess the possession of no extraordinary courage; but I trust I have the courage to support the right and defy the wrong, although backed by an overwhelming public opinion, North and South. I am here alone; but, I trust, alone without fear. Have I quailed before any of you? Senators, answer, if I have ever done so.

The Senator from Alabama says that he did not mean to say that the Senators he speaks of in his speech made any noise in cheering, applauding, and encouraging me. He says, he supposed every body understood him to mean that they did not make any noise. Those who were present here, and knew that there was no noise by applause and cheering, might have known that the fact was not so. I will not say they could have known his construction of the words he uses, for the words themselves are too plain for misunderstanding. What is the meaning of applauding and cheering? If the gentleman will turn to the dictionary, he will find that to applaud is to clap with the hands, stifle with the feet, or make some noise to indicate approbation. And what is cheering in a popular assembly or deliberative body? Why, intimating by the voice approbation of what is said. The Senator says that these gentlemen not only cheered and applauded me, but that they also encouraged me. If he meant that to applaud and cheer were equivalent to encouragement, why put applaud and cheer before encouragement? He has taken that speech, and sent it down into Alabama. He sent it to the yeomanry, who, he says, will be astonished at the scene he depicts. I have no doubt that they will be prodigiously astonished, to hear that abolition Senators on this floor applauded and cheered me when I spoke; and probably will never be undeceived as to the truthfulness of what they have read in his speech. The Senator must do one of two things to get rid of the predicament in which he has placed himself; he must stultify himself as to his knowledge of the English language, or he did mean to say that these Senators did applaud and cheer me here in the Senate. Was that assertion true? It is totally untrue. It is untrue in fact, and untrue in the reasons he assigned for its existence. He has not attempted to show that the words he used meant anything beside their plain, undoubted signification.

He says further, that I acknowledged myself to be a traitor. I acknowledge myself to be a traitor! When, and where? Here is another of the Senator's facts. When the late Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Foote] thought proper to assert that secessionists were traitors, did I stand still here under the imputation? I could not be a traitor, under my view of the Constitution, unless I were, like that Senator from Alabama, a rank consolidationist. Standing, as I do, a citizen of South Carolina, owing allegiance to her as my sovereign, I cannot be a traitor in obeying her mandates. And, if she thinks proper to secede from this Union—as she rightfully has the power to do—my duty and my allegiance are due to her. Sir, the traitors to this Government, if any there be, are the consolidationists. They are traitors against the States, to whom alone they owe allegiance, because they deny their sovereignty. It is they who would break down the whole fabric of the Government, and make it simply an Austrian despotism, in which their reserved rights would be taken away from the States. I do not say they are traitors; but I say, between the two classes of politicians—the State-rights men, who maintain the rights of the sovereign States, affirming that they are parties to the constitutional compact, and have a right to secede from it whenever they please—between them, and those who deny the right of the States to secede, who deny that the States are sovereign, and contend here for a consolidated despotism—if there be treason, it is on the part of the latter. If any are traitors, they are the traitors—foul, usurping traitors to their States.

The Senator from Alabama further says, that I brought here into the Senate a private affair—the statement concerning him, which Judge Buford and Mr. McCall have put forth in Alabama for more than a month past. When I came to the city I found this statement here. The Senator says it is a private matter. It was no private matter. It was a matter affecting the representative of a sovereign State, and the dignity of this Senate. And while he talks of expulsion, and says that I wished to vote to expel John Quincy Adams—an assertion entirely gratuitous—I can tell him, that if the facts which these gentlemen assert, and have published in the public papers, be true, and they had been brought forward before the Senate when he came here to take his seat, he never would have been received among his compeers in this illustrious body. No, sir; never. And I am not sure if he had taken his seat, and a resolution had been offered to expel him from the Senate, but that a majority of this body would have passed the resolution. On this point, I will take nothing for true but what the Senator himself admits. Mr. President, you know Judge Buford. I know you do; and a more honorable and upright and truthful man does not live in this broad land. I know him also. I do not know Mr. McCall. But now, admitting that there is a mistake as to the fact that the Senator gave a written pledge to uphold the Whig party, which these gentlemen assert was seen and read by them, signed by him, what is it that I understand the Senator to admit? I understand him to admit that which I asserted, that at the caucus of the Democratic party in Alabama, he and Mr. Fitzpatrick were the candidates for the Senate, and he was defeated.

• Mr. CLEMENS. No, sir; I never admitted any such thing.

Mr. RHETT. Were you not voted for in the caucus of the Democratic party?

Mr. CLEMENS. If you wish to know the facts in relation to the matter, I will tell them to you.

Mr. RHETT. I wish to know the truth.

Mr. CLEMENS. Some members got together for the purpose of consultation—not to hold a caucus. Mr. Fitzpatrick's friends, finding they had a majority of those present in his favor, turned in and nominated him. The very next day, I believe a majority of that caucus met and rescinded their resolutions. There never was any more of that; and the Democrats who voted for me, represented a majority of ten thousand of the Democratic voters of the State.

Mr. RHETT. I wish to know the truth of this matter. I understand the Senator now to say that there was no caucus of the Democratic party.

Mr. CLEMENS. There was no regular caucus. A few members met for another purpose, and the friends of Mr. Fitzpatrick, being a majority of those present, nominated him; but the next day there was a caucus, and the other resolutions were rescinded.

Mr. RHETT. Well, Mr. Fitzpatrick was the nominee of the Democratic party. Was not that true?

Mr. CLEMENS. He claimed to be so, but I denied it.

Mr. RHETT. The Senator, then, denies that a caucus was held, or that Mr. Fitzpatrick was the nominee of the Democratic party. He certainly was not its nominee. A Mr. Davis, a Whig in the Whig caucus, (who the Senator says is a man of honor, and was his friend,) was authorized by him to express his views and opinions to the Whig party at a Whig caucus. Do I understand that to be the case?

Mr. CLEMENS, (in his seat.) I shall answer no more questions now.

Mr. RHETT. As the gentleman has corrected me in one respect, I take it for granted he will correct me again if I should fall into error. He goes to the Whig caucus. He authorizes a friend, a Whig in the Whig caucus, to state his opinions on public matters. I say nothing about the written pledge said to have been given; but what is the result? The Whig party, as a party, come out and vote for him in the Legislature, and he is elected a Senator of the United States, and, further still, they have been his supporters ever since. I do not wish at all to assert anything concerning the Senator which is not true, but thus far I understand him to admit is true; and they place the Senator in a position very little different from that which the assertions of Judge Buford and Mr. McCall place him in. As to the conflict of veracity between the Senator and the writers of these letters, I leave that to the people of Alabama to determine. The facts asserted were not private matters. They were public matters—public men acting on great public interests, and affecting the well-being of a whole State, and the dignity of this illustrious body.

I shall not notice all the points the Senator has made this morning in his vindication, but only a few, rather on account of their public importance, than for his discussion of them. I stated that the current of our legislation in admitting new States was, that Congress passed a law previous to the State being admitted into the Union for her to make a Constitution and become a State; and that after thus being a State she was admitted into the Union. That was my proposition. The Senator asserts that Florida and other States came into the Union without any such act. Sir, he is totally misinformed. Before those States came in, there was an act passed by Congress by which they were authorized to form a State and to come into the Union. It is very true, as in the case of Florida, that the people had, previous to the act of Congress, made a constitution; but they did not come in here until Congress passed the law by which they were authorized to make themselves a State. Congress passed the law first. The people of Florida then adopted the Constitution which had previously been made, organized themselves, and presented themselves here for admission. So it was with the other States. The question between the Senator and myself was this: He insisted that California was constitutionally admitted into the Union, because it was the practice, the universal practice, in this Government to admit Territories as States into the Union, and that the fact of their admission made them States. That was the proposition which he asserted. I said that, on the contrary, the practice had been that the Territories should be organized into free and independent States, by the sanction of an act of Congress, and thus being States, they were admitted into the Union, and that in this way only could the words of the Constitution be fulfilled—which says "that new States may be admitted by Congress." The Senator from Alabama has not touched the point in his remarks which he originally supported and advanced, nor do his authorities.

The Senator says that the abolition of the slave trade in the District of Columbia, with the penalty of emancipation, was in force here before. If that was the case, will you, Mr. President, or any one else, be so good as to tell us why Congress passed any law at all as a part of the compromise? Why should there have been so much contention as to the clause making emancipation the penalty of bringing negroes here for sale, if that was the law already? Here, again, the Senator is at fault. We all know that there were in different parts of the city slave-pens, as they were called, where slaves were openly brought in and sold. It was to suppress that evil the law was passed, with the penalty of emancipation.

The Senator from Alabama alleges he did not maintain that Mr. Calhoun was not a secessionist in principle, but only that he was against a State exercising that power. The Senator has forgotten his words. Here they are:

"John C. Calhoun and George McDuffie examined the resolutions of '98 and '99 for the right of secession, and could not find it. They found, as they thought, nullification; but nullification is itself a denial of secession."

Now, is not that affirming distinctly that John C. Calhoun never affirmed the right of secession? The Senator has forgotten his own speech. There appears to be a peculiar proclivity on the part of the Senator continually to bring in Mr. Calhoun as authority to support his views, but always with a misunderstanding or misrepresentation of his opinions. Speaking of the dismemberment of Texas, which he defends in his December speech, he says:

"The next measure of which complaint has been made, is the bill settling the boundary of Texas. Well, sir, it so happens that this also is a Southern, not a Northern measure. It was introduced by a Southern man, passed by Southern votes, and ratified by the people of the only Southern State who had any direct interest in it. It further happens, that Mr. Calhoun, the great leader of the South, during his life, has left on record his deliberate opinion that Texas never had a shadow of title to one foot of the territory we surrendered to the General Government. He asserted that the true boundary of Texas was the middle of the desert between the Nueces and the Rio Grande. We gave to Texas nine hundred miles on the Rio Grande, which, in his opinion, did not belong to her."

Here is a gross misrepresentation of Mr. Calhoun's opinions. Mr. Calhoun asserted that the Nueces was the boundary of Texas, before we acquired Mexican territory by the Mexican war. It was upon the question of the Mexican war, when the boundary of Texas was disputed and disputable, that Mr. Calhoun said her boundary did not extend to the Rio Grande. The people of Texas and the Government here took the ground that Texas did extend to the Rio Grande. Hence troops were ordered to the Rio Grande, and the Mexican war arose. But when the war was ended, and, by a treaty, the Rio Grande was made the boundary of Texas, by a map attached thereto, who ever heard Mr. Calhoun deny that the Rio Grande was the boundary of Texas? That which was before disputable, and occasioned the war, was settled by the war. And now, because Mr. Calhoun, previous to that settlement, expressed such an opinion as to the boundary of Texas, the Senator says that Mr. Calhoun was in favor of the dismemberment of Texas after the treaty was formed.

One word more upon an important subject, and I have done. The sovereignty of the States is of the very last importance. The Senator from Alabama, although he complains of the confusion of ideas and language in others concerning it, seems to me to have himself no very clear or distinct ideas of sovereignty. I agree with him that sovereignty must be the supreme authority in a State. He lays down the proposition, and I assent to it: but how, then, does he talk of the States and the General Government being both sovereign? Who ever heard of two sovereignties in a State? One must be supreme; and that which is supreme is sovereign. Sovereignty is the supreme, ultimate authority. That authority, I maintain, resides in the States. And yet here, because certain powers of sovereignty are exercised by the General Government, he claims that the States have surrendered all their sovereignty. A man has powers and faculties, and may use them in concert or subordination to others. Has he therefore destroyed himself? So with sovereignty. It is the highest authority of the land. But it may exercise its powers of sovereignty in concert with other States. It may do so by special treaty; it may do so in the form of government in which we are. But is sovereignty therefore parted with or annihilated? Surely not. Certain powers of sovereignty are exercised together by the States through the General Government; but the States have not surrendered their sovereignty. They are still supreme, and may resume those powers whenever they think proper. Sovereignty cannot be divided. There cannot be two supreme authorities—that is an absurdity; and it is on that point that it seems to me that the confusion of the Senator exists. He asserts that there is no sovereignty in the States; and then, in the next breath, he says they are sovereign in certain particulars. They are sovereign in all particulars, or in none. This Government acts by their authority, and by no other authority—and they are thus sovereign; or this Government is the supreme authority, and they have no sovereignty. The distinction, which the Senator does not seem to understand, is between sovereignty, and the powers of sovereignty.

I do not mean to go into the various matters of explanation concerning the speech which I made. I have put down the Senator from Alabama exactly in his own words. I have read to the Senate and shall print what he has said. It will be read. If his replies are sufficient to refute his own words, as I have placed them down, be it so. I only say, that, according to my conception of it, he has failed in his effort. There is nothing, in my judgment, which the gentleman has said, that refutes the antagonistic positions he took in his former speeches and his December speech. They are totally inconsistent and irreconcilable. But if he can reconcile them, it is very well for him to do so.

Mr. President, when I rose yesterday, it was my intention to have addressed myself also to certain remarks of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] but my strength failed; and the controversy with the Senator from Alabama has taken up so much of the time of the Senate, that I feel it would be a trespass to detain them longer on these matters. I shall, therefore, reserve what I have to say to a more convenient opportunity, when I hope to address myself to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. CLEMENS. Mr. President, I wish to add but a word or two. The Senator from South Carolina says that he anticipated when he made this assault upon me that it would be repelled, and met, as he terms it, by renewed insult. The Senator then placed himself in a very disagreeable situation, with very little provocation.

As for his reasons for not replying in the manner in which I thought he ought to have replied, I have only this to say: I am the equal of that Senator in all things—equal in place, equal in learning, equal in reputation, equal in the estimation of this Senate, equal in the estimation of the country—and I thought, of course, when he made his attack, that he expected and desired it to terminate without the Senate. As to his being a member of the church, I never heard of that until last night. When I did hear it, I determined at once to use no more offensive expressions, although I could not help thinking that it ought to have prevented the provocation rather than proved an excuse for avoiding the consequences. How could I suppose that he was a professing Christian—that night after night he had laid his head upon his pillow, with the prayer upon his lips "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us," while he was cherishing in his heart of hearts a malignant bitterness which would have done credit to a fiend? How could I suppose that he was planning even at the foot of the altar a cold-blooded and deliberate assault upon the reputation of a fellow man?

As for the Buford letter to which he has again alluded to-day, I do not mean to trouble the Senate with any remarks about it. It is a matter between me and my constituents, and I will settle it with them. Nor have I any reply to make to his criticisms on the words he has read; if he will not see, it is his fault—if he cannot, it is not my province to enlighten him.

At the close of the discussion, the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 1, 1852.

Prayer by the Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a memorial of inhabitants of Indiana, praying that the transportation of the mails on Sunday may be prohibited by law; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, two memorials of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Indiana, praying additional compensation; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. ATCHISON presented the memorial of James M. Gatewood, praying the appointment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the memorial of Joseph Adams and others, assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Maine, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WADE presented several petitions of deputy marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Ohio, praying additional compensation; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SEWARD presented a petition of Daniel Palmer for himself and other soldiers who were disabled by the loss of limbs in the last war with Great Britain, praying an increase of the pensions allowed them; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a petition of citizens of Wyoming county, New York, remonstrating against an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the petition of James McGregor, jr., assignee of Anthony W. Jones, praying to have his patent ante-dated; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying that so much of the military reservation at Fort Howard as is not required for the use of that post may be disposed of; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOUGLAS presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. BORLAND presented a petition of citizens of Arkansas, praying a grant of land to the Arkansas Valley Railroad company, for the construction of a railroad from Van Buren to Fort Smith, in that State; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Arkansas, praying the establishment of a mail route from Grand Glaize to Searcy, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of citizens of the city and county of New York, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. DAVIS presented the memorial of John Connell, in behalf of sundry merchants residing in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, praying the return of duties paid under the tariff of 1828, on goods which were ordered previous to the adoption of the tariff; but did not arrive until after it went into effect; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PRATT presented the memorial of Henry May, administrator of William A. Slacum, deceased, praying the payment of his claim against the Government of Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Mr. BELL submitted documents in support of the claim of William Read to compensation for services in the Indian war during the year 1793; which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented a memorial of citizens of Iowa, praying a grant of land to the State for the construction of the Burlington and Missouri river railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, communications from Joseph A. Kelting, in favor of a grant of land for the benefit of the town of Kanesville, Iowa; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the proceedings of a convention of delegates from fourteen counties in the State of Iowa, held at Ottumwa, in favor of a donation of land for the Burlington and Missouri river railroad; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 42.

Mr. DAWSON presented resolutions of the Legislature of Georgia in favor of the doctrines of neutrality and non-intervention; which were read and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADE presented resolutions of the Legislature of Ohio, in favor of the construction of a new canal around the Falls of the Ohio; which were referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. BELL, it was Ordered, That the documents on the files of the Senate relating to the claim of Anthony Rankin, be referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the memorial of James McGregor, junior, administrator of Wally & Donaldson, and the memorial of John Powell, assignee of Thomas Powell, presented the 28th of February last, be referred to the select committee on the subject of claims against Mexico.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the memorial of citizens of New York in behalf of Daniel Doland.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. ATCHISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FELCH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred resolutions passed at a meeting of citizens of Wayne county, Indiana, relating to a division of certain Indian territory, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that they be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. They were so referred.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred documents presented on the 20th ultimo, relating to the treatment of passengers in steam vessels going to and from California, and a communication of citizens of Brunswick, Maine, on the same subject, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. MALLORY gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the Postmaster General to convey the mails in steamers between New Orleans and Key West, and certain intermediate points.

Mr. UNDERWOOD gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad Company.

GOVERNOR AND JUDGES OF OREGON.

Mr. ATCHISON submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending an act to establish the territorial government of Oregon, as to authorize the legally qualified voters of said Territory to elect their Governor and Judges.

THE STEAMSHIP BALTIC.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to submit the motion that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Wednesday. The ground of the motion is, that a steam-ship, which is very interesting in its connection with the commerce of the country and with questions which are before Congress, is in our port, and that Congress have been invited, I understand, to visit it to-morrow. I believe the time would be well spent, under these circumstances, and I submit the motion.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I trust that that motion will not prevail. I think the business of the Senate is so much in arrear, that the Senate ought not now to adopt the proposition. I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. GWIN. Like my friend from Iowa, I am generally very much opposed to these adjournments. But I hope the Senate will adjourn over for the purpose of examining the fine steam-ship now in our waters, but which will leave here the day after to-morrow. I am as much interested in constant sessions of the Senate as any member of this body; but I do not think we can employ ourselves better in facilitating business hereafter, than by adjourning over for a day, as proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I concur with the views submitted by the honorable Senator from Iowa. There are other interests that want special protection. I understand that this vessel comes here for the purpose of making an exhibition and of giving an entertainment, for the purpose of getting money from the Treasury. They say they cannot compete with British vessels. Why, sir, that is just what the iron interests have been long saying in Pennsylvania; and it is just what the men who have been engaged in making cotton goods say; and yet, unless they can come here and give an exhibition of their goods, wares, and merchandise, for the purpose of getting special legislation, they receive no attention. I think the Senate ought not to spend its time in visiting a ship in this way, and under these circumstances. I think the Senate might spend its time more profitably in looking to other interests which are waiting to obtain its attention.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator certainly has forgotten the exhibitions of the iron interests we have heretofore had in this city. Their committees have kept open houses here for years past, for the purpose of getting special legislation for their benefit. They have had free access to our committee rooms; and aided materially in preparing the tariff of '42. Persons representing the cotton and iron interests have controlled the legislation of this country heretofore. In regard to this matter, it is binding on no member to vote an appropriation increasing the compensation for carrying the mails in these vessels merely because he looks at and examines them. No one is pledged by doing so. The exhibition is given for no such purpose as has been intimated by the Senator from Pennsylvania. So far as the cotton and the iron interests are concerned, I hope they have had their day, and that they will not be permitted to control our legislation or our acts hereafter, as the Senator seems so earnestly to desire.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not represent any particular interest, but I think that all ought to have the same chance. The iron men of Pennsylvania cannot bring their iron establishments here.

Mr. GWIN. They can bring their men here, and that amounts to the same thing.

Mr. BRODHEAD. If they do come, I have not seen them. It would be difficult for them to get their furnaces here. I do not pretend to say they ought to have any particular legislation for their benefit, but I do say that this is not a proper mode of obtaining legislation.

Mr. BORLAND. It seems to me that this proposition, and the remarks it has called forth, present rather a strange state of things before the Senate and the country. It seems to me to have brought forth the statement—I presume, of course, based upon facts—that the legislation of this country for years past has been sought to be controlled, and to some extent has been controlled, by exhibitions, such as is now making in the immediate neighborhood of this city—that great money-interests have come, with their agents and their exhibitions, and by their out-door pressure made themselves felt in the legislation of Congress. And during the short term of service I have had the honor of being here, this out-door pressure has been brought to bear upon as humble an individual as myself, to induce legislation and extract money from the public Treasury, which has, it is evident, gone into the hands of individual speculators and large capitalists. The honor as well as the interest of this country, and especially the honor of the Senate of the United States, require that we should turn our face from such propositions—turn away with scorn and contempt from all such exhibitions—repudiate the use of such influences for electioneering, lobbying, and log-rolling here, for the purpose of controlling and influencing the votes of members of Congress. I am an humble member of this body—the humblest on this floor in all respects; but I feel bound to say of this proposition, coming from capitalists in any quarter of the country, that I consider it a direct insult to any one having the honorable impulses of a man and a patriot in his bosom.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, it is of course for every Senator to determine for himself what susceptibility he has to improper influences; but it is not for one Senator to determine for others. Now, I have no doubt that the honorable Senator from Arkansas, and that every Senator here, is capable of examining the steamship Baltic, and even of receiving hospitalities on board of her, if such are proffered, without at all compromising, in his own mind, the feelings which he thinks ought to govern him in regard to appropriations from the public Treasury. Such a thought never occurred to me. I have no opinion made up in regard to any claim upon Congress in regard to appropriations for this, or any other line of steamers; but I am willing to be informed; I am willing to learn; and I do admit this fact in regard to this question, (if it be proper to go into the merits of a question before Congress on such a motion as this,) that the country has a right, at a crisis of deep and exciting interest in regard to the commerce of the country, to demand that we should determine the question whether we shall secure the commercial ascendancy of the world, or shall suffer it to pass from our grasp. The question is one in which the nation has a deep interest. I am desirous, for one, that those who have called our attention to this subject shall receive every proper consideration, and that they should have an opportunity of presenting their claims in the most favorable manner possible.

So far as the argument of my honorable friend from Pennsylvania is concerned, I can say to him that I have no such preference for one interest over another as would sway my judgment in favor of a commercial to the prejudice of a manufacturing interest; and that of all others, the measure which I should support with the utmost cordiality would be a measure for the protection and relief of the iron manufactures. If it be not possible for the manufactories and furnaces to be removed here, and have Congress visit them here, it would give me great pleasure to go with him to examine the condition of those manufactories in his State, as it has always given me great pleasure to see such manufactories flourishing in my own. I hope the motion will prevail.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I do not propose to touch the question whether or not the owners of this line of steam-ships should receive the additional compensation which they claim. But it seems to me that there is an unnecessary excitement in regard to this matter, both on the part of my friend from Arkansas, and my friend from Pennsylvania. I do not see why they should manifest such excitement in regard to the proposition to give Senators an opportunity to inspect this vessel. It is simply a proposition to allow us to look at an exhibition of American skill, and that relating to a question in which the maritime superiority of this country or of her great rival is concerned. Is there anything improper in the owners of these vessels exhibiting one of their line, when they have before Congress a petition for increased compensation, grounded on the fact, as they state in their memorial, that, with a view to maintain the superiority of American skill in reference to steamers upon the ocean, they have gone beyond the extent of their contract with the Department, and have constructed, regardless of expense, vessels which have been unrivaled, both as regards their speed, and their comfort and magnificence in every respect. Now, if they send here one of their vessels, in order that we may inspect her, and see if there is no delusion in reference to their representations, by evidence which no man can resist, is there anything improper in that, as an argument addressed to the intelligence of Congress? Is there anything which appeals to an improper sentiment, or an improper motive on the part of Senators, for the purpose of determining whether the compensation asked for should be made? The compensation is asked to be made on the ground of extraordinary expense; because the parties embarked in the contract, regardless of expense, to maintain the honor of the country and the supremacy of the seas sought to be wrested from Great Britain, and that in reference to a rival line which had anteriorly commanded almost the entire postage between the United States and Great Britain. The question is of great importance. Is not the argument a fair one, by which they offer to exhibit to you the vessel, by which you may judge with your own eyes whether it comes up to the representations they have made upon paper? Does that appeal to any unworthy motive on the part of the Senate? I trust that I shall stand in this body—(and before I leave it, I hope the Senate will be convinced of it)—as unassailable by any influence connected with capital, either directly or indirectly, as any man on this floor. But it seems to me that the present proposition involves no influence of the kind. It is perfectly fair on the part of the owners. It requires no excitement. It connects itself in no way, that I can see, with the iron interest, or any other interest; but it is proposing to give us specific information about a subject on which we are called upon to legislate. As to the propriety of acceding to the request of the parties as contained in their memorial, I say nothing. It is a matter of entire indifference to me whether I now test the truth of the matter stated in their memorial, or not, because it has been my fortune to have crossed the Atlantic twice in these steamers; therefore it is not now for the purpose of allowing myself an opportunity to inspect them that I vote for this motion.

Mr. BORLAND. The honorable Senator from Delaware mistook the view which I took of this matter. It was not that I have any objection to these steamers coming here. Certainly, on the floor of the Senate I should never have an objection to any gentlemen, or any company, who have invested their money in any branch of industry whatever coming here and exhibiting their goods or their enterprise to the public; but the objection which I make is, that this proposition comes before the Senate of the United States, and involves its official action. Now, if gentlemen wish to go as individuals, or as Senators, to enlighten their own judgment by examining this ship, surely there is plenty of time during the twenty-four hours in which they can do so, without trenching on the time of the Senate, which we know is now demanded by the press of business of the country, and of private individuals having just claims upon the Government. Business is pressing us, and we are not able to do it promptly. If the purpose is to gain information, which it is said is so desirable to enable us to legislate with a proper understanding of the merits of the case, would it not be an appropriate plan to bring forward a resolution to appoint a committee of the Senate to go and make an examination in a manner which would be entirely satisfactory? If that were the object of the proposition, this would seem to me to be an appropriate plan. But what is the proposition? We have all received invitations to go on board this steamer. Is it for the purpose of having members of Congress go to look at the matter in a scientific point of view, or for the purpose of enabling us to legislate understandingly? No sir; there is to be an entertainment, to which ladies and gentlemen are invited; and if we go on board the vessel under such circumstances, shall we be likely to get the information which is desired? Certainly not. If it is necessary for us to get this information to enable us to legislate properly, let a proposition be made that a committee of the Senate be appointed to get the aid of competent engineers and scientific men, and go and examine into the questions involved in our official action here. I should have no objection to such a proposition. But the present proposition to adjourn the Senate, neglect the public business that is pressing upon us, and requiring more of our time than we are now able to give to it, for the purpose of engaging in a festival, and thus bring us within the attempt, and make us recognize the attempt to influence our action and control us here by this out-side, out-door influence, I can understand in no other way than that these persons are acting upon a saying we sometimes hear throughout the country—a proposition which is an insult in itself—that the nearest way to the hearts and understanding of Senators is down their throats.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the question is, whether the Senate shall adjourn till Wednesday; and the object of the adjournment is to afford Senators an opportunity to visit the steamship Baltic. Is the object, as stated here, of sufficient importance to occasion the adjournment of this body? If it be so, I should like to hear it stated. There is a very singular coincidence here. There is an application pending from the proprietors of this line for an increase of their compensation of some sixty per cent. They ask to have it increased from $385,000 to $600,000. While that application is pending before the naval committee, we find this steamer in our waters, and an invitation on the table of Senators to go on board of her.

But it is sought to justify this adjournment, on the ground that it will afford Senators an opportunity of examining the ship and testing the fact, whether she be or be not fit to carry the mail on her voyages. This is, indeed, a very singular attempt. Does the Senate suppose, for a single moment, that its members would be, are capable of such an examination on this visit of ceremony? Such an examination would require an inspection of the minutest details, to be carried on for weeks—requiring an investigation of every part of the ship. Is the Senate informed that we have officers paid and stationed in the city of New York, who have examined this very vessel, and that they have given her a certificate? The very fact that she has a certificate, and that she is here, is prima facie evidence that she is fit to perform that service. If she is not competent, she ought not to be here at all. We take it for granted that she is, in all respects, competent for this purpose.

Now, this singular coincidence occurring, of this vessel being in our waters at this moment, when the application of the proprietors is before the Senate for an increased compensation, though the youngest member of this body, it would cause me at once to examine the estimates put forth on which increased compensation is based; and, if I had no other objection, I should vote against it now on that account. If there be Senators who desire to institute a personal examination into the fitness and speed of this vessel, I hope they will take the opportunity; but I do not see any necessity for compelling other Senators, who have no such desire, and feel a perfect incompetency to make such an examination, to go on board of her. I hope they will not compel others who are disposed to sit here and perform their duties to their constituents, to adjourn. Let those go on board who desire to do so, without an adjournment. I have no desire to go. I have no doubt that a perfect scientific examination and report of this vessel is now in the Navy Department, where, if any Senator wishes to see it, he can do so.

Mr. BORLAND called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, I desire to say but one or two words. I shall vote against this adjournment over; and I think it is unfortunate for the steamship and also for the deliberations of the Senate, that any such motion has been made. I have had occasion to examine this contract which has been made for these ships, and the manner in which the contractors have complied with their contract, and I feel sure that they have so complied with it as to do credit both to themselves and to the country. I have examined the application which is before Congress for additional remuneration to them, and I think it is an entirely reasonable one, and such a one as I am prepared to vote for. I do not see that it is going to benefit either the country or the proprietors themselves to bring up and discuss in the abstract, questions which it would take time to investigate; I shall, therefore, vote against this adjournment over. If I were a judge of steam-ships and desired to see this one, I would go and do so without neglecting my duties here. I do not, however, desire to do so. But at the same time, that my vote may not be misconstrued, I will state that I have fully investigated the matter, and think this contract has been complied with creditably on the part of the contractors and creditably to the country; and I think the Congress of the United States will find it to be their own interest and the interest of the nation to sustain this line, which I trust they will do, and not come to any determination of it in passion or prejudice arising from a supposed attempt at electioneering, but look at the question as affecting the commerce and the mail service of the country.

Mr. BAYARD. If I thought the effect of adjourning over to-morrow would be to retard the business of the Senate, I should vote against the proposition; but I do not think that will be the effect of it. The proposition meets my approbation, not because I desire to see this vessel, but because I thought it would be proper that other Senators should have an opportunity of doing so. The Senator from Florida objected to this proposition, on the ground that an accurate judgment could not be formed of such a ship without a minute examination. But I presume one may be able to judge of a picture and its magnificence, though not a painter; one may judge of a building, though he be not an architect. So I think that one may form some judgment of these vessels without going into a thorough investigation of every part. My own opinion is, that the examination of such a ship would make an impression on the minds of others such as it made on my own—it would arouse a vast deal of national pride, a national feeling in favor of this line of steamers. If the line cannot be sustained without additional compensation—and I know nothing of the facts of the case—the interests of the country require that it should be sustained by additional compensation.

Though I support the motion, and desire that Senators shall see this noble vessel, yet, if it be true that the effect of an adjournment over would be to retard the public business, I should vote against it. But the public business, it seems to me, is not altogether performed in this Hall. I suppose that much of the real labor of the Senate is done in the committee-rooms; and those honorable and learned Senators, who are so exceedingly fearful lest a single day should be lost to the public business, and that to-morrow will be wasted if we adjourn over for the purpose of viewing this specimen of naval architecture, can very well occupy their time to-morrow in the committee-rooms, with equal benefit to the country as if the Senate were in session.

When we have devoted day after day to the discussion of resolutions on the compromise, on subjects of legislation which have been passed and gone by long ago, in which the feelings and interests of the country would lead to no further agitation, on which the minds of the people are made up, and on which the speeches that have been made have been filled with crimination and recrimination without reference to any public interest whatever, it is somewhat late in the day, when a proposition of this kind is made, to talk of the waste of public time.

Mr. DOWNS. As the yeas and nays have been ordered, I wish to explain very briefly that I shall vote against this motion very much on account of the considerations suggested by the Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk.] I think there is entirely too much importance attached to the proposition. I see no objection to a Senator going to visit this steamship if he desires to do so; and, on the other hand, I see no necessity for an adjournment for that purpose. While, therefore, I shall vote against the motion to adjourn over, I shall express no opinion on the subject which has been brought into this debate. Unlike the Senator from Texas, I have not examined the subject, and have not formed any opinion whether I shall or shall not vote in favor of additional grants to this line of steam-ships, and I therefore express no opinion on it. As I am always opposed to unnecessarily wasting the time of the Senate, and as I think there is no necessity for an adjournment over, I shall vote against the proposition, holding myself, however, at liberty (as I suppose every Senator does) to vote just as I please on the question of granting additional compensation to these persons.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire to say that my remarks were not based at all on the merits of the question whether we should or should not grant an additional appropriation to the company owning these steam-ships. Whether the grant asked of Congress is proper or not, whether I shall vote for it or not, has nothing to do with the views I express with regard to the proposition to adjourn over, in order to engage in a jollification on board the Baltic. Whether the grant asked for is reasonable or unreasonable, proper or improper, I object to the means brought to bear for the purpose of gaining favor for it, and commending it to the consideration of Congress.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Those are my sentiments exactly.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. If it be in order to move an amendment to the proposition of the Senator from New York, I move to amend so that it shall read, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet to-morrow at ten o'clock, and that the Senate will to-morrow adjourn at three o'clock. That will give those who desire to examine this vessel an opportunity of doing so to-morrow afternoon. By pursuing this course, we can do business for five hours, instead of three hours as usual.

Mr. BAYARD. I object to that, because it will interfere with the Committee of Claims, which meets at ten o'clock to-morrow. I have no intention of going to see this vessel; and if the Senate adjourns over, I expect to be engaged all day to-morrow in attending to the business of the committee to which I am attached. I shall vote against the amendment, and in favor of the original proposition.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. MANGUM. If gentlemen were so very anxious to get forward with business, they would lose less time in debating unimportant questions. I shall vote for this motion on no ground connected with the interests of these parties, with no reference to the question whether or not additional compensation should be paid to them. I have not examined that question, and know nothing about it. I vote for the motion because I understand that this steamship is one of the most perfect models in the world of a sea-going vessel. It is one of the swiftest vessels in the world, and I should feel proud to examine it as an American production, as, if I had lived in the vicinity in the days of the great "Eclipse," I should have felt pride in mounting him. I shall vote for this motion also, on the ground that if we were to sit here to-morrow there would scarcely be a quorum present; and if we were to meet at ten o'clock and sit until three with a bare quorum, the Treasury would be exhausted by useless debate.

The question was then taken, and resulted—yeas 21, nays 19—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Bell, Bradbury, Clarke, Dawson, Fish, Foot, Gwin, Hamlin, Jones, of Tennessee, McKen, Mangum, Miller, Norris, Seward, Smith, Spruance, Sumner, Underwood, and Upham—21.

NAYS.—Messrs. Borland, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Felch, Hunter, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Morton, Pratt, Rhet, Rusk, Wade, and Walker—19.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the special order, namely; the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, in aid of the construction of certain railroads in said State.

The pending question is on the amendment of Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. DAWSON addressed the Senate in opposition to the passage of the bill. He renewed arguments made by him on former occasions against the passage of similar bills, and urged additional and particular reasons why this bill should not become a law.

[See Appendix for Mr. D's speech.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope the question will not be taken now. I think it would be better that it should not now be taken. The truth is, that if you force me to vote at this time, I do not know but that I shall have to contradict myself. I stated the other day that if my amendment was not acceptable to the Senate, I should still vote for the bill. I told the worthy chairman of the Committee on Public Lands this morning, that I doubted very much whether I ought to do so. And under the feelings which have been inspired by the speech of my friend from Georgia, I really feel almost disposed to retract my former assertion, that I intended to vote for the bill in any event. I feel a sense of the injustice which has been practiced towards the old States to such an extent, that I do not know whether, if something like justice is not done to my own State, I can vote for the bill. I therefore hope that the question will not be pressed at this late period of the day, but that it may lie over in order that we may all think about it, and that, as the speaking is pretty well over, when we meet again we may be prepared to take up the bill and vote upon it. There is no immediate necessity for acting on the bill now.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I desire to address the Senate on the subject.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I hope the Senator will not proceed to-day, but defer his remarks until the Senate meet again.

On motion, the Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 1, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. Mr. MORGAN.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

Mr. FITCH obtained the floor.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a privileged question. On week before last the bill for the relief of Colonel D. D. Mitchell was pending in the House, and a motion was made and carried that it be committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. On the day of the adoption of the motion of reference, I entered a proposition to reconsider the vote making that reference; and I now rise to call up that question. If objection be made I shall move to suspend the rules, for the purpose of enabling me to do it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will beg leave to suggest to the gentleman, if he has the floor, that he had better move to suspend the rules, for the purpose of moving to discharge the committee from its consideration, and let us act upon the bill at once.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides against the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. FITCH. He cannot deprive me of the floor for the purpose of making any motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Missouri, in the first place, could not deprive the gentleman from Indiana of the floor to submit his motion to reconsider, even if it were proper to reconsider to-day the vote to which he refers, which the Chair doubts very much. Indeed, he is of the opinion that it is not a privileged question of a character which would set aside the business appropriated to Monday, by express rule of the House. It could be in order as a privileged question only on those days on which by the rules there is a morning hour. At all events, the gentleman from Missouri cannot deprive the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Fitch] of the privilege of submitting his motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask the gentleman from Indiana, as he is one of the members of the committee which has instructed me on all occasions to urge upon the House the necessity of taking up the bill from the Senate for the appointment of a Superintendent of Indian affairs for California, to yield me the short space of time it will require to consider that bill. It is a matter of urgent public necessity.

Mr. FITCH. I would yield with pleasure for the introduction of the bill, but I know that will meet with opposition, and lead to debate.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will say that that bill will live or die at once. I shall unquestionably, on the rules being suspended, be entitled to the floor, and it is my intention to move the previous question.

Mr. FITCH. My knowledge of the rules is not great, and if I yield the floor now I may lose it altogether. I beg my friend will excuse me.

THE COMPROMISE MEASURES.

Mr. FITCH. I submit the following resolution; I cannot from its purport hope to secure universal consent, and therefore move the suspension of the rules for the purpose of its introduction.

The resolution was read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That we recognize the binding efficacy of the compromises of the Constitution, and believe it to be the intention of the people generally, as we hereby declare it to be ours individually, to abide such compromises, and to sustain the laws necessary to carry them out—the provision for the delivery of fugitive slaves included—and that we deprecate all further agitation of questions growing out of that provision, of the questions embraced in the acts of the last Congress known as the Compromise, and of questions generally connected with the institution of slavery as unnecessary, useless, and dangerous.

Mr. GOODENOW demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I want to know whether the Mormon church is included in the resolution as one of the measures of compromise?

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Would it be in order to ask the gentleman to modify the resolution so that it would say, "we deprecate all further agitation," except this. [Laughter.]

Mr. STANLY moved a call of the House; which motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following gentlemen answered to their names:

Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, Allison, Andrews, John Appleton, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bartlett, Beale, Bell, Bennett, Bissell, Bowne, J. H. Boyd, Breckenridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Curtis, Daniel, G. T. Davis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Freeman, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Gentry, Giddings, Goodenow, Gorman, Green, Grey, Grow, Hall, Hammond, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Hubbard, Horsford, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Clancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Nabers, Newton, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Penniman, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Powell, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Smith, Snow, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, St. Martin, Stratton, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Townshend, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Wildrick, Williams, Woodward, and Yates.

The following gentlemen were reported as absent, viz:

Messrs. Charles Allen, Babcock, Bibbighaus, Bocock, Bowie, Bragg, George H. Brown, Buell, Burt, Caldwell, Cleveland, Colecock, Cottman, Cullum, Darby, Dimmick, Dunham, Floyd, Gilmore, Goodrich, Hamilton, Hilley, Holladay, Houston, Thomas M. Howe, Hunter, Mann, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, Martin, Milson, Miner, Robinson, Russell, Scudder, Scurry, Abraham P. Stevens, Sweetser, Toombs, Tuck, and Walsh.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move that all further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STEPHENS and BAYLY, of Virginia, were appointed.

The question was then put, and the motion was disagreed to—the tellers having reported ayes 61, noes 85.

The SPEAKER. The officers will cause the doors of the Hall to be closed.

The names of the absentees will now be called over, and excuses may be rendered, if any, for the absentees.

The Clerk read the names of the absentees in the order in which they are inserted above.

Mr. CHARLES ALLEN.

Mr. FOWLER. I move that Mr. ALLEN be excused. He is very sick, confined to his bed under the physician's care, and cannot be out.

The question being put, Mr. ALLEN was excused.

Mr. THOMAS M. BIBBIGHAUS.

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. BIBBIGHAUS has left the District, and gone home sick, for medical treatment. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LEANDER BABCOCK. No excuse offered.

Mr. RICHARD I. BOWIE. No excuse offered.

Mr. THOMAS S. BOCOCK.

Mr. MEADE. Mr. Bocock went home on urgent business.

A MEMBER. The gentleman was not heard in this part of the Hall.

Mr. MEADE. Mr. Bocock has gone home. He had been unwell for several days previous to his leaving Washington. It was not on that account that he has gone home, but, as I understand, to attend to some urgent business. I move that he be excused.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. He is out of the city. That is sufficient.

The question was taken, and Mr. Bocock was excused.

Mr. JOHN BRAGG.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. Mr. Bragg has gone home in consequence of sickness in his family. I move, therefore, that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE H. BROWN.

Mr. PRICE. My colleague, Mr. Brown, has gone home on account of imperative business. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER H. BUELL.

Mr. KING, of New York. Mr. BUELL is absent from the city on account of imperative business. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is very apparent that nothing will be accomplished. I move, therefore, that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I do not see that it has become so very apparent. All these gentlemen, who have been excused, cannot possibly attend. It may be that there are other gentlemen, outside of this Hall, who can attend, and we want them! I insist upon the call.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not care about the motion.

Mr. ARMISTEAD BURT.

Mr. ORR. My colleague, Mr. BURT, has been absent from the city two months. He is confined at his home by indisposition, and I move, therefore, that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOSEPH P. CALDWELL.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. CALDWELL has left the city on account of the situation of his family at home. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHAUNCEY F. CLEVELAND.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. CLEVELAND is confined to his room by sickness. I move, therefore, that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ASHE. Is it in order to move that all the absent members be excused.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, that excuses be offered as the names are called.

Mr. WILLIAM F. COLCOCK.

Mr. McQUEEN. Mr. COLCOCK has returned home on account of the sickness of his family. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOSEPH S. COTTMAN. No excuse offered.

Mr. WILLIAM CULLOM.

Mr. GENTRY. Mr. CULLOM has been confined to his room by indisposition for several weeks. He is unable to attend. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHN F. DARBY.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that Mr. DARBY be excused. His condition—his serious indisposition—is known to every member of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILOM M. DIMMICK.

Mr. McNAIR. Mr. DIMMICK has been absent for some two or three weeks, and went home on account of unavoidable business. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CYRUS L. DUNHAM. No excuse offered.

Mr. JOHN G. FLOYD.

Mr. MURRAY. My colleague, Mr. FLOYD, has gone home on account of sickness in his family. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALFRED GILMORE. No excuse offered.

Mr. JOHN Z. GOODRICH.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I move that Mr. GOODRICH be excused, as he is in Connecticut attending an important trial in which he is a party, and where his personal attendance is necessary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAM T. HAMILTON.

Mr. STUART. Mr. HAMILTON is unable to attend the House, on account of illness. I ask that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JUNIUS HILLIER.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Mr. HILLIER is absent from the city. He is at his home in Georgia. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COBB. I believe we are too much inclined to excuse absent members. I move that we suspend all further proceedings.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I object to it. Let us go through the roll. No persons have been excused who could attend.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to suspend the call.

Mr. ALEXANDER R. HOLLADAY.

Mr. EDMUNDSON. I move that Mr. HOLLADAY be excused, as he went home to a sick family.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE S. HOUSTON.

Mr. COBB. I suppose the House is well aware that Mr. HOUSTON is always in his place. I have no doubt that as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means he has gone to the Department for estimates, and that is the reason why he is not here.

Mr. LETCHER. Mr. HOUSTON has a child lying very ill at home.

Mr. GOODENOW. I would suggest to the gentleman that he should put his words nearer together.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What was the reason given?

The SPEAKER. For the reason stated by the gentleman upon the floor.

Mr. POLK. I wish to vote understandingly. I did not exactly hear the reason.

Mr. HALL. We did not hear the reason assigned in this part of the House. I should like to know the reason before I vote.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's misfortune. [Laughter.]

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The question was then taken, and Mr. HOUSTON was excused.

Mr. THOMAS M. HOWE.

Mr. JOHN W. HOWE. Mr. HOWE went home on account of his health, being unable to be in his seat some weeks before he left. He went under the advice of friends, and I have not yet heard whether he is getting better or not. I ask that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAM F. HUNTER.

Mr. BELL. Mr. HUNTER is lying sick at his room. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HORACE MANN.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. MANN is in New York upon some business which will detain him for some ten days. I ask that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDWARD C. MARSHALL, of California. No excuse offered.

Mr. HUMPHREY MARSHALL.

Mr. VENABLE. Mr. HUMPHREY MARSHALL was at the door the moment it was shut. He is ready to come in. I ask that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FREDERICK S. MARTIN.

Mr. HASCALL. I ask that Mr. MARTIN be excused, on account of severe indisposition.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHN S. MILLSON.

Mr. AVERETT. My colleague [Mr. MILLSON] left here in delicate health a few days ago, in the hope that he might receive benefit by so doing. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ABIMAIL L. MINER.

Mr. HEBARD. Mr. MINER left this city a few days ago, reluctantly, to go home and attend to some business of importance, which made it necessary for him to leave. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHN L. ROBINSON.

Mr. FITCH. Mr. ROBINSON being confined to his room by sickness, I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOSEPH RUSSELL.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I move that my colleague [Mr. RUSSELL] be excused. He is now in New York, confined by very serious illness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ZENO SCUDDER.

Mr. DUNCAN. I move that Mr. SCUDDER be excused. He is detained from the House by severe indisposition, and is under medical treatment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RICHARDSON SCURRY.

Mr. HOWARD. I move that Mr. SCURRY be excused. He has been indisposed for some days past, but if able to come to the House at all, he will be here in time to vote.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ABRAHAM P. STEVENS.

Mr. HART. I move that Mr. STEVENS, of New York, be excused. He is confined to his house by sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHARLES SWEETSER.

Mr. OLDS. I move that Mr. SWEETSER be excused. He has been called home, partly on account of sickness in his family, and partly by urgent business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT TOOMBS.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Mr. TOOMBS is confined to his bed in this city, and cannot possibly get here. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. AMOS TUCK.

Mr. GOODENOW. I move that Mr. TUCK be excused. He has been absent from the city for some time on important and urgent business, and has not returned yet.

Mr. ORR. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Maine if Mr. TUCK is not at home canvassing the State and making speeches?

Mr. GOODENOW. I understand not. He is attending to urgent private business.

The question was then taken on Mr. GOODENOW's motion, and it was agreed to—ayes 83, noes not counted.

Mr. THOMAS Y. WALSH.

Mr. OUTLAW. Mr. WALSH is absent from the city. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALL moved that further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

So the further proceedings in the call were dispensed with, and the doors of the House were again opened.

Mr. BELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio in relation to the construction of a canal around the Falls of the Ohio, for the purpose of having it printed.

Several MEMBERS objected.

The yeas and nays were then taken upon Mr. FITCH's motion to suspend the rules, and there were—yeas 119, nays 74—as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, John Appleton, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bissell, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Bushy, E. Carrington, Cabell, Caskey, Chastain, Churchill, Clark, Cobb, Cugis, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dockery, Edmundson, Evans, Ewing, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Freeman, H. M. Fuller, T. J. D. Fuller, Gable, Gentry, Giddings, Gilmore, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Hammond, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hawley, Haven, Hendricks, Heun, Hibbard, Howard, John W. Howe, Ingersoll, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glauy Jones, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McKorkie, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Meade, Miller, John Moore, Morehead, Morrison, Murphy, Nabers, Olds, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Powell, Richardson, Robbins, Savage, Schermerhorn, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Stanley, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stone, St. Martin, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Venable, Ward, Watkins, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, and Williams—119.

NAYS.—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Andrews, Babcock, Barrere, Bartlett, Bell, Bennett, Bowne, John H. Boyd, Brenton, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. So (two thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

CASE OF COLONEL D. E. MITCHELL.

Mr. PHELPS. The other day, I submitted a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill for the relief of Colonel Mitchell was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. There is a pressing necessity that that bill should be acted upon. To avoid any difficulty, however, to the consideration of the bill, I move to suspend the rules, that we may proceed to consider the motion to reconsider, which I submitted the other day.

It is suggested to me by gentlemen around me, in whose knowledge of the rules I have confidence, that the motion to reconsider may be called up at any time; and I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to its being called up now.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The difficulty is, that if that motion should prevail, the bill, as it contains an appropriation, must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union again. But the proper course would be to move to suspend the rules, in order to entertain a motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill. If two thirds vote for that motion, we can then pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the object could be attained by either mode, but as the motion to reconsider is pending, it would be more regular to dispose of that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Missouri will, with the unanimous consent of the House, withdraw his motion to reconsider, he can then move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection that the motion to reconsider be taken up?

Mr. KING, of New York, objected.

Mr. PHELPS. I move, then, to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose?

Mr. PHELPS. For the purpose of submitting a motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. JONES. Well; that motion ought not to be agreed to.

Mr. KING, of New York. In order to understand this question, I wish to know if the bill does not make an appropriation of money, and is not, therefore, required by the rules of the House to be considered in committee?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. One more question, in order, if possible, to render this matter a little plainer. I understand that the bill has been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that a motion has been submitted to reconsider the vote by which it was so referred; nevertheless, it has been referred to the committee, and if we now discharge the committee, we shall supersede the motion to reconsider. I hope, therefore, that the motion to suspend the rules will prevail.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, called for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. JONES. I should like to inquire of some gentleman who knows, what is the amount of appropriation involved in this bill?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. This bill has, by a vote of the House, been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] now makes a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was so referred. Now, while that motion is pending, the bill does not go to the committee. It cannot go there until the motion to reconsider has been disposed of. Now, I ask, is it competent for the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of a bill which has not gone to that committee at all? I think it is not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that it is competent for the House to suspend the rules for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I think I have the right to say a single word in explanation of this motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would hear the gentleman with the greatest pleasure, if it be not objected to.

Mr. JOHNSON. What I have to say is this: when the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, according to the practice of the House hitherto, such reference constituted a fulfillment of the rule; therefore a motion made subsequently to take it out of committee, does not interfere with the requirement of the rule, no matter whether the bill has been up for discussion or not. I think, therefore, that it is perfectly competent for the House to suspend the rules and take up this bill for consideration. It is true; a motion has been made to reconsider, but I suggest—

Mr. PHELPS. I will obviate that difficulty.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman submits the motion to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of this bill, that motion will supersede the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PHELPS. I propose to obviate the difficulty which has been suggested in relation to this reconsideration. With the permission of the House I will withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I will suggest to the gentleman before he withdraws his motion to reconsider, that he so modify his present motion as to make it a motion to suspend the rules to bring the bill before the House for consideration, and that he do not withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PHELPS. I prefer, with the permission of the House, to withdraw the motion to reconsider, and to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that the House do now proceed to its consideration.

There was no objection, and the motion to reconsider was withdrawn.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I rise to this question of order: I think it was decided the other day that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union could not be discharged from the consideration of a subject until the committee had first had that subject under consideration.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Oh, no; there was no such decision.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand that such has been the practice of the House, and the decision of the House.

The SPEAKER. It was decided by the House that debate could not be closed upon a proposition in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, until it had been first considered in that committee; but the Chair is not aware of any decision that the House could not discharge that committee from the further consideration of a subject, before it had been under consideration in committee.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the reading of the 133d rule.

It was read by the Clerk, as follows:

"All proceedings touching appropriations of money shall first be discussed in Committee of the Whole House."

Mr. JONES. This bill has not been discussed in Committee of the Whole House at all, and therefore, according to the rule which has been just read, no other disposition can be made of it until it has been first discussed there.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. That is the very rule which we want to suspend.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that it is competent for the House to suspend that as well as any other rule. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended in order to enable the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] to submit his motion?

Mr. JONES. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 129, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, John Appleton, William Appleton, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bartlett, Beale, Bell, Breckenridge, Briggs, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chastain, Clingman, Conger, Curtis, Daniel, George T. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Eastman, Edmundson, Evans, Faulkner, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Giddings, Gilmore, Gorman, Green, Grey, Grow, Hall, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Henn, Horsford, John W. Howe, Ingersoll, Jackson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, McCormick, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McNeil, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Morrison, Murphy, Murray, Nabers, Newton, Olds, Outlaw, Peaslee, Pennington, Phelps, Polk, Porter, Powell, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Robbins, Robie, Sackett, Schenck, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scurry, David L. Jones, Preston King, Lockhart, Mace, Mason, McQueen, Molony, Orr, Andrew Parker, Perkins, Skelton, Stuart, George W. Thompson, Townsend, Wallace, Wildrick, and Woodward—44.

So the rules were suspended.

Mr. PHELPS. I now submit my motion, that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I have indicated, and that the House do proceed to the consideration of that bill; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

The House was divided upon seconding the demand for the previous question, and there were—yeas 85, noes 42.

So the previous question was seconded; and

The main question was then ordered.

The question was taken, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the bill—yeas 98, noes 40.

Mr. PHELPS. The bill is, I believe, now before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering it to a third reading.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to say a word or two in explanation of the bill.

Several MEMBERS. Move the previous question.

Mr. PHELPS. Very well; I move the previous question upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

The question was taken, and the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading.

The bill, being a bill for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Mitchell, of Missouri, was read through.

Mr. PHELPS said: Mr. Speaker, I now desire to say a few words in explanation of the bill.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "Move the previous question!"]

Mr. PHELPS. The question has been asked how it is that this amount has been increased from $30,000 to $100,000. In reply to that question, I will say that Mr. Harmony first presented his claim to the House of Representatives, upon which a favorable report was made. He presented in his memorial evidence that property of his, to the amount of some $80,000, had been taken by Colonel Mitchell under the command of his superior officer—Colonel Doniphan. But finding that his claim met with no quarter in Congress, or at least that his prospects were not very flattering; and finding Colonel Mitchell—who is a resident of the State of Missouri—in the city of New York, instituted a suit against him in the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York. Colonel Mitchell informed the Secretary of the Treasury that a suit had been commenced against him, and also informed him of the evidence necessary to defend the case. The Solicitor of the Treasury examined the case, and the district attorney for that district was ordered to defend the case. Colonel Mitchell also employed an attorney to aid in the defence of the case. A trial was had, and judgment to the amount of some $95,000 was obtained against him. But the plaintiff had no means of satisfying that judgment, because Colonel Mitchell had no property under the jurisdiction of that court. A transcript of the judgment was therefore taken to Missouri, and a suit commenced in the county where Mitchell resided, and a judgment has been obtained against him for one hundred and odd thousand dollars, and the execution placed in the hands of an officer, to be levied upon Mitchell's property.

It is, perhaps, unfortunate for Mitchell, that he is able to meet this execution. I say it is unfortunate, because if Congress refused to afford him relief, his property will have to be sacrificed, and he will then have a just claim upon Congress to indemnify him for the consequences of having obeyed the orders of his superior military officer, and that in defence of his country.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to ask the gentleman if it be true, as was stated the other day, that Governor Marcy was employed as counsel for the defence in the suit?

Mr. PHELPS. Governor Marcy was Secretary of War at the time the property was taken by order of Colonel Doniphan. He was em-played by Harmony in the prosecution of the suit against Colonel Mitchell. Colonel Mitchell employed a man by the name of Alonzo B. Achan I believe. Mr. Sheppard was the district attorney for that district at that time, and was directed by the Government of the United States to defend the suit.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Can the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] state whether there is not a suit pending in the Supreme Court, in the lower story of this building, in regard to this matter; and if so, whether that decision may not be reversed, and Colonel Mitchell released from the judgment now pending against him? I understand that the case is pending in the Supreme Court, brought there by a writ of error from the court at St. Louis.

Mr. PHELPS. I understand that during the progress of that trial in the court in New York, exceptions were taken to the ruling of that court. The case was then presented to Mr. Crittenden, Attorney General, and his advice taken in relation thereto. He advised against the prosecution of the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. Such, I understand, are the facts in reference to that matter, and consequently no appeal is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. I desire to be informed what amount of property was taken by the Government of the United States from Harmony?

Mr. PHELPS. The judgment of the court will be a sufficient answer to that. I hold here in my hands the report made by the Committee of Claims, at the first session of the Thirtieth Congress, and from this document it appears that Mr. Harmony proved before that committee that property to the amount of more than $60,000 was seized by Colonel Mitchell, and taken into his possession.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask my friend from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] if he did not in the Thirtieth Congress, with that report before him, in concert with his colleague from Missouri, [Mr. BOWLIN,] oppose the bill for the relief of Harmony?

Mr. PHELPS. I will inform the gentleman of the course I pursued on that occasion. I did oppose the bill for the relief of Harmony. I entertained the opinion that he was not entitled to the amount of relief which he demanded. I was satisfied that he was entitled to something, but the exact amount I could not tell. That question was one for the accounting officer to determine; and furthermore, that has nothing to do with the case. Will you see an officer, who has executed the commands of his superior officer, receive injury from that obedience, and see his property sacrificed, and that, too, for obeying the orders of his superior officer in an enemy's country where, if he had disobeyed them, he would have been court-martialed?

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will permit, I will state that I am informed by a Representative upon this floor from the State of New York, that Judge Nelson has informed him that this case is pending in the Supreme Court on an appeal.

Mr. VENABLE. That cannot possibly be so, because if you will look at the report and the evidence in this case, it will be found that they prove this state of facts. Every lawyer knows that if there was a writ of error, the court would suspend judgment. Every lawyer knows that an appeal, when made, brings a case from the court below to—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, made a remark wholly inaudible to the Reporter.

Mr. VENABLE. A transcript of the judgment was sent to Missouri, and a suit instituted upon it in that State, and a judgment obtained thereon. Upon the judgment thus obtained, an execution was issued in the State of Missouri against the property of Colonel Mitchell.

Mr. PHELPS. That is certainly so.

Mr. VENABLE. The history of this case is this—

Mr. BARTLETT. I rise to a privileged question. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet again on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot take the floor from another who is upon it, although his question is a privileged one.

Mr. VENABLE. I have no inclination to take up the time of the House.

Mr. FOWLER, (interrupting.) I wish to ask a single question.

Mr. VENABLE. I cannot yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. FOWLER,] and I protest against this mode of farming out the floor by one member to another. I cannot yield, and must make the remarks I have set out to make.

The history of the case is this: it appears to me singular that difficulties should arise in the minds of anybody, when it must be perceived that there never was a case before this House in which the iron arm of the law was bearing down upon a defenceless individual with more crushing and merciless force than in the case now before us.

Mr. PHELPS, (interposing.) I have yielded so much and so often to the inquiries of my friends, that I am obliged to move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a single question?

Mr. PHELPS. I will.

Mr. FOWLER. If I understand the gentleman from Missouri, he states that the property taken amounts to $60,000. Now, I wish to inquire what became of that property? Was it given back to Harmony, or what was done with it?

Mr. HALL. The Mexican authorities confiscated it.

Mr. PHELPS. The property was confiscated by the authorities of the city of Chihuahua, in the district of Chihuahua.

Mr. FOWLER. Was it finally returned to this claimant?

Mr. PHELPS. It was subsequently tendered to Mr. Harmony at Chihuahua, as the documents show. He refused to receive it, and entered his protest there against the unlawful seizure, and it was confiscated, as I am informed, by the Mexican authorities at Chihuahua.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!" from all parts of the Hall.]

Mr. PHELPS. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. STUART. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to suggest—

Mr. PHELPS. I have yielded the floor so often, that I am compelled to insist upon my demand for the previous question.

Mr. STUART. I understand that this question is pending in the Supreme Court. It is not denied.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I rise to a privileged question: I move to reconsider the vote by which this bill was ordered to its third reading, and upon that motion I desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable. The previous question has been demanded upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Demanded but not seconded. I understand the privileged question I make to take precedence of the motion for the previous question, and that it is debatable. Do I understand the Chair to decide otherwise?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The privileged question does take precedence, and certainly is debatable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, upon reflection, is of opinion that the gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to debate the question.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of order. The vote by which this bill was ordered to a third reading was under the operation of the previous question, and the gentleman from Kentucky cannot debate the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the previous question was exhausted by the order to read the bill a third time, and, therefore, overrules the point of order made by the member from Missouri. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I should have voted for the passage of this bill without hesitation, had the previous question been ordered without debate, for I should not have heard the suggestions of difficulties which now appear to be in the way. I desire to say that no gentleman upon this floor would more readily extend relief to Colonel Mitchell than I would, under a proper state of the case. But it is asserted by a gentleman from New York, a member of this House, that he has been informed by a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States that a writ of error in the case of Harmony vs. Mitchell is now pending in the Supreme Court—that it came up from the Southern district of New York; and is designed to test the validity of the judgment rendered against Colonel Mitchell in favor of Manuel X. Harmony. I am aware that suit was instituted by this man Harmony against Mitchell, and that such proceedings were had as resulted in a judgment at law in the district court of New York for upwards of $95,000. I understand that Harmony took the record to Missouri, and sued upon the New York judgment—I presume in a State court—and that he procured a judgment upon said record, and that execution has issued thereupon against the property of Colonel Mitchell for about $102,000. In the meantime, the case from New York has been brought up to the Supreme Court by a writ of error, without a supersedeas, and that such a proceeding neither stops the execution on the New York judgment, nor suspends proceedings upon the Missouri judgment. But it is also certain, that while matters seem to have reached this crisis with Colonel Mitchell, the chancery power of the courts in Missouri may be successfully appealed to in order to suspend the collection of this debt until the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States shall be pronounced upon the writ of error which has been sued out to the New York district court. I acknowledge the obligation of Congress to protect Colonel Mitchell from loss; but there is a right way of going about this matter. If we pass this bill, the money will pass into the hands of Manuel X. Harmony, who may not be responsible and who is an alien, as I understand, and should the judgment be reversed by the Supreme Court, the United States will have suffered a complete loss of the whole amount. My only object in moving to reconsider the vote in this bill is to suggest to the House the propriety of putting the act in such shape, before its passage, that no payment can be made by the Secretary of the Treasury until the legal remedy shall have been quite exhausted by a final affirmation of the judgment in the court below by the Supreme Court. In the meantime, it must be remembered that the judgment in Missouri is operative, and the sacrifice of Mitchell's property can be made under the execution upon that judgment, and that the sale will not be affected by whatever decision shall be rendered here upon the New York record. As I remarked before, should there be a probability of reversing the New York judgment, the chancellor in Missouri can be appealed to for an injunction to stay proceedings in the Missouri judgment until this cause can be decided. And there will be no difficulty in procuring such an injunction. Let the United States procure the surety for an injunction bond, and the chancery proceedings can be instituted in Mitchell's name. But, unless there is some probability of a reversal, the injunction will be a dangerous expedient, for the dissolution of the injunction will cost $10,200, more than will now discharge the debt. The question addresses itself to the sound discretion of Congress, who will, I suppose, be guided in the case by the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. WELCH. I would inquire of the honorable member from Kentucky, if the bill is not already in the shape in which he desires to have it? It simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the Missouri judgment.

Mr. MARSHALL. It is true that the act authorizes the Secretary to pay the money, but that is the usual verbiage of the laws which direct the payment of money. Under this law, the Secretary will be at liberty to settle the Missouri judgment by payment before this night. I am not willing to pay it, if there is a reasonable chance to reverse the case. I will not vote $102,000 to pay a debt, which I understand could have been settled three years since for $30,000, while there is a writ of error in the case pending and undetermined in the Supreme Court, unless I understand very distinctly from the proper legal adviser of the Government that there is no chance to reverse the judgment of the court below. I will then vote it to shield Colonel Mitchell from loss, and not because I think it proper or fair, as against the Government, upon the merits.

Mr. TAYLOR (interrupting) asked a question entirely inaudible to the Reporter.

Mr. MARSHALL. I understand that Mr.

FAULKNER, of Virginia, has been down to the Supreme Court room, and has ascertained the fact that a writ of error in this cause is pending in that Court.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that the cause is not pending in the Supreme court.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am informed that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] has been down to the Supreme Court rooms, and knows the facts to be as I have stated them.

Mr. HAVEN. With the permission of the gentleman from Kentucky, inasmuch as considerable has been said about it, I will state briefly what I know upon this subject. I found a very general desire on the part of the House to pass this bill when it was up before; and, on Friday or Saturday of last week, I met Mr. Justice Nelson in the street, and had a conversation with him for the purpose of gathering the facts of the case. The two things I told him I desired to be informed about, were: First, whether there was a writ of error pending in the Supreme Court of the United States; and the next was, what was the character of the proof before the court (for he was the justice, I understood, who presided at the trial) in reference to the measure of damages.

Mr. LOCKHART. Will the gentleman allow me for a moment. I will not take half a minute.

Mr. HAVEN. I cannot. I have the floor by the favor of the gentleman from Kentucky to make a statement. I was informed by Mr. Justice Nelson, that there was a writ of error now pending upon the calendar of the Supreme Court, brought up upon the judgment rendered before him in the circuit court of New York. I then inquired of him in reference to the measure of damages, the rule by which the damages had been allowed upon the trial before him. He told me that he could not state with accuracy by what rule that had been governed, but he said that the evidence upon the subject of damages would be found in the record. I went to the Supreme Court room for the purpose of seeing the record, but found it locked up. I said to the Judge that I had understood Mr. Harmony had offered to take $30,000 to discharge his claim upon the Government, and that this bill which we have before us, provides for over $100,000. He told me that the cause was put off, according to his recollection, for over a year, to allow the parties to execute a commission at Santa Fe, or in New Mexico, for the purpose of getting evidence upon the subject of damages, and that, after the commission had been returned, the subject of damages was passed upon sub silentio, the proof seeming to be satisfactory. That is all the information I have in my possession. I understand this writ of error is from the judgment rendered in the circuit court for the southern district of the State of New York. I also understand that judgment has been sued out, upon a transcript of the record of the court in New York, in a court of Missouri; that execution had been issued upon that judgment, and that the consequences are likely to follow upon that execution which have been described by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS.] I return my thanks to the gentleman from Kentucky for his kindness in allowing me to make this statement.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I now hold in my hand a memorandum furnished by the clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States a moment since, which will remove all doubt as to the pendency of a writ of error in this case. He says, the transcript of the record has been sent up, a writ of error has been sued out, and the case stands No. 178 on the trial docket of the court. Now, under these circumstances, the proposition to direct the Secretary to go forward and pay off the debt may be very injurious to the interests of the United States, for the decision in the Supreme Court may reopen the cause on the original merits, and indeed may indicate that Mitchell is not responsible for an arrest made under orders from his military commander in time of war in an enemy's country; for I do not learn from anything that has yet been said that Harmony lost possession of his merchandise, though he was detained with Doniphan's command, in order to prevent him from joining the enemy—as a trader.

I submit to the consideration of the House that we are not prepared, under the circumstances, to pass the bill at present, and due caution and a proper regard for the duties we are here to discharge demand that before we act finally, an opportunity should be afforded to confer with the Attorney General of the United States, who has no doubt looked critically into the record of this cause, and is prepared to give his opinion. We should take time, and before we vote to pay this debt we should learn from the Attorney General his opinion of the proposition to enjoin the judgment in Missouri until the rendition of an opinion by the Supreme Court in the case from New York.

I am not willing to pass the authority we hold over the public money to any one. When this debt must be liquidated we can vote the money, and direct its appropriation to the object we intend; but now, it is our duty to see whether the actual necessity for the appropriation exists, and whether it cannot, by any device, be avoided. The execution has not been levied upon Colonel Mitchell's property as yet, and we all know that there will intervene some days from the levy to the sale. There is no necessity for this absolute action to-day, so far as we can see. It is our duty to go back upon our steps if we can contest this demand further, and not, under apprehension of injury to Mitchell, throw away $102,000 upon Emanuel X. Harmony.

I understand that no one disputes our obligation to shield Colonel Mitchell from loss. The point is, that in protecting him we may owe it to the country to take the reins of this case into our own hands, and see whether the United States cannot reverse this judgment, stay proceedings upon the execution at St. Louis, and renew the contest upon the original merits before the inferior tribunal, by which this enormous judgment may be reduced to those limits which once would have contented the claimant. It is suggested to me by gentlemen to move to postpone this question to a day certain. I do not feel disposed to raise the question, and then to ask its postponement, but I do think the House should regard this transaction with the closest scrutiny—not that I suppose anything wrong on Mitchell's part—but to see if we cannot avoid the wrong which we are about to be forced to submit to, in order to protect him from undeserved loss.

Mr. KING, of New York. The whole matter should be referred to a committee.

Mr. MARSHALL. I prefer to have the vote upon the motion to reconsider. Should that motion prevail, the bill can be taken up at our next sitting, and in the meantime those interested can learn the views of the Attorney General, and the bill can be amended properly, if necessary, and then passed.

Mr. DISNEY. I propose to say a solitary word in regard to this matter, and it is simply this: that notwithstanding the appeal which has been presented by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] and the purpose for which he urges it, there is another aspect in which this case must be viewed, which divests them of all force whatever. Permit me here to remark that I have taken no sort of interest in this matter until the present time. The nature of the case now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, at least from the testimony which has been adduced before us, and from this discussion and the one had heretofore in relation to this matter—has been with reference to the liability of Colonel Mitchell, and not the injury to this man Harmony; for that seems to be conceded upon all sides. Then whatever the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States may be, it will not touch the point to which I now allude, to wit: the injuries inflicted upon Emanuel X. Harmony. If the Supreme Court of the United States shall decide Colonel Mitchell was not justly and legally liable to indemnify Harmony for the damage inflicted upon him by these proceedings, still behind that remains the paramount question of indemnity to Harmony. Then it appears from the testimony which we have heard related to the House by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] that the question of the amount of indemnity has been settled by the common agreement of the parties—sub silentio. In reference to that question there was no dispute. This question as to whether Colonel Mitchell is justly and legally liable does not touch the main question, that is, the proper indemnification of an individual who has been wronged by the acts of officers of this Government. I will not occupy the attention of the House any longer. In conformity with the suggestion of a friend who sits near me, and in order to enable the House to possess themselves fully of the facts of the case and the precise points involved in it, I move the consideration of this subject be postponed for one week.

[Cries of "That is right!" "That is right!"]

Mr. STUART. I concur entirely in the motion of the gentleman. There is no disposition here to do injustice to Colonel Mitchell or anybody else, and we should not go pell mell into paying a judgment, when it is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States upon a writ of error.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire of the Speaker if the House adjourn in the present position of this matter, it will not go over until next Monday?

The SPEAKER. It would, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to a privileged question. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] yield?

Mr. JONES. I do; but shall oppose the motion.

Mr. STANTON. I presume every gentleman is aware of the object of this motion.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. JONES demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn till Wednesday, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 87, nays 74—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, W. Appleton, Babcock, Barrere, Bartlett, Beale, Bell, Bennett, Bissell, John H. Boyd, Breckenridge, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Burrows, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Clingman, Daniel, Geo. T. Davis, Dean, Disney, Dockery, Edgerton, Edmundson, Evans, Faulkner, Florence, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Gentry, Gilmore, Goodenow, Gorman, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Haas, Haswell, Haven, Henn, Horsford, Jenkins, James Johnson, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Landry, Letcher, Lockhart, McDonald, McMullin, Meade, Miller, Morehead, Murray, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Price, Robie, Russell, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Thurston, Ward, Washburn, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Wildrick, and Yates—87.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ashe, Averett, David J. Bailey, Bowne, Brenton, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Caskey, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Conger, John G. Davis, Dawson, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Ewing, Ficklin, Fitch, Fowler, Gamble, Giddings, Grow, Hammond, Harper, Hebard, Hendricks, Hibbard, Howard, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Humphrey Marshall, McLanahan, McNair, McQueen, Molony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Nabers, Orr, Outlaw, Peaslee, Pennington, Perkins, Phelps, Polk, Rantoul, Robbins, Sackett, Scurry, Skelton, Smart, Smith, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Stratton, George W. Thompson, Townsend, Venable, Walbridge, Wallace, Watkins, Welch, Wilcox, Williams, and Woodward—74.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I believe there is nothing new before the House.

The SPEAKER. There is the question upon reconsidering the vote by which the bill upon the table for the relief of Colonel Mitchell was ordered to be read a third time, and there is a question submitted by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] to postpone until Monday next.

The question was then taken upon Mr. DISNEY's motion, and it was agreed to.

INDIAN AGENT FOR CALIFORNIA.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will now send this bill, which is an act to provide for the appointment of superintendent of Indian affairs in California, to the Clerk's desk, and I ask the House seriously and in sober earnest, to allow me an opportunity of reporting it back from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment.

Mr. KING, of New York. I object. There are a great many bills and resolutions which would be presented if the House would give an opportunity for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will move to suspend the rules. It is a matter of public importance, and ought to be acted upon.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the rules were suspended.

The bill entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a superintendent of Indian affairs in California," was then read.

The bill provides for the appointment of a superintendent at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and a secretary at a salary of $2,500.

The amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs proposes to reduce the salary of the superintendent to $4,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. For the information of the House, I will ask that the sections of law which are put in force by the bill, be read. I have no speech to make about the case. The Government is losing thousands and thousands of dollars every month for the want of the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill reported back with an amendment. The question, then, will be first upon the amendment.

The bill and amendment having been read—

Mr. JOHNSON. I will ask the Clerk to read those portions of the acts which are put in force.

The sixth section of the act of May 6, 1822, was read, as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint a superintendent of Indian affairs to reside at St. Louis, whose power shall extend to all Indians frequenting that place, whose salary shall be $1500 per annum; and one agent for tribes within the limits of East and West Florida, with a salary of $1,500.

Mr. JOHNSON. I will state to the House the bill puts so much of that law in force as relates to the superintendent, placing him upon the same footing as every other superintendent is placed. I ask that the fifth section of the act of May 25, 1824, be read:

"Sec. 5. And be it enacted, That the superintendent of Indian affairs of St. Louis, and his successors in office, shall possess all the powers and be subject to all the duties of Governors of Territories when exercising the office of superintendents of Indian affairs, and shall exercise a general supervision of the official conduct and accounts of Indian agents within his superintendency."

I will state, also, for the information of the House, that those two sections for the most part attain the object sought for. I ask that the Executive recommendation referred to us at the beginning of the session in regard to this subject, shall be read:

"The means heretofore placed at the disposal of the Department applicable to Indian purposes in California have been manifestly inadequate. It is quite evident that, without the expenditures of large sums of money, our Indian affairs in California and Oregon cannot be properly conducted; and in this connection I respectfully suggest the policy of passing a law establishing the office of Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs for that State and Territory. A general and controlling power, more direct than it is possible for this office to bring to bear, is of the highest importance in the adjustment of our relations with the numerous tribes of Indians in those remote portions of our wide-spread domain."

I will state, also, for the information of the House, that instead of complying with this recommendation which proposed to create an assistant commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Senate preferred to send us the bill in such form as will preserve the policy heretofore adopted in regard to these matters, rather than strike out any new course of policy. Therefore this bill comes in the shape of a superintendency. The Government needs it, but I will make no speech about it. I shall call for the previous question, believing the House will prefer to vote, rather than to hear any speech upon the subject.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not wish to throw any obstacle in the way. I would suggest to the gentleman a slight amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to accommodate the gentleman, but will not assent to any other proposition than that which the committee have offered. After a full consideration they have reduced one salary, and they have offered one amendment. I will not consent to any other.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken on the amendment, and it was agreed to.

The bill was then, according to order, read the third time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is the previous question exhausted?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I ask for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken, and the bill was passed.

Mr. JOHNSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the joint resolution of the Senate authorizing a continuation of the work on the two wings of the Capitol, and the bill from the Senate making an appropriation for the repair of the Congressional Library room, be made the special order, and in the order named, for Wednesday, the 10th instant, to continue so from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. SCURRY objected.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to inquire if the proposition of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky does not interfere with a pending special order?

Mr. STANTON. That is set for to-morrow, and mine is set for Wednesday week.

The SPEAKER. The operation of the special order would be this: if the former special order conflicted with it, this would have to pass over until the other is decided, and then it would come up.

Mr. CHANDLER. The objection is withdrawn to it, from this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. STANLY. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] as there is no objection to making the bill for the extension of the Capitol the special order, that we pass the bill for the Library now. There can be no objection to it, and it is a case in which the members of the House are more concerned.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If there is time to do it, I have no sort of objection.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I will object to the introduction of any bill.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RANTOUL. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CLEVELAND] asks that the Journal may be corrected, his vote being erroneously stated. Upon the motion to lay the bounty land bill upon the table, he is represented as voting nay, when he voted yea.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the Journal will be so corrected.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill of which previous notice had been given, "granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Indiana and Illinois, for the construction of a railroad from Terra Haute to Springfield and branch thereof;" which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Virginia. During my sickness, certain memorials of the Legislature of Pennsylvania were presented to this House in relation to a bridge across the Ohio river, at Wheeling. I now beg leave to present a memorial of a portion of the members of the Legislature of Pennsylvania.

A MEMBER. Present it under the rule.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to do it now. The memorial says, that the bridge across the Ohio river at Wheeling is not such an obstruction to the navigation of that river as to require its elevation to a greater height, or its abatement as a nuisance. I also present a paper containing the official consent of the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company, asking that Congress may declare their bridges military roads, and pray for such protection as Congress may give. I also hold in my hand a petition of nine hundred citizens of the county of Ohio, praying Congress to take that public work under its protection, as Congress is bound to do by the act of April 30th, 1802. All of which I desire to present to the House, in order that the papers may be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, asked the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice had been given.

Mr. SMART moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS demanded the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the House adjourned till Wednesday next, at 12 o'clock, m.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BARTLETT gave notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he should ask leave to introduce a bill, entitled, "An act making an appropriation of public land to the State of Vermont, for internal improvements, the support of schools, and the support of the indigent deaf and dumb, blind, and insane."

PASSENGERS IN MERCHANT VESSELS.

Mr. DAVIS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels," approved February 22, 1847; and also, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the ventilation of passenger vessels," approved March 17, 1848.

Mr. D. I will ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up that bill now.

The bill was read, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. DAVIS. It is rather important, if this bill is passed at all, that it should be passed speedily. I will state the object of it, and the Senate will see the propriety of the motion to take it up. The acts relating to passengers, which are referred to in this bill, and of which this bill is an amendment, provide for certain penalties in case of the violation of their provisions, and these penalties are made a lien upon the vessel. The courts in New York have fallen into some doubt and difficulty in regard to enforcing the provisions of the last named act by the lien. The object of this act is simply to provide that the lien shall attach to the vessels in all cases; and the reason why I wish it acted upon now, is this: the principal usefulness of the act is its application to foreign vessels, and if its application is not immediate, and the for-sign vessel leaves the port of this country, the lien becomes of no utility whatever. The bill which I now propose to the consideration of the Senate, provides that the lien shall attach immediately to the vessel, and that the party may relieve himself from that lien by giving a bond to secure the execution and the judgment, if one be rendered against him.

The provisions of this bill are all quite necessary and important, and are placed on as favorable a foundation for the parties as they can well be. There is now considerable complaint in New York that foreign vessels violate these laws, and escape their penalties because the lien does not attach to the vessels, thus giving them an opportunity to go away and escape the penalty.

The bill was then read a second time. It consists of two sections, the first of which provides that the first section of the act to regulate the carriage of passengers on board of merchant vessels, approved February 22d, and the eighth section of the act of March 17, 1848, be so amended as to provide that when any master of a vessel shall violate the provisions of these sections by taking on board their vessels a greater number of passengers than the proportion specified in said section admit, the master of such vessel shall pay the sum of $50 for each passenger so taken; the penalty to be recovered and distributed in like manner as is provided by the act to regulate the duties on tonnage; and that every such master violating the sections as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and, upon conviction, may be imprisoned for any period not exceeding one year.

The second section provides that the penalties thus imposed shall be liens upon such vessels, and they may be libeled in the district courts of the United States held in the several States where such vessels may arrive; but that such vessel may be discharged from such lien by security being given for the payment of any judgment thus obtained.

There being no amendment, the bill was reported to the Senate, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. GWIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the payment by the Surveyor General of California for the surveys which may be executed of any claims which have been or may be presented to the Board of Land Commissioners for adjudication under the act of Congress approved 3d March, 1851, "to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California."

Mr. MORTON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way to "the Pensacola and Navy-Yard Plank Road Company" through the public lands.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SEWARD, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of James McGregor; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

He also, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the safety and the health of emigrant passengers in merchant vessels; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ATCHISON, (on behalf of Mr. BRIGHT,) agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to bring in a bill explanatory of an act entitled "An act in addition to an act therein mentioned," passed May 9, 1851; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill to provide for the appointment of a Superintendent of Indian Affairs in California, and it concurred therein.

From explanations made by Senators, it appeared that the amendment consisted of the reduction of the salary from $5,000 to $4,000. Subsequently the bill was received from the House, with the signature of the Speaker, and it was signed by the President of the Senate.

CHARLES G. HUNTER.

The following resolution, which was submitted by Mr. CLEMENS on the 24th ultimo, was, on his motion, taken up and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of refunding to Charles G. Hunter the amount of losses sustained by him while commanding the steamer "Scourge" and the schooner "Taney," for supplies, for which the proper vouchers were not taken.

ASSIGNABILITY OF LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. BADGER and Mr. HUNTER expressed the hope that the Senate would take up the bill making land warrants assignable, in order that the amendment from the House of Representatives might be disposed of.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I hope that bill will not now be taken up. There are serious objections in my mind to its being taken up. In the first place, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] desires to speak upon the bill, as it has been amended by the House of Representatives, and he is not here. In the second place, I have objections to it, because if we are to have a grant of land given to us to make a railroad in Iowa, we do not want the land located by land-warrant speculators. We desire that these lands shall be held back for that purpose, otherwise the grant will avail but little; but if these warrants are assigned, the assignees will immediately locate them on the intended route. I trust that, for that reason, also, this bill will not now be taken up.

Sir, there is still another reason which I would urge. My colleague [Mr. DODGE] is prepared to proceed with his remarks on the Iowa land bill, on which he has the floor. The consideration of that bill is the unfinished business, and I trust it will not be laid aside for this or any other measure.

Mr. BADGER. The reasons assigned by the Senator from Iowa, show the manifest propriety of taking up this bill. If I understand him, he is opposed to this bill altogether.

Mr. JONES. I did not say so, nor did I mean to be so understood.

Mr. BADGER. Then what possible influence can it have upon the particular bill of which he has charge, whether this bill is taken up and disposed of this week or next? Sir, it is almost unexampled, that a bill, which has come from the House of Representatives with an amendment, and been referred to a committee, and been reported back by that committee, should be allowed by the Senate to lie over so long, without its action either in concurring in the amendment of the House, or in rejecting it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from North Carolina; but I hope my colleague will give way, and permit this bill to be taken up.

The motion to take up the bill was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT. This bill has been returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment. This amendment was referred to the Senate committee, and that committee have reported it back, recommending that the amendment be not concurred in.

Mr. BADGER. I have no objection to any particular form of taking the question; but I am so anxious to get rid of the matter that I will move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing or disagreeing with the amendment. If the Senate determine not to agree to the amendment, then the bill goes back to the House.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I ask for the reading of the House amendment.

The amendment was accordingly read. It proposed to strike out all after the first section of the bill, and insert a provision that warrants, which have been, or may hereafter be, issued in pursuance of the act of 1850, may be located upon any lands of the United States, subject to private entry at the time of such location, at the minimum price; provided, that when said warrants shall be located upon lands which are subject to entry at a greater minimum than $1 25 per acre, the locator of the land warrants shall pay to the United States in cash the difference between the value of such warrants at $1 25 per acre, and the tract of land located on.

Mr. WALKER. I believe that the Committee on Public Lands recommend that the Senate disagree with the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT. That is the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. BADGER. Out of deference to the committee who made that recommendation, as I understand by my friend from Iowa that that recommendation was unanimous, I will withdraw my motion to agree to the House amendment, and that may lead to the appointment of a committee of conference.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is, will the Senate agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives?

MR. HUNTER. I think there would be some danger, were the Senate to agree to that amendment. I understand that the Committee on Public Lands are unanimous. They think that some of the changes made in the House would lead to serious consequences.

MR. BADGER. Then I move to disagree with the amendment.

MR. HUNTER. I hope we shall disagree with the amendment, and leave the bill as we sent it to the House. I think it is a safer bill as we sent it to the House than it is in its present shape.

MR. BORLAND. I am sorry that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands is not here to present to the Senate the views of the committee; but I can state that the committee were unanimous in disagreeing to the amendment of the House, and in insisting on the bill as it passed the Senate. I do not feel prepared to go fully into the subject, and for that reason I should be unwilling to see a vote taken on this amendment without some explanation of the matter, so that the Senate may clearly understand it.

MR. BADGER. We all understand it. Let us take the vote upon it.

MR. BORLAND. If I thought so I would be willing—

MR. BADGER. The question has been discussed here for years.

MR. BORLAND. Then all I have to say is, that there are good reasons with which I will not now occupy the attention of the Senate, that would satisfy the Senate fully, not only as to the propriety of the bill as we passed it, but as to the great impropriety and impolicy of the amendment proposed by the House, particularly to that part of it which extends the operation of the bill and gives greater facilities for the location of these land warrants.

MR. DAVIS. I desire to hear that part of the bill read which the House has retained.

THE PRESIDENT. The House has retained the first section only.

The provision was read accordingly.

MR. CASS. That I understand is the section which was passed by the Senate. I should like now to hear what change is proposed to be made in the bill.

THE PRESIDENT. The change proposed is to strike out all the other sections of the bill as it passed the Senate, and substitute provisions which have been adopted by the House of Representatives.

MR. CASS. It is said that the House of Representatives have made material changes in the bill in regard to the location of the land warrants.

MR. BADGER. The House of Representatives proposes to strike out everything except the first section, and then to add provisos.

MR. CASS. Well, let the provisos be read. They were read accordingly.

The bill as amended by the House of Representatives is as follows:

"Be it enacted, &c., That all warrants for military bounty land, which have been or may hereafter be issued under any law of the United States, and all valid locations of the same, which have been, or may hereafter be made, are hereby declared to be assignable, by deed or instrument of writing, made and executed after the taking effect of this act, according to such form, and pursuant to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, so as to vest the assignee with all the rights of the original owners of the warrant or location: Provided, That any person entitled to preëemption right to any land, shall be entitled to use any such land warrant in any land of the same, at the rate of $1 25 per acre, for the payment of land therein specified: Provided, That the warrants which have been, or may hereafter be issued, in pursuance of said act or of this act, may be located upon any lands of the United States subject to private entry at the time of such location, at the minimum price: Provided further, That when said warrants shall be located upon lands which are subject to entry at a greater minimum than $1 25 per acre, the locators of said warrants shall pay to the United States, in cash, the difference between the value of such warrants at $1 25 per acre, and the tract of land located on."

MR. BROADHEAD. I ask for the reading of those sections which the House of Representatives propose to strike out.

THE PRESIDENT. Those portions of the bill will be read.

MR. HUNTER. I think I can explain the difference satisfactorily to the Senator from Pennsylvania without the necessity of again reading those portions of the bill. The great difference between the sections of the bill as it went from the Senate, and the provisions which the House of Representatives propose to substitute is this: The House proposes to allow bounty land warrants to be located on any lands hereafter to be exposed for sale. There was a provision in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill of the last year providing that these warrants should only be located on those lands which were then exposed for sale. The result would be that we should derive no revenue, for a considerable time at least, from the public lands. If we adhere to the bill as we sent it to the House of Representatives, we may still derive a revenue from the lands brought into market after the passage of the act.

MR. SHIELDS. I am very sorry that the chairman of the committee which reported this bill is not present to explain it, as it was originally reported. If I understand the matter correctly, it is a bill which passed the Senate originally with a provision, in addition to making the land warrants assignable, to pay the registers and receivers at the land offices. I had something to do, being on the Committee on Public Lands, with the preparation of the original bill. It passed the Senate and went to the House, and the House has struck out all that relates to the compensation of the registers and receivers, and sent the bill back, simply providing for the assignability of land warrants, with some other small amendments.

Now, for one, I shall oppose the passage of any bill of that kind until the House consents to make some provision for those officers who are now performing their duties without any compensation. I am actually astonished, that gentlemen of the opposite party, as I saw them do in the House, should blindly and inconsiderately vote against making any provision for the men who are now in office, receiving no compensation whatever.

This is a subject that I understand, having been at one time at the head of the Land Office, and being also a representative of a Western State; and I know these officers cannot perform their duty without compensation. Sir, in my own State there is not a man in any of these land offices who is receiving anything more than a mere nominal compensation. All the lands are now entered by land warrants, and the law has allowed them no compensation, or what is only a mere nominal one, for that duty, and yet the labor is fourfold, even more than fourfold, what it is when the entry is made by a cash payment.

This matter was all well considered by the committee in regard to the original bill, and our intention was that we would make this carry through the other bill. I am satisfied from what I see, that unless we hold on here to the original bill, we shall never get any provision made for the men who are now performing duty as land officers. I cannot go into the history of the legislation upon this subject; it would take too long a time to do so; but I call on any Senator from a Western State to say whether these men can live as officers without receiving further compensation. There are gentlemen here who have been officers themselves, and they will sustain me in what I have stated. It is very singular that we must fight for those very men who have been put in by the Administration, and fight against the friends of the Administration to get a compensation for them, not in this body, but in the House of Representatives. I have been astonished to see the contest there. I shall oppose the passage of this bill in any shape, unless it provides a compensation for the officers which I have named.

MR. BORLAND. I am sorry to be under the necessity of speaking upon this subject, and I am sorry that the chairman of the committee is not present; but I think I represent the committee fairly when I say that the amendment of the House strikes out the best features of the bill, as it passed the Senate, and it adds another which makes it very objectionable. They struck out that portion of the bill spoken of by the honorable Senator from Illinois, thereby refusing additional compensation to the land officers, and refusing it too at the very same time that they deprive them, by the terms of the bill itself, of the compensation to which they were entitled by the law which existed when they went into office. They are by law entitled to a specific salary, and in addition to that, to a percentage upon the money which they receive.

This bill, by making the land warrants receivable for land, of course deprives them of the percentage they would receive upon cash receipts; and at the same time, as the Senator from Illinois remarked, making their labor fourfold, or more than fourfold, greater than before. I think we have no right to pass this bill making land warrants assignable, or giving land warrants at all for military services, without at the same time providing for these officers in some other way the amount of compensation they would be entitled to but for the passage of this bill. Under laws long existing, these officers have gone into office, and were entitled to receive a certain compensation for their services. We now go to work and legislate them out of the compensation to which they were lawfully entitled. It seems to me that that sense of justice which every Senator must entertain, would compel us to make this provision for them, and allow them a fair compensation for their labor.

Sir, this amendment is objectionable in another respect, for it deprives a large number of meritorious individuals of a provision of bounty lands, who have claims equally meritorious as those we have provided for. The object of the bill, as it passed the Senate, is to put all persons on the same footing who have rendered military service to the country. It was not to discriminate, but to place all who were equally meritorious upon the same footing. The amendment, as it comes from the House, strikes out this provision of the bill, and discriminates offensively and injuriously.

But I said that the amendment not only struck out portions of the bill which were themselves meritorious, but added a feature which is seriously objectionable. The first section of the bill, as it passed the Senate, permitted the land warrants to be located upon any land in market, and subject to entry at private sale, with proper restrictions. The House has so amended it that they throw open the whole body of the public lands, not only that which we have now, but that which we may have hereafter; and subjects the whole to the operation of these land warrants. The effect of it must be, as any one can see, to induce speculators to monopolize the land warrants and hoard them up, or concentrate them on large tracts of land which are not now in the market, and not only deprive the Government, in this way, of all revenue to be derived from the public lands—which seems to be a consideration with those who look to the public lands as a source of revenue—but seriously injure those who have located in the country, by preventing the settlement of the country and the opening of it to improvement, and consequently preventing an increase in the value of the lands.

I am sorry that I had not expected to be called on to explain this subject, in order that I might have prepared myself to present the views which were given in the committee in a proper manner to the Senate. These are the reasons which operated upon the committee in objecting to the amendment of the House, and recommending that we should insist upon the bill as it passed the Senate. I think the proper course will be to insist upon the bill as we passed it, and let it go back to the House, and a committee of conference be appointed to adjust the difference between us.

MR. DAVIS. In my opinion, the most expedient course for the Senate to pursue is to agree to the amendment proposed by the House. My reasons for suggesting this as the more appropriate course, are founded principally upon the fact that a large number of the persons who were benefited by the act of 1850, were by that act denied the privilege of using and disposing of the benefit which is conferred upon them, according to their own judgment. They are insulted, I may say, with a provision in that bill, denying to them the right of transferring this property according to their own judgment and discretion. It is that offensive feature of the bill which we set out to remove when we began to legislate upon this subject; and by that portion of the bill which is now left, it is removed, and therefore it is that I would vote to concur in the amendment of the House, in order to obtain that object which I consider of so much importance to these individuals.

What is the objection to it? It is said that many and valuable provisions which were inserted in the bill which passed the Senate, have been struck out by the House of Representatives. I know very well that provisions have been struck out of which I most heartily and cordially approve; and among others, those which were referred to by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS.] I am quite willing that the officers to whom he referred should have a suitable compensation for their services; but I put it to my friend as a man of honor, and as a man who loves to extend justice to all who are entitled to it, whether it is right to endanger the rights of the individuals to whom I have referred, in order to compel the House of Representatives to do justice to another set of individuals? I think it is a principle which the honorable Senator will not, upon reflection, attempt to enforce. He withholds a measure of justice which is eminently required and demanded by the individuals for whom the provision is made, and he withholds it to obtain another object which he has in view. I think that course cannot be justified. While I approve the provisions to which the honorable Senator has referred with regard to the land offices, and desire that they should be adopted, I also desire that certain other provisions contained in that bill, which were struck out by the House, should become a law; and I understand that the House of Representatives have the subject now before them in an independent bill, having separated it from this, because there were matters of controversy contained in the provisions which they struck out. They have now introduced them in a separate bill, as I understand, and propose to act upon it whenever they have time and an opportunity to do it. They have separated the subjects so as to give dispatch to business, and in my opinion, it was just and proper to do so if there was a controversy that was likely to create delay in the passage of this bill.

The honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] says, there is an additional clause in the amendment of the House, by which the privilege of location is extended to other lands than those which were indicated by the original bill, to any lands which are surveyed and brought into market, not only those which are sold at the minimum price, but those brought in at a larger price. I see no injustice in that, no objectionable principle or feature in it. If you intend to give to the old soldiers of the war of 1812 a douceur which shall be acceptable to them, why not give it to them in the form which is usual; why not give them an opportunity to locate upon any lands which are in market, not only those which are in the market at the day the bill passes, but those which shall be brought in hereafter? What objection can there be to that? So far as I am concerned, the bill is very acceptable to me as it is.

The Senator says the revenue will be impaired by the operation of this amendment. It may be so; but even if it is so, I do not think that it is any objection to it. I can see no impropriety in it. But I do not understand how the revenue is to be impaired by it. They can take up the land assigned by the warrants, and no more. Of what consequence is it in what part of the country they take it, or whether they take it from land in the market at the time the bill is passed, or from that which shall come into the market afterwards. I hope all the friends of the old soldiers, provided for by those bills, will vote to agree to the amendment of the House, and let the bill become a law.

Mr. WALKER. I think the amendment of the House of Representatives is about all that is necessary to make this preëminently a scheme for speculation. I thought it was bad enough when the bill passed the Senate, but it is wonderfully improved by the House of Representatives. As the bill passed the Senate, the preëminently, the man entitled to a preëminently, had the privilege of purchasing the land to which he had the preëminently, with these land warrants. But as it comes back from the House of Representatives, he is cut off from that privilege, while the new surveys and new purchases are thrown completely open to him who holds the land warrants, for speculation. This is the way it operates. Between the time of the proclamation of the President for the public sales of the lands, and the time of the sales, the settlers on the lands preëminently will be unable to come forward and prove their preëminently right. They would be permitted by our bill to pay for the land with a land warrant. But the House strikes out that provision, and for what? To throw open all the land subject to private entry to the land warrant speculators. But at the time the preëminently wants to pay for his preëminently, it is not open to sale, and therefore it strikes down his privilege just at the only instant at which he could avail himself of it. So it will be seen that this bill would seem to have been framed, if not with the express design, yet with the inevitable tendency to benefit the speculators and not the settlers. The result would be just this. It will be seen that as the new tracts of country become subject to private entry, when new Indian purchases are made and new surveys take place and the lands become subject to private entry, these land warrants will be immensely valuable. It will be the policy of the speculators in Wall street to hoard up the warrants, in anticipation of the new lands coming into market. There they will be held. They will not go to the old refuse lands, but will wait till the new purchases and the new surveys are made, and then locate their warrants in the best part of the country, in the meantime, the settler not being permitted to locate any of them. Sir, it is one of the most ingenious things in its operation, if not in its design, for aiding the speculator, that has ever come before the Senate.

Mr. SHIELDS. In addition to what has been said by my friend from Wisconsin, I will say, and I will confine myself to one point, that these assignees, who have now a great advantage in getting warrants at a large discount, will be able to enter these warrants without giving any compensation to the officer.

Now, sir, the bill, as it originally passed the Senate, establishes this principle: that the assignee, when he makes an entry, shall pay exactly the same amount as if the entry was made for cash. It is not to be paid out of the Treasury, but by the assignee or owner who makes the entry.

The honorable Senator from Massachusetts says that he wishes that question to come up for consideration by itself, in a separate bill. Such a proposition has been before the Senate for three or four sessions, and has failed; and the only hope which we have of passing it is, to connect it with this bill. It ought to have been passed with the original bill. Sir, when this bill becomes a law, all the lands throughout the country will be entered with these warrants, and not taken up for cash. No man will enter land with cash when he can procure warrants at a less price which will answer the same purpose. And how are these land officers to live? They get no percentage. You have changed the currency, so far as the public lands are concerned, from cash to these land warrants, and you do not provide the same compensation which you gave to your officers when the entries were made with cash. This has been an oversight from the commencement. When we commenced this species of legislation we ought, with something like provident foresight, to have made provision for these men. We neglected them, and we shall only be augmenting that neglect if we pass this amendment. As the bill was originally framed, it compelled the assignees of these land warrants to pay the same for making an entry as they would have done if they had entered their land with cash. If you pass this bill as it is now, you enable parties to speculate with these warrants, and to make an entry without paying anything. You compel your officers to work for the speculator, without giving them a single cent for the performance of their labor. And if the Government appoint officers, and then starve them while in office—and I know they are doing it throughout the country—will Senators tell me that it shall be continued?

Mr. HUNTER. A single word of explanation in relation to the difference between the law as it would stand without the amendment of the House and the House amendment. Here is the proviso to which I referred in the civil and diplomatic bill of 1851:

"Provided, That no land bounty for military services granted under the act of 28th of September, 1850, entitled 'An act granting bounty lands to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States,' or by virtue of any other act of Congress, heretofore passed, granting land bounties for military services, shall be satisfied out of any public land not heretofore brought into market, and now subject to entry at private sale under existing laws."

So that if the amendment which the House of Representatives have sent to us be not adopted, the locators of bounty lands can only locate them on lands subject to private entry at the time of the passage of this proviso. If we adopt the amendment of the House, bounty lands may be located on any lands which may be hereafter brought into market. I have heard, as the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested, that a large amount of these land warrants are being held back in the hands of companies and individuals. If we adopt the amendment of the House, we may all see to what it would lead. If the bounty land bill is to require, for the satisfaction of land warrants, as large a number of acres as has been computed, this amendment of the House, if passed into a law, would lead to this result—that we should get nothing into the public Treasury from the public lands for years to come. I think, therefore, that it would be safer (for I do not wish to consume time upon this question) to adopt the recommendation of the Committee on Public Lands, and disagree to the amendment of the House. They doubtless will insist, and we shall have a committee of conference, who will regulate this matter and present us some proposition on which we can vote. Without further loss of time, I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to disagree with the amendments of the House, and then we may have a committee of conference.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire simply to call the attention of the Senate to this one point: The act of 1850 was passed for the purpose of giving land to various individuals who were considered equally meritorious with those to whom lands were given for service in Mexico. We neglected at that time (for it seems to have been an oversight in our legislation) to put them upon the same footing, by making their land warrants assignable, as those to whom land warrants were granted for service in Mexico. The object of the bill now before the Senate is to put those to whom we gave bounty lands in 1850, on an equality in all respects, as far as possible, with those to whom we gave bounty land for service in Mexico. The bill, as passed by the Senate and sent to the House, accomplished that object. The amendment of the House changes that feature of the bill, and makes a discrimination against those who have heretofore received land bounties for services in Mexico and elsewhere, and who have located them, and gives greater advantages and confers greater value on such warrants issued under the act of September 28th, 1850, as have not yet been located. It opens a much wider field and much better land for the location of these warrants. For one, I protest against making the discrimination against giving this increased compensation to persons who may now hold land warrants in their hands who may have purchased them for speculation, or who may hereafter do so. It is discriminating against those for whose benefit the law was originally passed.

Mr. GEYER. If I understand the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, he is of opinion that the provisions of this bill stricken out by the House ought to pass at some time and in some form; but he desires that we shall concur in the amendment, under the expectation that the House will at some time pass a bill that will cover all those provisions. To my mind it appears better, while we are upon the subject of these land warrants, to pass all the provisions that can pass both Houses, and to incorporate them in one bill. If we disagree to the amendment of the House, there will, in all probability, be a committee of conference, and we shall then ascertain what can be done upon the whole subject of military bounty lands, and do all that we can do in a single bill.

There are some objections, which have not been mentioned by honorable Senators, to the amendment made by the House to the first section of the bill. I suggested the other day the propriety of making an additional provision in the bills granting land to the States to aid in the construction of railroads, requiring that the reserved lands should be put up at public sale. I stated then my reasons for that opinion. I believe that most of those lands will sell for a greatly augmented price beyond the minimum fixed by the bills. When those bills, if any of them, shall pass, provision can be made by which the lands reserved shall be exposed to public sale, and by which entries shall not be made until after the lands shall have been so exposed to sale. I think it is good policy, and that the interests of the Treasury require that the reserved lands should not be subject to entry until they shall have been offered at public sale.

Mr. CASS. I agree fully with the honorable Senator from Missouri. The propriety of what he has suggested struck me so strongly, that I had the design of proposing the very subject he has now suggested; and I trust it will be proposed in some of the bills before us. I hope it will be provided that none of the reserved sections shall be sold but at public sale. The honorable Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Dawson,] in his speech day before yesterday, estimated the value of the lands given to the State of Illinois, which have finally gone to a company for the construction of a railroad, at $10 per acre. The reserved sections, of course, would bring the same price as the granted sections. The way to get at the full value, then, would be to offer the reserved lands at public sale. That would show whether or not there was an increased value given to the lands. If there is, it is just as proper for the Government to enter into competition, as for a State to do so. So it was in the commencement; and I think the suggestion of my honorable friend from Missouri is the precise suggestion that should be made. I would insert, in every one of these bills, provisions that the reserved lands should not be offered, except at public sale. Then the United States would get a fair price for the reserved lands. You ought not to allow any locator, or any one else, to take possession before the land has been offered for sale. You would then keep the advantage of it to yourselves.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. However desirable it may be to make such a provision, I doubt the policy of introducing it into this bill; and if it should be introduced, it can, perhaps, only be done after the appointment of a committee of conference by the two Houses. My object in rising is, to say that the Committee on Public Lands, who investigated this subject, came to the conclusion that unless some provision was made for the payment of the registers and receivers of the various land offices, as suggested by my friend from Illinois, in this bill, perhaps it would be impossible to get a separate bill through during the present session; and when you are doubling the labors of these men, the question is, will you allow them some compensation for it? By bringing these lands into market by the land warrant system, you are abstracting the commission which these officers would receive upon the lands sold for cash. The proposition to compensate them is so reasonable to me—although I do not feel the sympathy which gentlemen representing the land States do upon the subject—that I cannot fail to say that I must imitate the conduct of the Senator from Virginia, and insist upon the bill as we sent it to the House, and reject the amendments of the House. I hope, therefore, that, without consuming further time, unless some gentleman has any idea which he wishes to suggest, we shall take the vote immediately, and insist on the bill as it passed the Senate. If it leads to a committee of conference, we may arrange the subject as best we can.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I concur very fully in the views taken by the Senator from Virginia, who has stated that if this bill pass as it has been amended by the House of Representatives, all the lands, including the reserved lands, will be taken up by land warrants. I am confident that thousands of these land warrants have been held back expressly for the passage of this bill, in order that they may be located on lands from which they have been heretofore excluded. I am personally acquainted with the land officers in my own State, and with many in Illinois and Missouri. I know, from having been in these offices, that they have been compelled to employ additional clerical force to enable them to enter land warrants. The Senator from Massachusetts says we ought to give a douceur to the old soldiers. I am perfectly willing to do that; but when we are doing that, will we permit the registers and receivers to sit up until midnight, as I know they sometimes do, in the discharge of their duties—being unable to pay for clerk hire—and not pay them the same compensation which they are paid for entering cash sales? Their compensation cannot in any case exceed $2,500 a year—no matter how many acres of land they may sell—no matter how many millions of dollars they may take in. I hope that this act of justice to the registers and receivers will be done. If we agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives; if we agree to permit this bill to pass now, as amended by the House, we lose all hope of doing justice to these men; because I am confident the House of Representatives will not pass a bill to give them their usual compensation, if presented by itself. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of the House will not be concurred in.

Mr. GEYER. I desire to correct a misapprehension which seems to be entertained by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, with reference to the remarks which I submitted. I do so because it is possible that other Senators also may have misunderstood me. I do not propose to propose an amendment to this bill now, but to submit amendments to the bills providing for grants of land to aid in the construction of railroads. All the reserved sections of those lands are not now subject to entry at all. When those bills shall come up, I wish to have an amendment made to offer the reserved sections at public sale. I think it is a provision that should be inserted in all bills granting lands in aid of the construction of railroads; and I have prepared an amendment to one of the bills of that sort under the consideration of the Senate, with the view to bring the question before Senators.

Mr. FELCH. I was not in my seat when this discussion commenced. I have in my hand a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office on one point pertaining to this amendment, and if desired, I will read it to the Senate. The House of Representatives, by their amendment, have not only stricken out portions of the bill which I think ought to be retained, but they have added a proviso about which the Commissioner of the General Land Office has made a communication to the Committee on Public Lands. That proviso is:

"That the warrants which have been, or may hereafter be, issued in pursuance of said act, or of this act, may be located upon any lands of the United States, subject to private entry at the time of such location, at the minimum price."

Now this, as has been justly remarked, throws open for location the reserved lands along the line of railroad in Illinois, and some other States, which could not otherwise be taken up by land warrants. Some objections to that point of the subject have already been stated. Another objection which has suggested itself to my mind is this: Under the present law granting bounty lands, the beneficiary is required to take his lands all in one body. The holder of a hundred and sixty acre land warrant must take his one hundred and sixty acres all in one body. This proviso, however, if adopted, will repeal that provision, and will enable a party holding a warrant for one hundred and sixty acres to take it in forty acre lots. The effect of this always is to withhold from sale for a long time these forty acre lots. It virtually divides up the public territory. By having such small parcels, no man will purchase them for a farm—no man will purchase them for settlement except the owner of an adjoining tract. The effect of the proviso, then, would be to exclude all others from purchasing. This point is fully stated in the letter to which I have referred, and if any Senator desires to hear it, I will have it read.

The question was then taken on agreeing to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and it was decided in the negative.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, in aid of the construction of certain railroads in said State.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, addressed the Senate in favor of the bill, and in opposition to the amendment of Mr. UNDERWOOD, until the usual hour of adjournment, when, without finishing, he yielded the floor. The speech will be published in the Appendix.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 3, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of Monday was read and approved.

GRANT OF LANDS TO MISSOURI.

The SPEAKER stated, as the first business in order, the bill granting lands to the State of Missouri, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] was entitled to the floor.

CANAL AROUND THE FALLS OF THE OHIO.

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present certain resolutions passed by the Legislature of Ohio. They will not occupy much time. I only desire to have them referred to the appropriate committee and printed.

There being no objection,

Mr. DISNEY presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Ohio, relative to the construction of a canal on the Indiana side of the Falls of the Ohio river; which having been read,

Mr. D. then moved that they be printed and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. MASON. I do not see any necessity for the printing of those resolutions. The subject has undergone investigation before the Committee on Roads and Canals, and a bill has been ordered to be reported, which the chairman of the committee will report at the first convenient opportunity. It would be incurring unnecessary expense to print these resolutions. A number of resolutions of the same kind, containing the same views—I was going to say, the same erroneous suggestions—have been before the committee, and I can see no reason for printing these.

Mr. DISNEY. I am rather surprised at the objection offered by the gentleman from Kentucky; for it has been the universal usage of this House, out of courtesy and respect to the Legislatures of the different States, to print all documents emanating from them, and presented for our consideration.

Mr. MASON. If that has been the usage, I will withdraw my objection.

The question was then taken on Mr. DISNEY's motion, and it was agreed to.

PUBLICATION OF THE CENSUS RETURNS.

Mr. HASCALL, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of New York, in regard to the compilation and publication of the Compendium of the Sixth and Seventh Censuses of the United States; which were read.

Mr. H. moved that the resolutions be referred to a select committee.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAVEN. I wish to make a suggestion in reference to the disposition of these resolutions. I have myself received a copy of them, and have been considering what ought to be done with them. I am satisfied, from the course of this House heretofore, that it will be impossible for us to do anything with the census returns, that the Legislature of my State can avail itself of during its present session. It is very desirable that the Legislature of that State—and doubtless the Legislatures of all the States—should have this information. But the Legislature of New York will adjourn about the middle of April, and it will be impossible for us to reach any business of this kind before that time. I would therefore suggest that the resolutions should be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which has under consideration the resolution reported from the Committee on Printing in relation to the printing of the census.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I concur in the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, and I will withdraw my motion, and move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and on that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put; and, being put, Mr. JONES's motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the motion to refer the bill granting land to Missouri for certain railroads, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BENNETT resumed the remarks commenced on a former day, giving notice of an amendment which he intended to offer, namely: that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands, with instructions to report a bill, as a substitute therefor, making grants of lands on some equal and just principles of apportionment, and to a proper amount, to all the States, to aid in the construction of railroads therein. He argued in favor of the proposition, and against discrimination in favor of the new States to the exclusion of the old. All should share alike, the lands being public property; and he pressed his amendment on the ground of dealing fairly with regard to the rights of all States, and with a view of terminating the partial legislation on the subject of the public lands, which is urged from Congress to Congress, and which will be continued, according to the present practice, as long as there shall be an acre to grant. This was a kind of grab-game, where the noisy and clamorous get an undue share of the public domain. He did not believe in a partnership where all bear a portion of the burdens, but where all do not share in the benefits.

[Mr. B.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BENNETT having concluded—

Mr. STANLY said this matter has been before the House for some three weeks, and has been discussed long enough to enable every member to make up his opinion. It stops the way of all other reports—all other business of the House; and in order to bring the House to some action I move the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I appeal to the honorable gentleman from North Carolina to withdraw his call for the previous question. There have been grave charges during the progress of this discussion presented against the Western States generally, and against Ohio particularly. I would like to have an opportunity of making some reply. If the gentleman will withdraw the call I will renew it.

Mr. STANLY. The gentleman can take another time for the purpose of defending the interests and honor of his State.

The question was then put, "Shall the call for the previous question be seconded?" and upon a division there were—ayes 66, noes 67.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded tellers on the second, which were ordered; and Messrs. JONES and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was again put, and the tellers reported that there were ayes 73, noes 69—so there was a second; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to which proposition the following amendment is proposed, which will be read for information:

"With instructions to report a bill as a substitute therefor, making a grant of land upon some equal and just principle of apportionment, and to a proper amount to all the States, to aid in the construction of railroads therein."

Mr. KING, of New York, demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not expired, by some seven or eight minutes.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The previous question would keep this question alive.

The SPEAKER. The previous question being sustained, it will bring the House first to a vote upon the amendment to instruct the committee, and then upon the proposition to refer the bill to the committee, with or without instructions.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

The question was then taken, and resulted—yeas 70, nays 96—as follow:

YEAS—Messrs. William Appleton, Ashe, Barrere, Bartlett, Beale, Bell, Bennett, John H. Boyd, Breckenridge, Briggs, Brooks, Chapman, Churchwell, Cleveland, Clingman, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dockery, Duncan, Ewing, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gentry, Goodenow, Grey, Hammond, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Ingersoll, Ives, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Letcher, H. Marshall, McLanahan, McMullin, Meacham, Morehead, Morrison, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Perkins, Riddle, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Skelton, Smart, Richard H. Stanton, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Venable, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, and Addison White—70.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Willis Allen, Averett, Babcock, Bissell, Bragg, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Caskie, Clark, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Doty, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Faulkner, Picklin, Fitch, Freeman, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gaylord, Giddings, Grow, Hall, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hart, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Howard, Jackson, Jenkins, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, McNair, McQueen, Miller, Molony, John Moore, Murray, Nabers, Newton, Olds, Orr, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Penn, Pennington, Phelps, Porter, Powell, Kanoul, Richardson, Robbins, Robie, Scurry, David L. Seymour, Smith, Snow, Benjamin Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Strother, Stuart, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Townsend, Wallace, A. White, Wilcox, Wildrick, Woodward, and Yates—96.

So the instructions were not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon referring the bill and pending amendments to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. KING, of New York. They have been ordered.

The SPEAKER. Only upon the instructions.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

Mr. JONES. The motion is to refer the bill with the pending amendments, and to print.

The SPEAKER. There was no motion made to print, in the recollection of the Chair.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know whether this bill has ever been in Committee of the Whole or not?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 97, nays 77—as follow:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Bartlett, Beale, Bennett, Breckenridge, Buell, Carter, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cottman, Curtis, Daniel, G. T. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dockery, Duncan, Ewing, Faulkner, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gable, Gentry, Giddings, Grey, Grow, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hibbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, James Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, G. G. King, Preston King, Kurtz, Letcher, Mason, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Meacham, Morehead, Murray, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Perkins, Powell, Robie, Sackett, Savage, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Smith, Snow, Abraham P. Stevens, Alexander H. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Stratton, Sutherland, Benj. Thompson, Venable, Wallace, Washburn, Watkins, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Wildrick, and Woodward—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Barrere, Bell, Bissell, Bragg, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, Busby, E. C. Cabell, Thompson Campbell, Clark, Cobb, Conger, John G. Davis, Disney, Doty, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Evans, Ficklin, Fitch, Freeman, Gaylord, Goodenow, Green, Hall, Harper, S. W. Harris, Haws, Hendricks, Henn, John Johnson, R. W. Johnson, J. G. Jones, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, McDonald, Miller, Molony, John Moore, Nabers, Newton, Olds, Orr, Penn, Pennington, Phelps, Porter, Rantoul, Richardson, Riddle, Robbins, Scurry, Smart, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Thurston, Townsend, Welch, Wilcox, and Yates—77.

So the bill and amendments were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

HOMESTEADS TO ACTUAL SETTLERS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to consider the special order.

The question was taken, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The business in order before the committee is the special order, being House bill No. 7, "to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every man who is the head of a family and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land, out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period herein specified," and upon this question the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, [Mr. McMULLIN,] who reported the bill, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McMULLIN not being present to claim the floor, it was assigned to—

Mr. DAWSON, who expressed himself in favor of the bill and its provisions generally, because he considered it the inherent right of every citizen to obtain a grant of land without charge, and upon the principle that Governments would be more just and pure, if they possessed no revenue derived from the sale of public lands; and contended that, by the encouragement of the settlement of a country, its resources are more extensively developed. He referred to statistical dates to show that the revenues of a State should be derived from other sources than the sale of public lands, and read from authorities to prove that Congress has a right to dispose of them as it pleases; and concluded with a variety of arguments in support of his views.

[Mr. D.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. D. having concluded—

Mr. BRECKENRIDGE next obtained the floor. A motion was made that the committee rise.

The question was taken, and there were, upon a division—ayes 85; noes not counted.

The committee rose accordingly, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 7, to encourage agriculture, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

ASSIGNABILITY OF LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. A bill has been returned to the House to-day from the Senate, in which a great many of the members of this House, and the country, feel a very deep interest. It is the bill entitled "An act to make land warrants assignable, and for other purposes." The Senate have returned it here, non-concurring with all the amendments of the House. I ask that the bill may be taken up, that the House may insist upon their amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. GROW. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Missouri land bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

A motion was made to adjourn, and the question being taken, agreed to—ayes 72, noes 57.

The House then adjourned to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

PETITIONS, &c.,

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. McNAIR: The petition of John McKeever and 27 others, asking for a modification of the tariff on iron.

Also, the petition of O. Clinchman and others, asking an appropriation for the Delaware breakwater and piers, ceded to the United States, on the Delaware river.

Also, the remonstrance of citizens of Oswego county, New York, against any renewal or extension of the Woodworth patent.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 4, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

GRANT OF LAND TO MISSOURI.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Grow], to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill making a donation of the public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in Missouri was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania. I rise to a privileged question. I find myself recorded as having voted in the negative upon the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the bill granting land to Missouri. I voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected accordingly.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I voted, on yesterday, in favor of the reference of the Missouri land bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. My intention was to have voted in the negative. I tried, but failed, to attract the attention of the Speaker at the time the result was being announced, that I might have my vote changed. I desire now to have it changed.

The SPEAKER. That change cannot be made upon the Journal except by unanimous consent.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I hope the House will give unanimous consent. The result will not be affected by it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not think that it can be done. I am very willing that the gentleman should have voted the other way; but, sir, the thing suggested has never been done within my knowledge. If it was a mistake upon the Journal, the case then would be different.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs to say to the gentleman from Alabama, that, under the rule, it is competent to make a correction of the Journal, but that an alteration cannot be made unless by unanimous consent. The Chair, throughout his service, does not recollect an instance of the sort.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I will state that I rose before the vote was announced, and endeavored to draw the attention of the Chair that I might correct my mistake, but failed. I mentioned the fact to several gentlemen around me before the result was announced by the Chair. These are the facts, and I do not wish to have the Journal altered, but my mistake corrected.

Mr. JONES withdrew his objection.

The SPEAKER. There now being no objection, the change will be made as suggested by the gentleman.

Mr. SIBLEY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill, of which notice has been given, merely for the purpose of reference.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is there not a privileged question pending as the unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. There is. The Chair has stated it.

Mr. JONES. Then it is not in order, I think, to make any sort of motion.

Mr. GROW. I withdraw my privileged motion.

Mr. SIBLEY. I again ask the unanimous consent of the House for the introduction of a bill for reference.

Mr. WARD. I rise to a privileged question. I renew the motion to reconsider the vote of yesterday by which the bill granting lands to Missouri was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HEBARD. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman voted in the affirmative?

Mr. WARD. I did not vote at all. I was out when my name was called.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. Then he cannot make the privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman could not move to reconsider a vote in which he had no voice at all.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. SIBLEY, by unanimous consent of the House, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill to amend certain acts for the establishment of territorial governments in Oregon and Minnesota;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

GRANT OF LAND TO MISSOURI.

Mr. DEAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WHITE, of Alabama. I rise to a privileged question. I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill granting lands to Missouri was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOWLER. Did the gentleman vote in the affirmative?

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes the gentleman voted in the affirmative.

Mr. WHITE. I voted in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inquires of the gentleman from New York his object in obtaining the floor, for it may be that he cannot be deprived of his right to it by the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. DEAN. My object was to move the reconsideration of the vote by which the Missouri land bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to move that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table. I understood the Chair to state that I was entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the facts of the case. The gentleman from New York rose to address the Chair, and was recognized. Immediately following, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. White] rose to a privileged question, and moved the reconsideration of the vote by which the Missouri land bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from New York now states that it was his object to make that motion. The Chair thinks the gentleman could not be deprived of his right to the floor, under the circumstances, by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not understand the gentleman from Alabama as moving to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, and I think, therefore, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dean] has precedence, as he had first risen, and now states that that was his object.

Mr. GENTRY. Is not the gentleman from Alabama entitled to the floor upon his motion?

The SPEAKER. He is not entitled to it in preference to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DEAN. I move that the vote by which the bill granting lands to Missouri was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be reconsidered, and that that motion do lie upon the table.

Mr. JONES demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I wish to make an inquiry. Can the motion be divided?

The SPEAKER. It cannot. You will divide it if you refuse to lay the motion upon the table, and in no other form.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana. Has the gentleman a right to make two privileged motions at one time?

The SPEAKER. He has. That has been the uniform practice of the body.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 100, nays 68—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Allison, Andrews, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Bartlett, Beale, Bennett, John H. Boyd, Breckenridge, Buell, Joseph Cable, Carter, Chapman, Chastain, Churchill, Cleveland, Clingman, Daniel, Dawson, Dean, Duncan, Edmundson, Faulkner, Florence, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Giddings, Grey, Grow, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hibbard, Horsford, John W. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ingersoll, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, Jas. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Letcher, Mason, McLeanahan, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Monahan, Morehead, Morrison, Murray, Newton, Outlaw, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Perkins, Powell, Robbins, Robie, Ross, Sackett, Schermerhorn, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Snow, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Stratton, Sutherland, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Venable, Wallace, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, and Wildrick—100.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Barrere, Bell, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, George T. Davis, John G. Davis, Doty, Eastman, Edgerdown, Ewing, Ficklin, Fitch, Freeman, Gentry, Goodenow, Gorman, Hall, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Hawes, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Howard, John Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Kurtz, Landry, Mace, Humphrey Marshall, Miller, Molony, John Moore, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Penn, Penningman, Phelps, Porter, Rantoul, Richardson, Riddle, Smith, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Strother, Stuart, Taylor, Townsend, Ward, Alexander White, Wilcox, Williams, and Yates—68.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

MEMPHIS NAVY-YARD.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, by the unanimous consent of the House, introduced the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, praying additional appropriations for the navy-yard at Memphis, in that State; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. OLDS called for the regular order of business.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. OLDS. Let us have reports from committees.

NON-INTERVENTION.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to allow me, before he presses his motion, to present the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Georgia upon the subject of non-intervention. I have had them for eight or ten days, and have not yet been enabled to present them.

Mr. HOUSTON. As it seems to be the general wish that the morning hour should be consumed in calling for reports from the committees, I withdraw my motion. I intend, however, if I get the floor, to repeat the motion morning after morning, until I can get up the deficiency bill.

Mr. STEPHENS. I present the following joint resolutions from the Legislature of Georgia, ask that they be read, laid upon the table, and printed:

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

It has been the policy of the American Government from its earliest existence, to maintain friendly relations with all, but entangling alliances with none. Our true mission is not to propagate our opinions or impose upon other countries our form of government, by artifice or force, but to show by our success, moderation, and justice, the blessings of self-government and the advantages of free institutions. Let every people choose for themselves, and make and alter their political institutions to suit their own condition and circumstances. In proclaiming and adhering to the doctrines of neutrality and non-intervention, the United States have not followed the lead of other civilized nations, but have taken the lead and been followed by others. These great principles proclaimed in the days of Washington and Jefferson, are the great American principles upon which our Government has ever stood. The fame and distinction to which we have attained as a people, the great blessings which we have dispensed to the world in affording an asylum for the oppressed everywhere, forbid that we should for a moment cherish the idea of abandoning these principles. We sympathize with the oppressed, we tender them a home; but never will we join with the ambitious or the revengeful in a crusade against other nations, whatever may be their domestic policy. A departure from this safe and correct rule would involve our Government in endless disputes and endless wars, the result of which the wisest statesmanship cannot foresee. Our policy should be to observe good faith and justice towards all nations, cultivate peace and harmony with all. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of a republican government. In extending our commercial relations we should have as little political connection as possible with foreign nations. Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Georgia in General Assembly met, That his Excellency the Governor be requested to forward the foregoing declaration of principles to our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, with the request that they may be laid before their respective Houses, as the opinion of the people of Georgia as to the policy of our Government, and that a copy be sent also to the President of the United States.

Agreed to January 9, 1852:

JAMES A. MERIWETHER,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
THADDEUS STURGIS,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Concurred in January 21, 1852:

ANDREW J. MILLER,
President of the Senate.
LUTHER J. GLENN,
Secretary of the Senate.

Assented to January 22, 1852:

HOWELL COBB, Governor.
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, GEORGIA, }
MILLEDGEVILLE, February 13, 1852. }

I certify that the foregoing is a correct copy of the original on file in this office.

Given under my hand and the seal of the Executive Department at the capitol in Milledgeville.
[L. S.] ARTHUR HOOD,
Secretary Executive Department.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, called for the previous question on the motion to print.

Mr. HIBBARD. Are these resolutions before the House?

The SPEAKER. They are before the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I do not desire to interfere with the destination the gentleman from Georgia proposes to give those resolutions, but I would suggest that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. There is no need of any reference.

The question was then taken upon the motion to lay the resolutions upon the table, and agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Upon the question to print, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] moves the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered, and under the operation thereof, the resolutions were ordered to be printed.

Mr. ORR. I call for the regular order of business, and shall object to anything else.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. Reports are in order from the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. HALL, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Jacob Kerr, and that the same be laid upon the table.

Mr. HALL, from the same committee, reported back with an amendment, House bill No. 119, granting to the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, the right of way and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Toledo, Ohio, via Delhi to Lafayette, in Indiana, to Springfield, in Illinois; which was read, committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALL, from the same committee, reported back House bill "granting to the States of Illinois and Indiana lands to aid in the construction of railroads therein;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

The question now being upon its engrossment, Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky said: I trespass upon the attention of the House with great reluctance now, and shall therefore only ask its attention for a few moments. I feel a deep solicitude for the passage of this bill. It is the same that passed the Senate in the last Congress, and was lost in the unfinished business before this House. It proposes to grant alternate sections of the public lands to the States of Indiana and Illinois, for the purpose of assisting the construction of a railroad from New Albany, in the State of Indiana, via Mount Carmel on the Wabash, to Alton and St. Louis. The State Legislatures of Indiana and Illinois several years since chartered a company to construct that road, and about $300,000 have been expended upon the work. There are no lands embraced by this bill that have not been exposed to market by the United States for the last forty-five years. The donation must be preciously small at best, and the gentlemen who are so tenacious of the public lands may be quieted by my declaration that this bill cannot commit robbery of the public domain to any considerable extent, either as to quantity or value! The principle of this bill has been so often applied in other cases, that I am relieved from any argument upon the competency of Congress to admit it as a proper case. To show that this case is a proper one, I remark that the work to which the donation will be applied is essentially national. It is the trunk-road which will continue, westward, lines of railways from the North, South, and East, and which unite at the Falls of the Ohio. The railroads from Savannah, Charleston, and Mobile, alike will find their northern termini at Louisville. They will connect there with roads extending to Chicago in the Northwest, and Sandusky on Lake Erie, while the link which shall unite, on the one or other side of the Ohio, the cities of Cincinnati and Louisville will bring to the Falls of the Ohio the travel by that great net work of railroads extending North and East, which terminates at the city of Cincinnati. This road traverses two States, uniting still two other States, and offering its line of travel for the productions and business of at least a dozen more States. It will be useful to Georgia, South Carolina, and Alabama, because it connects them directly with the hemp-growing regions of Missouri and Illinois, and opens, by the only line which they can ever enjoy, a participancy in the trade of the valley of the Missouri river. It will be useful to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, because it forms an extension, by the most practicable Southern route, of those great lines by which the enterprise of capital has connected each with the fair regions of the West. It will be of eminent utility to the West itself. Besides bringing into notice regions which are now excluded to all markets, it will, by an artificial construction two hundred and forty-eight miles in length across the delta of the Ohio and Mississippi, at once overcome five hundred and fifty miles of precarious and frequently dangerous navigation. It will enable the traveler to pass from St. Louis to Louisville in a day, when now he toils over the distance consuming always three and sometimes six days of time. It will expedite postal communications with the Northwestern States in a corresponding ratio. There is no part of the Mississippi river navigation so dangerous, or upon which such interruptions to commerce occur, as that part lying between St. Louis and Cairo. You may examine the long calendar of accidents which, through past years, has attracted so little attention from our Government, yet has subjected the western commerce to such fatal loss, and you will ascertain that much more than a proper proportion of the catalogue lays the scene of disaster in distance which this road will avoid, or overcome entirely. I say, therefore, this work presents strong claims to your favor from its nationality. I do not seek to conceal that I regard it with especial interest, because it connects directly with the commercial interests of my own particular locality. It traverses the rich coal-fields of Illinois, and will afford sites for manufactures which are now valueless. It brings to our doors extensive and rich valleys which now we cannot, without great difficulty, penetrate. Yet, sir, what I ask for this enterprise is now of no value to you, and, unless this enterprise shall succeed, will continue valueless to the Government. This is not a scheme, Mr. Speaker, to run a railroad through a wilderness, and to precede population by an expenditure of public funds for the construction of a road. The whole country is an old settled country. The point at which it crosses the Wabash was the theater of the earliest western military adventures, and in the vicinity of the earliest French settlements that quarter of the Confederacy. The line of this road follows the ridge dividing the waters of the White river in Indiana, and the waters of the Ohio, and crossing the valley of the Wabash at the mouth of White river, traverses the uplands and prairies of Illinois. The lands have been so long exposed at the land offices for private entry, that little remains upon which private capital will be invested, unless some simulant shall be afforded—some inducement whereby large and new advantages may be offered to the settler. The ridge lands to which I have alluded may be rich—I presume they are—but Western gentlemen know that Government can never dispose of them unless some contrivance like this shall pass them from the public proprietorship. Then they will be valuable, and will soon be taken up. It is only "unconsidered trifles" which I ask you to confer by this grant, and the donation brings to Government the advantage of closing out definitely and forever its claims upon the public domain where expenditures must far exceed receipts.

I shall not consume more time by enlarging upon considerations suggested by the presentation of this subject. I have briefly attempted to show to gentlemen from the large States and from the distant States, that this case forms a just exception to the rule which they seem to have adopted in the case of the Missouri railroad. I shall not argue the general question of the national policy connected with the public domain. I want a particular grant—an inconsiderable donation—and I want to avoid, if possible, being drifted with my small vessel into the general whirlpool, in which they are being carried who are freighted with heavier cargoes. Mine, sir, is no magnificent scheme, and I hope it will not be consigned "to the tomb of the Capulets" by being sent after the bill of my friend from Missouri for in that struggle which will come hereafter for precedence in getting out of the committee, my bill will stand no chance, for no great sections are engaged, by the amount it will bestow, to answer for its safety.

If any gentleman desires to address the House on this bill, I will yield the floor, but if no one has a wish to speak to this bill, I should like to have a vote upon its engrossment for a third reading, and for that purpose I shall move the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I understand the reason which operates upon many gentlemen in voting against these grants of land to the new States. It is, that the effect of it will be to pass large bodies of these wild lands into the hands of speculators, and prevent the settlement of the country. Now, in a country where the lands have been in market for forty-five years, and the country is thoroughly settled, and where there are nothing but second and third-rate lands and no possibility of settlement, it seems to me that there is no danger that these lands could be transferred in bodies to speculators. Although my own State is not specially interested in this work, except as a connecting link in those great roads passing from St. Louis to Cincinnati, still I am anxious that this bill should pass. I desire to submit but a single remark, to show that this bill could not be subject to the paramount objection that prevails in regard to many others, and with the hope that the House may give it their favorable consideration.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

32d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

MONDAY, MARCH 8, 1852.

NEW SERIES.... No. 43.

the state of the Union, and printed; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GREY. If it is in order, I wish to offer an amendment, and to have it printed and referred, with the bill, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order as long as the call for the previous question is pending.

Mr. GREY. Then I ask the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw his call for the previous question.

Mr. JONES. I cannot do it.

The question was then taken on seconding the demand for the previous question; and on a division, there were—ayes 79, noes not counted.

So the previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put, viz: on Mr. JONES's motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, asked for the yeas and nays; but they were not ordered.

The question being put, the motion was agreed to, and the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

GRANT OF LAND TO MICHIGAN.

Mr. HALL, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the House bill No. 10, granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a donation of public land, for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of the St. Mary, in said State; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

GRANT OF LAND TO WISCONSIN.

Mr. H. from the same committee, reported back without amendment the House bill No. 214, granting the right of way and granting land to the State of Wisconsin, in aid of the construction of a railroad from Chicago to the head of Lake Superior, and moved that said bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed.

Mr. GREY. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion, to allow me to submit an amendment to the bill.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw it for that purpose.

Mr. GREY then offered the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That 900,000 acres of the public lands be and they are hereby granted to the State of Kentucky, for the purpose of aiding in constructing a railroad in said State, from Louisville to some point on the Mississippi river in said State; and 500,000 acres for aiding in constructing a railroad from Lexington, Kentucky, to the Virginia State line; and 500,000 acres for aiding in constructing a railroad from Henderson, Kentucky, towards Nashville, Tennessee; the said lands to be selected by an agent or agents, to be appointed by the Governor of the State of Kentucky, from any of the public lands which have not been heretofore especially reserved to the United States, and to which no right of preemption shall have attached, the selection to be made subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; and when so selected, the said lands hereby granted to the said State of Kentucky shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature thereof, for the purposes aforesaid: Provided, That said lands shall be exclusively applied in the construction of said railroads from Louisville to the Mississippi river, from Lexington to the Virginia State line, and from Henderson towards Nashville, and shall be disposed of only as the work progresses: And provided further, That the said roads shall be and remain public highways for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or other charges upon the transportation of the mails, or any property or troops of the United States.

Mr. DOTY. I raise a question of order on that amendment. It does not refer to the subject-matter of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not examined the body of the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALL. I believe I merely yielded the floor for the purpose of hearing what the amendment was, and I must object to its being offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri as yielding the floor for the purpose indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky—to enable him to offer the amendment.

Mr. HALL. Provided I might resume the floor if I objected to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. That was a mental reservation, the Chair supposes.

Mr. HALL. I am perfectly indifferent about the amendment. All I desire is, not to consume time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not prepared to decide the amendment out of order until the bill shall have been examined in all its parts.

Mr. ORR. I call for the reading of the title of the bill, in order that the House may see what it proposes.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

"A bill granting the right of way, and granting land to the State of Wisconsin, in aid of the construction of a railroad from Chicago to the head of Lake Superior."

Mr. GREY. If that title at all indicates the contents of the bill, my amendment is clearly in order. Here is a bill making an appropriation of land for a railroad, and my amendment proposes a like appropriation of public lands for a railroad.

The SPEAKER. From the reading of the title of the bill, the Chair is inclined to believe that the amendment is in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the reading of the whole bill, and I shall then raise a point of order on the amendment, and ask for the reading of the rule upon which I rely.

The Clerk read the bill.

[The bill grants, in the usual form, to the State of Wisconsin, the alternate sections on each side of the proposed roads enumerated in the bill, to aid in the construction of said roads.]

Mr. JONES then called for the reading of the 55th rule.

The Clerk read the rule, which is as follows:

55. "No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment. No bill or resolution shall, at any time, be amended by annexing thereto, or incorporating therewith, any other bill or resolution pending before the House."

Mr. JONES. The first branch of that rule, I think, excludes the amendment, and upon it I rely.

The SPEAKER. This is a question of relevancy merely, and a question about which gentlemen may well differ. The bill proposes to appropriate lands to a railroad in Wisconsin; the amendment proposes to appropriate lands to a railroad in Kentucky. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order, and is not in violation of the rule to which the gentleman from Tennessee refers.

Mr. DUNHAM appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. GREY moved to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. DUNHAM demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. JONES, of Tennessee, and CHANDLER appointed.

The question was then taken, and decided in the affirmative—ayes 93, noes not counted.

So the appeal was laid upon the table, and the decision of the Chair sustained.

Mr. HALL renewed the motion to refer the bill, with the amendments, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and to print the same.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not in order during the pendency of the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw that motion.

Mr. HALL. I will withdraw it to enable the gentleman from Tennessee to offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER. For that purpose only?

Mr. HALL. Yes, sir.

The motion was then withdrawn, and

Mr. CHURCHWELL offered the following as an amendment to the amendment:

That 1,000,000 acres of public land, lying anywhere west of the Mississippi river, be granted to the South Carolina and Tennessee railroad from Anderson Court House, in South Carolina, to Knoxville, Tennessee, and to the East Tennessee and Kentucky railroad from Knoxville, Tennessee, to Lexington, Kentucky, in ratio proportioned by the number of miles of said road to be constructed in each State, under the direction of their respective Governors.

Mr. C. then renewed the motion to commit the bill and amendments.

Mr. HEBARD. Is it in order to move a substitute for the last amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Tennessee submits a motion to commit the bill, with the amendments, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GENTRY. I apprehend the amendment would not be in order, even if that motion was not pending. You cannot amend in the third degree.

The SPEAKER. Certainly not.

Mr. CHURCHWELL called for the previous question.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put; and being put, the motion was agreed to.

So the bill, together with the pending amendments, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would inquire of the Chair, if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. When does the Chair hold that the morning hour commenced?

The SPEAKER. At the time the House commenced the reception of reports from committees.

Mr. STEPHENS. I submit to the Chair whether the morning hour did not commence with the motion to reconsider, which was itself the subject-matter of the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that as the Missouri land bill had passed from the House to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the motion to reconsider was a privileged motion not necessarily confined to the morning hour. The Chair is not very clear upon that point, however.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the morning hour did not commence until reports had been called from committees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to that opinion.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the petition of "many citizens of the State of Alabama" in relation to a grant of the right of way, and of alternate sections of land, to aid in the construction of the Selma and Gunter's Landing Railroad, the memorial of the Alabama and Tennessee Railroad Company, as well as the petition of W. R. W. Cobb, and a bill upon the same subject, have instructed me to report a bill, by way of substitute, granting the right of way to the State of Alabama, and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Selma, on the Alabama river, at or near Gunter's landing in said State.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding my constituents in Alabama believe that all we have to do in a matter like this is merely to ask for alternate sections of land and the liberality of this House will immediately respond to the call, and grant the request—I say, that notwithstanding the opinions of my constituents may be this, yet if they were here to-day they could not lay at my door the charge of dereliction of duty in relation to this bill. I am satisfied, further, that if they were here to-day asking me, as they have asked me heretofore, to put this bill on its passage immediately after being reported from the Committee on Public Lands, they would, with such facts before them as are now presented, concur with me in not making such a request. The vote given upon this floor this morning upon a similar bill, clearly shows that the House is not ready to-day to pass such a bill. I say, that under the circumstances, in accordance with my own opinions of propriety, I cannot ask that this bill be now put upon its passage, though, in obedience to their will, and in carrying out their wishes, I do not feel authorized to ask that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to take its place upon the Calendar. I am satisfied that if it goes there, it will be the last they will hear of it. I do not expect the citizens of that portion of the Union will receive the benefit of this grant. I do not expect that the connection of the waters of Tennessee with those of Alabama, in which the Government and people of the United States feel so much interest, will ever be consummated by any grant of land from this Congress. I tell my constituents that they must rely upon their own private resources—upon their own energy and private enterprise, to complete this work, intended to connect the waters of Tennessee and Alabama. I believe the interest of this Government would be greatly promoted by making the grant of land which this bill proposes. It would bring into market, and make valuable, a large quantity of the public domain which is now nearly worthless. I believe it would result in benefit to the General Government if this grant were made; but I am compelled to say, with the most sanguine hope that it is possible for me to entertain, that I have no expectation that it will be done by this Congress. And I admonish my constituents to go on with their private enterprise and complete the road. They have already constructed some two hundred miles of this road, which is to connect these mighty waters together. But forty-three miles are left, and I say, go on and complete by private enterprise what you have commenced and carried thus far! Surmount all the obstacles which present themselves in your path. This Congress will not give you anything to assist you. Go on, and do it yourselves!

Before I take my seat, I must ask permission to return my thanks to a former Congress for the aid they gave towards the construction of this road. And to show this Congress that this has been regarded as a great national work, I must allude to the fact that by an express provision made by a former Congress, the State of Alabama was required to appropriate a portion of her five per cent. net proceeds of the sales of the public lands to the great object which this road, when completed, will accomplish—the connection of the waters of Alabama with those of Tennessee.

Mr. McMULLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] that he wait till his bill has been read a first and second time, before he proceeds to make his speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to proceed.

Mr. COBB. I am exceedingly obliged to the gentleman from Virginia for his suggestion; especially as I am an exceedingly young member of the House, and inexperienced as to the proper mode of proceeding. [Laughter.] However, if it is the pleasure of the House to have the bill read now, I will give way for that purpose.

Mr. GENTRY. The House will hear the gentleman from Alabama, I have no doubt, with great pleasure. I hope he will be permitted to proceed.

A MEMBER. What is your bill?

Mr. COBB. It is a bill granting the right of way and making a grant of alternate sections of land to the Selma and Gunter's Landing railroad. I will leave it to the pleasure of the House to say whether I shall go on now. Can I go on?

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the gentleman from Alabama will be perfectly in order to continue his remarks, if he will permit the bill to be read a first and second time.

The bill was then read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. COBB continued. I only desire to say a few words now, and then I shall not inflict a speech upon the House afterwards. What I am saying I design more particularly for my constituents than with any expectation that it will affect the action of the House upon the bill.

Mr. McMULLIN. Will the gentleman give way for a moment, in order to enable me to offer an amendment to the bill?

Mr. COBB. I prefer to make my speech first, and then the gentleman can offer his amendment and make his speech afterwards. [Laughter.]

I hope the attention of the House will not be diverted from the importance of this work. I alluded a moment ago to the view with which the Government regarded this work; and I repeat now what I said then, that although their proportion of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands was given to the other States unconditionally, yet of so great importance did the Government regard the connection of the waters of Tennessee with those of Alabama, that the State of Alabama was required to appropriate a portion of that money for this express object. Sir, that State has faithfully carried into effect that requirement, and by the aid of private subscription she has carried on this work thus far; and should this House and this Congress agree to grant lands to the utmost extent for which this bill provides, they cannot contribute more than one seventeenth part of the amount required to complete the road. Now, sir, the citizens of Alabama, and of different portions of the Union, are ready with their own private enterprise to go on and complete every sixteen parts out of seventeen of this road, and I ask if gentlemen upon this floor will deny the grant which is asked to complete the other part, of a work of so much national importance as this?

Mr. Speaker, I desire to make these remarks as brief as possible, but I cannot close without tracing this road from Selma to its terminus. You have heard the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Marshall] upon another bill today. I desire to call the attention of that gentleman to the portion of his remarks in which, while speaking of the importance of connecting his portion of the country with the great lakes, he incidentally alluded to the works which were progressing in the State of Alabama towards the same quarter. And what work was it to which he alluded? Why, sir, it was the one in behalf of which I am now speaking. It is this work which is to complete the line of connection with the great lakes. And will you refuse the little pittance for which this bill provides? I tell the gentleman, as the Representative of the mountain district through which this road is expected to run, that we can and will make this road ourselves, if you will not help us. We shall penetrate those mountains; but I hope we shall not be denied this little grant, which is to open a communication for your flour and pork and hemp from the States of Ohio, Indiana, Tennessee, and Kentucky, to Alabama. I hope when this subject comes up again, that we shall not see a gentleman from any of those States opposing this bill. I hope they will see the importance of this work. Let me say to the gentleman from the State of Ohio, that this road will enable you and your constituents to place your pork and flour, in three days' time, into any portion of the State of Alabama. If you had had this communication last summer, when flour was $10 per barrel all over the interior of Alabama, while it was but $3 50 in Ohio, what a source of wealth would it have proved for your own State! But I do not intend to trespass upon the attention of the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I desire to inquire if the morning hour has not expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. COBB. I have nearly finished what I have to say now, but if gentlemen cut me off and allow me to get a new head of steam, I may make another speech to-morrow. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The morning hour has expired, and I believe such a motion is in order.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Richardson] will waive his motion for a few minutes until some Senate bill upon the Speaker's table can be referred to their appropriate committees, as also some communications lying on the table.

Mr. MOORE. I rise to a question of order. I would ask the Speaker if it is possible, while one member is upon the floor making a speech, for another gentleman to take the floor for the purpose of submitting a motion to the House?

The SPEAKER. When the morning hour has expired, it is in order, but it would not be during the morning hour.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would gladly consent to the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Seymour] if I could, but unless we go into Committee of the Whole reports of committees would necessarily take precedence of the business upon the Speaker's table, and, therefore, I must hold to my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Harris] is in order.

The question was then taken upon the motion of Mr. HARRIS, and it was agreed to; there being, upon a division—ayes 89, noes not counted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

ASSIGNABILITY OF LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to make land warrants assignable and for other purposes" to be taken up before that vote is taken?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will; and there are two bills upon the table which I wish should be taken up.

The bill was then, by unanimous consent, read by its title, as above reported.

Mr. JONES. It will be recollected that the House amended the first section of that Senate bill, and then struck out all the remaining portion of it. The Senate have non-concurred with all the amendments of the House, and sent it back here. I now move that the House insist upon their amendments, and that we ask for a committee of conference. This will bring all the questions in dispute between the two Houses, in relation to the fees of registers and receivers, and the extension of these land warrants, before this committee of conference.

Mr. HOUSTON. My own opinion is, that the course proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Jones] is not usual. The vote for the House to take now, is to insist upon these amendments, and return the bill to the Senate, and when it shall have been done, it will be time enough to ask for a committee of conference. I take it the House is not the proper body to ask for a committee of conference at this time. I ask, therefore, for a division of that question.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The House is now called upon to take action in relation to the proceedings of the Senate upon that bill, when they know nothing as to what those proceedings are. I ask, then, what it is that the Senate has done.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Breckinridge] has the floor in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. He is unwell, and may not be able to be here to-morrow. I move, therefore, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, upon the special order.

The question was then taken, and agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, in the chair.)

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The business first before the committee is the special order, being House bill No. 7, for the encouragement of agriculture, and for other purposes. Upon that question the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Breckinridge] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE then addressed the House an hour, in reply to remarks made some time since by Mr. CABELL, of Florida, to the effect that the opinions of General Butler, of Kentucky, on the slavery question, were not known. This he denied, and referred to General Butler's political life to prove that he was sound on the slavery question. He referred to the action of the Democratic Convention lately held in Kentucky, recommending General Butler to the Convention to be held in Baltimore in June next as a suitable person to nominate for the Presidency, and to the resolutions adopted by the Kentucky Convention, reading a letter from that gentleman endorsing the resolutions adopted by the Convention. In the name of the Kentucky Democracy, he denied the charge that General Butler was an Abolitionist. He also commented on an article in the Democratic Review, denunciatory of certain prominent statesmen, and General Butler in particular; and, in conclusion, urged harmony among the Democratic party.

[See Appendix for Mr. Breckinridge's speech.]

Mr. CABELL, of Florida, followed in a few remarks, stating that at the time he made his remarks General Butler's opinions were not known.

If, at the time he made his speech, General Butler's opinions had been known, he would not have made allusion to him. He congratulated the country upon the fact that one gentleman named as a candidate for the Presidency had expressed his opinions on the subject of slavery, and he hoped that other gentlemen named in the same connection would follow the example.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire what is the question before the committee? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is House bill No. 7, for the encouragement of agriculture, and a great many other purposes. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, did not intend to discuss the question in dispute between the gentleman from Florida and the gentleman from Kentucky; for his constituents had not sent him here to manufacture candidates for the Presidency; nor did he propose to discuss the measures which were called the compromise measures, for he had expressed his opinions on this subject during the last Congress. He had seen efforts made during the present session to reenact and reendorse certain laws in relation to the question of slavery; and he had only to say that, notwithstanding the House might pass every day during the present session resolutions reenacting and reendorsing the compromise measures, there would be nothing in them which would prevent the people from demanding legislation upon the fugitive slave law, whenever they might see proper to require it.

Mr. C. then proceeded to discuss the bill under consideration. It was very evident, he thought—and no one who had observed the action of the House could fail to observe—that the great question of disposing of the public lands belonging to this nation would devolve upon this Congress. The idea that these public lands were to be retained as a source of revenue to the General Government seemed to have been abandoned by all parties and all classes of men. Mr. C. then proceeded to advert to the history of the acquisition of the public domain; and during this part of his remarks he yielded the floor to—

Mr. MOREHEAD, who moved that the committee rise and report progress; which motion was agreed to.

The committee rose accordingly, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 7, to encourage agriculture, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

ASSIGNABILITY OF LAND WARRANTS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I now ask that the bill from the Senate, entitled "An act to make land warrants assignable, and for other purposes," may be disposed of by insisting upon the amendments of the House thereto, and asking for a committee of conference. And upon that I ask the previous question.

By general consent, the bill was then taken up and read by its title, as above reported.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. JONES. My motion is, that the House insist upon its amendments, non-concurred in by the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to. Messrs. JONES, of Tennessee, BRIGGS, and BISSELL, were appointed the conferees on the part of the House.

CLAIMS OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. STANLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill to refund to the State of North Carolina the amount of money advanced, and the transportation furnished to volunteers from that State during the late war with Mexico," which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HARBOR FILL.

Mr. S. also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, making appropriations for the improvement of certain rivers and harbors; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. STANLY. I omitted to move that the two bills, which I have just presented, should be printed. I now make that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest that it is not customary to print bills until they are reported back to the House by the committee.

Mr. STANLY. Then I withdraw my motion to print.

ENTRIES OF LAND

Mr. CABELL, of Florida, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to legalize certain entries of public land made in the State of Florida; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CRIMES AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill, of which previous notice has been given, entitled "A bill to amend an act more effectually to provide for the punishment of certain crimes against the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1825; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. S. I wish to submit certain joint resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Ohio, which I ask may be read.

[Cries "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. STANTON. I move that they be laid on the table and be printed.

Mr. CARTTER. What is the title? Let it be read.

The title of the resolutions was then read, as follows: "Resolutions requesting our Senators and Representatives in Congress to secure an appropriation for the construction of a ship-canal at the Falls of St. Marie." The resolutions were then ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wish to inquire if Senate bill No. 185 is upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ROBBINS. If it is in order, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HART. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to, and cannot be referred.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. There are a number of Senate bills of importance upon the table, and I hope the House will permit all of them to be referred.

Mr. HART. I object.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a series of resolutions adopted by a meeting in Philadelphia of old soldiers of the war of 1812, and that they may be read for the information of the House.

Mr. ORR. I object.

Mr. FLORENCE. But one word. The resolutions are from a meeting of soldiers of the war of 1812, asking a grant of one hundred and sixty acres of bounty lands.

Mr. PHELPS. I object.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will withdraw my proposition to read them, and move that they be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

[Cries of "I object!" "I object!"]

Mr. FLORENCE. Then I will renew my motion to-morrow.

On motion by Mr. CARTTER,

The House then adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. MOREHEAD: The memorial of Philip Kenner, assistant marshal of the district of North Carolina, asking an increase of compensation for services rendered in taking the late census.

By Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania: The resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the destruction of the Mint at Philadelphia and the removal to New York.

Also, the resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, recommending an appropriation for a ship-canal around the Falls of the Saint Ste. Marie.

Also, the petition of Levi Wunder and 35 others, for a modification of the tariff.

Also, the resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, asking an appropriation for harbors in the river Delaware.

By Mr. FLORENCE: Resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Pennsylvania, relative to the proposed removal of the United States Mint from the city of Philadelphia to the city of New York.

Also, the memorial of Charles W. Carroll, James C. Bigby, Henry W. Simpson, and 31 others, citizens of the county of Philadelphia, praying for the extension of the Woodworth patent for planing boards, &c.

By Mr. EDGERTON: The petitions of citizens of Allen and Van Wert counties, Ohio, for a mail route from Findlay, Ohio, via Delphos and Van Wert, to Fort Wayne, Indiana.

By Mr. HASCALL: A remonstrance of 149 citizens of Warsaw, Wyoming county, New York, against the renewal of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine.

By Mr. McLANAHAN: Resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, instructing the Senators and requesting the Representatives from that State to oppose the establishment of a Mint at New York.

By Mr. PARKER, of Pennsylvania: The memorial of John F. Lowrey, Jr., and 26 others, citizens of Blair county, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the formation of an Agricultural Bureau by Congress.

Also, the petition of Jane Glasgow, widow of James Glasgow, deceased, a soldier of the revolutionary war, praying Congress to extend to her the pension of her husband from 1840 during her natural life.

By Mr. HARPER: The memorial of J. C. Albright and 69 other citizens of Guemsey county, Ohio, praying for the establishment of the bridges of the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company as post roads, and that they remain at their present height, &c.

Also, the petition of J. R. McBride and 43 other citizens of Wayne county, Ohio, praying that certain physicians employed in the late war with Mexico may be entitled to the benefit of the invalid pension laws, and the laws regulating extra pay, now in force.

By Mr. FOWLER: The petition of Martin Winsor and 71 merchants, shipmasters, and others, in the towns of Duxbury and Kingston, Massachusetts, praying for an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States for the improvement of the harbor of Scituate, in the State of Massachusetts.

Also, the petition of several insurance companies and port wardens of Boston, praying for an appropriation from the Treasury for the improvement of the harbor of Scituate Massachusetts.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 5, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to suspend the execution of the order by which this day is set apart for the consideration of private bills, for one hour. I will state that my object in doing so, is to ask the Senate, during the morning hour, to take up a bill which ought to have passed long since, to enable officers who were in California between the time of the treaty of peace and the establishment of the State constitution to settle their accounts.

The motion was agreed to.

DRY DOCKS, BASINS, AND RAILWAYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 20th ultimo, copies of contracts for the construction of dry docks, basins, and railways, at Kittery, Philadelphia, and Pensacola; and also a copy of the contract for a floating sectional dock at San Francisco, in California. The Secretary also stated, in further reply to the resolution, that no advertisement was made inviting proposals for the work last named; and that in the view of the Department none was required by the original law upon the subject, approved September 22d, 1850.

The communication was laid upon the table, and a motion to print was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MILITARY CONTRIBUTIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask the general consent of the Senate to take up a bill in addition to, and amendatory of, an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the accounts of public officers and others who may have received moneys arising from military contributions or otherwise in Mexico," approved 3d March, 1849. This is a bill, the passage of which is necessary in order to enable the officers to settle their accounts with the Government, and pay into the Treasury what balances may be in their hands. I hope the Senate will take it up, and I think it may be disposed of in a short time.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Finance propose a substitute for the bill, which consists of six sections.

The first section proposes to enact that all the provisions of the act, "to provide for the settlement of the accounts of public officers and others, who may have received moneys arising from military contributions or otherwise in Mexico," approved March 3d, 1849, be applied to any officer of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any other person or persons appointed by, or acting under the authority of, any such officer or officers, who may have received moneys raised and collected in Upper California or New Mexico for contributions, penalties, internal assessments, duties, or other objects, from the commencement of the late war with the Republic of Mexico, to the 12th day of November, 1849, (the day on which the collector of customs for the district of Upper California entered upon the discharge of his duties, under the act extending the revenue laws of the United States over that country,) and each and every such officer or other person shall account for, settle, and pay into the Treasury of the United States, for general purposes, any balances of moneys shown to be in his hands. And upon such settlement, made in conformity with the requirements of the provisions of the act before referred to, such persons shall become entitled to the compensations and allowances authorized by that act, except as hereinafter provided. And on failure to account for or pay over any moneys received by them, the said officers or other persons shall be liable to the penalties imposed by existing laws, in the case of disbursing officers of the United States who neglect or refuse to account for money drawn from the Treasury; provided that all papers, vouchers, or other documents connected with the levying or collecting of any such money, shall be filed with the amounts rendered for settlement by any officer or other person referred to in the act.

The second section provides that compensation may be allowed to any commanding officer of the army in California who collected duties in that country after the late treaty of peace with Mexico and before the 12th day of November, 1849, not exceeding the compensation now allowed by law to the collector of the district of Upper California; said compensation to include the pay and emoluments of such officer of the army.

The third section provides that when accounts are rendered for expenditures under the approval and sanction of the proper officers for the support of the actual government of California, after the ratification of the treaty of peace, and before the formation of the State government, and which expenditures may appear to have been proper and necessary, though not authorized by any law of the United States, the said accounts may be credited to the proper person or persons in the settlement of their accounts, if approved by the President of the United States.

By the fourth section it is proposed to authorize the accounting officers of the Treasury to credit the proper officers with any sum or sums of money paid or advanced by them for defraying the expenses of the Convention of California to form a State constitution, provided that the same shall not exceed the sum of $—; and also to credit the proper persons with the sum or sums of money advanced or paid by them for the relief of the destitute overland emigrants to California under the authority of the officer chief in command of the army in California; provided the same shall not exceed the sum of $125,000, and that vouchers shall be produced for the amounts paid.

By the fifth section the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to cause proper defense to be made to any suit or suits at law now pending, or that may be hereafter instituted, against the person or persons who acted in the capacity of collector of the customs at San Francisco or elsewhere on the Pacific coast, under the military authorities of the United States prior to the time when the duly appointed collector entered upon the collection of the revenues at the port of San Francisco, and $— be appropriated therefor.

The sixth section provides that of the moneys collected in the ports now embraced within the limits of the State of California as duties upon foreign imports, that the sum of $300,000 be paid to that State, to be applied to the expenses of the State government prior to the admission of California into the Union as a State.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, this is a bill which was drawn up with a great deal of care by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] whose absence now I regret, in order to provide for two objects; each of which presented questions which were complicated in their character. The one was to enable the officers to settle the accounts which arose out of transactions between the treaty of peace and the time when the collector went into California under the laws of the United States; and the other was to make some provision in relation to what is called the civil fund of California; that is to say, the fund which was collected from the duties on imports between the period of ratification of the treaty of peace and the appearance of the collector under the laws of the United States. In relation to the first, the provisions of this bill have been based upon the law approved March 3d, 1849, which provided for the settlement of the accounts of officers who collected moneys in the territories of Mexico during the war. The provisions of that act, so far as they are applicable to this case, have been adopted. And upon the same principles the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to settle the accounts of officers who collected moneys after the ratification of the treaty of peace and, before the appearance of the collector under the laws of the United States—a period to which the law of 1849 does not refer.

This bill had also to provide for some other things arising out of the peculiar state of the case in California during that period; that is to say, after the treaty of peace and before the establishment of the State government. There was then no regularly organized government, according to law; but there was a provisional government, which was put to some necessary expense in order to maintain the peace of society. The committee, in considering the question, came to the conclusion that it was proper to recognize this as a government de facto; that, as self-preservation is the first law of nature in reference to individuals, so also every society had a right, higher than all others, to protect itself against anarchy, and to establish some government—a government de facto, if such an institution should be necessary for that purpose. They were also of opinion that, so far as the transactions of this government de facto were necessary in order to preserve the peace and order of society, the validity of its transactions should be recognized and its expenses paid. Beyond that—that is, beyond the strict necessity of the case—it is obvious that they could not bind either the State of California or the United States. The bill accordingly provides that these expenses shall be paid upon such vouchers and upon such a statement of the case as shall seem to be satisfactory in the discretion of the President of the United States. We were obliged to leave a large discretion to the President, in order to have these accounts settled.

The bill also provides that the relief which was given by the commanding general to the overland emigrants, amounting to some hundred and twenty thousand dollars, which General Smith caused to be furnished them in order to save them from starvation, should be paid. All of these expenses will be covered by, and, indeed, have probably been paid out of the civil fund, as it is called.

There was, also, another question—indeed I may say there were two questions—of grave importance, which arose out of the character of this civil fund itself. The civil fund was the money collected from duties between the time of the treaty of peace and the appearance of the United States collector at San Francisco. It was collected by order of the government de facto. The first order was issued, I believe, by Governor Mason. This civil fund was collected, as I said before, by order of the de facto government, and not under any law of the United States. The merchants who paid the duties have claimed that they ought to be returned to them, because they were made to pay them without the authority of any law of the United States. When the case was examined the committee came to this conclusion: That if the merchants insisted upon the strict execution of the law, as there was no law establishing a port of entry there, they would have forfeited the whole amount of the goods by introducing them there; and that therefore it was a boon and a benefit offered to them by the de facto government when they were permitted to enter the goods upon the same terms as such goods might have been entered elsewhere in the United States, and that they therefore could not claim them in equity or in strict law.

The State of California took another view of the question. They seemed to think that the government of California was entitled to this civil fund, because these moneys were collected without the authority of United States law. The tax was paid by the consumer, because the merchants made it out of them by the increased price of the goods. The committee did not agree in the view of the question taken by the State of California.

It seemed to them, recurring to the same principle of settling it, that if the government de facto had pursued strict law, rather than have acted according to the necessity of the case, and the existing state of things, as there was no law making any of the ports of California ports of entry, the goods could not have been brought in at all. But the Governor de facto relaxed the laws of the United States so far as they forbade goods to be entered in California, there being no port of entry there. This relaxation was for the benefit of the people of California—indispensable, indeed, to their very existence—and it was effected in such a manner as to make their action sympathize with the federal system, so as to place them precisely in the same condition in relation to duties, that the people of the United States were placed in elsewhere. In other words, the duties were imposed by the government de facto to meet the necessities of the people of California, and to meet them in such manner as might be consistent with the federal system to which those people belonged. But in consideration of the fact that California had no outfit in the way of public buildings, such as are usually furnished to the Territories before they are admitted into the Union as States, the committee reported a provision to pay the State of California $300,000, a sum which the civil fund will more than cover by way of outfit. To this, the Senator from California [Mr. GWIN] objected. I believe he would now object to it but for the fact that it is necessary to adopt the other provisions of the bill, in order to get these accounts settled. He has, however, agreed to withdraw his objections to this bill; and I believe there is now a general concurrence on the part of the committee in the wish that the bill should be passed through as soon as possible, in order that these accounts may be settled, and this troublesome subject may be put in the way of adjustment.

The substitute, as reported by the committee, was then agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I am not going to detain the Senate. I only wish to say, that on some future occasion I shall combat the reason given by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, as the organ of the Finance Committee, for withholding the whole of this civil fund from the State of California. I want this bill to pass; it is proper that the accounts of the officers who collected this money should be settled; and I therefore waive my objections to the last section of the bill for the present.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the first blank—that in the fourth section—was filled with the sum of $86,600; so that the section would read, "that, in the settlements of the accounts aforesaid, the accounting officers of the Treasury be and they are hereby authorized and required to credit the proper officers with any sum or sums of money paid or advanced by them for defraying the expenses of the convention of California, called to form a State constitution, provided that the same shall not exceed the sum of $86,600."

On the motion by Mr. HUNTER, the blank in the fifth section was filled with $10,000; so that that sum shall be appropriated for the payment of the defence of any suits which may be brought to recover the revenues collected at San Francisco between the time of the ratification of the treaty of peace and the arrival of the collector of the United States.

The amendment of the Committee of the Whole, as thus modified, was agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. CHASE. I would like to make an inquiry or two of the chairman of the Committee on Finance in regard to this bill. If I read the fourth section right, it provides that the expenses of the convention for framing the constitution of California, shall be paid out of the Treasury in some form. The fifth section suggests, at all events, that suits are pending, or may be brought, to recover the duties which have been paid into the Treasury, and are known by the name of the civil fund. The sixth section provides that out of this civil fund there shall be paid over to the State of California, the sum of $300,000. I should like to know from the chairman of the Committee on Finance, whether it is in contemplation not merely to pay the expenses of the convention which framed the constitution of California, but also to pay out of the Treasury to that State the sum of $300,000; and yet leave the Treasury exposed to suits which may be brought by individuals to recover this identical fund from the Government, for their private use? If that is to be the effect of the bill, it seems to me that it deserves some further consideration than it has yet received.

Mr. HUNTER. The design of the bill was to pay to California $300,000, which would, of course, come out of this civil fund which was raised. There was some division of opinion in relation to that, but on two occasions the committee agreed to report that sum. The State of California claimed the whole of the civil fund, which amounts to nearly $1,300,000. The committee did not agree to give the State of California the whole, but agreed to give her $300,000 in lieu of the outfit which is usually given to the Territories before they are received as States. Public buildings are generally erected, and other things are done, which may be called an outfit. In lieu of that outfit, and as California thought she had a right to this very large amount, a majority of the committee supposed it was fair and right to give her these $300,000.

In relation to the other remark of the Senator from Ohio, I would say, there are suits which have been threatened, and I think some are pending; but the committee did not suppose there was much danger that judgment would go against the United States in these suits. But if judgment should go against the United States, of course the money would have to be refunded.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to ask a little further explanation on this subject from my friend from Virginia. I understand from the Senator that the State of California claimed the sum of $1,300,000.

Mr. HUNTER. Nearly that.

Mr. BADGER. That is the sum in round numbers. The claim is either well founded or ill founded. But I understand that the committee neither reject the claim, nor do they allow the claim; but they say they will give the State of California the sum of $300,000. What I want to know is this: have the committee ascertained that the $300,000, which they propose allowing to the State of California, is really due to that State; and that the residue of the amount claimed is not due to her? Or have the committee had any difficulty in ascertaining what particular or precise sum is due to her, and have assumed $300,000 as an approximation? Or is the $300,000 proposed to be given merely because she claims $1,300,000? If that is the ground for granting this amount, then it would be a very convenient thing for my State to bring forward a very large claim.

Mr. HUNTER. I thought I had stated before that the committee were of opinion that the State of California was not entitled to this fund.

Mr. BADGER. Any part of it?

Mr. HUNTER. Not to any part of it. This $300,000 was proposed to be given by a majority of the committee as a gratuity. Doubtless they were disposed to be more liberal in measuring the gratuity from the fact that the State of California did think it was wrong to withhold from her the civil fund. She claimed the whole amount. But the committee put the appropriation upon the ground that the United States has usually given some outfit to the Territories before they have been brought in as States, and that it was much dearer to put up public buildings in California than elsewhere; and I think the majority of the committee, who fixed the amount at $300,000, thought they ought to provide something in the proportion of four to one. I think some estimate at least was made in relation to that matter. It is due to myself, perhaps, to say that, in relation to that provision, I did not think California was entitled to it. But the committee have twice so decided, and I have acquiesced. I have given up as to that point; and the Senator from California has withdrawn his objections in order to enable this bill to pass; though he thinks his State is entitled to the whole of the civil fund. Under these circumstances, it seems to me it would be better that this bill should pass in its present form.

Mr. CHASE. I do not understand my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, as answering the question I put to him in regard to a portion of the fourth section. The fourth section, if I understand it, provides for the payment of the expenses of the convention which framed the constitution of California; and I am not aware of any other expenses incurred by that State preparatory to its admission into the Union. If there are any other expenses which this sum of $300,000 is to pay for, and if that is a proper sum to meet those expenses, I should be one of the last men in the world to object to it.

Mr. HUNTER. There is another provision in the bill, that the expenses of the government de facto, between the time of the promulgation of the treaty of peace and the establishment of the State constitution, should be paid. The expenses of the State convention were paid by General Riley out of this civil fund. The money has already been paid; and I believe it was paid (although I do not speak with certainty of that fact) under the order of the Executive. But, in addition to the expenses of the convention, there was a government de facto; there was a judiciary, in order to preserve the peace and order of society; and, as I said before, the question in regard to the expenses of the government de facto was a difficult one. But it seemed to us, that the only way of solving the difficulty was to recognize the existence of the government de facto, and to pay all its expenses, so far as they were confined to the object of the preservation of the peace and order of society in California. I believe it will be found that, considering the difficulties which arose out of the anomalous state of things which certainly existed in California, that assumption of the principle is the only supposition which would enable us to solve the difficulty satisfactorily. It may require us to pay more money than we should have had to pay if there had been a regular government there.

The committee had a great deal of difficulty with this subject, from the fact that there was no means of ascertaining with precise accuracy what was due, or what ought to have been paid. They have therefore left it to the discretion of the President, in the settlement of these accounts, to admit such vouchers as are proper, and such charges as he might think come within the legitimate sphere of the government de facto. But these expenses are provided for in a different section of the bill. This sum of $300,000 covers nothing of that. It is, as I said before, a gratuity—an outfit, as the Senator from Maryland called it—to the State of California.

Mr. BORLAND. I am in favor of the passage of this bill; but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California to one point. I understood from the remarks of the Senator from Virginia that this bill, in its present shape, was a sort of compromise between the United States and the State of California of certain matters in dispute. I understand from him that the Senator from California is willing to withdraw his objections, as the representative of California, for the present; and that the Committee on Finance, representing the United States as the other party, are willing to allow $300,000 to California. Well, if it be a compromise—if the United States are to make a positive grant of $300,000 to California—I think it would be but fair for the Senator from California, on the part of that State, to withdraw all further claim, and let the compromise be the final settlement of the account.

Mr. GWIN. I was opposed to the last section of the bill, because it did not give us the whole of the civil fund, and I intended to contest its passage before the Senate. But I have given up my intention to do so, to have these accounts settled. I give notice to the Senate, however, that I intend hereafter to urge the payment of the whole of this civil fund to California. But the other provisions of this bill are highly important. These accounts are unsettled. Here is the sum of over $1,200,000 of this civil fund unaccounted for. It is absolutely necessary that this bill should pass in order to settle the accounts of the officers who collected it; and I am told that some of the money is perhaps in jeopardy. I want these accounts to be settled; and to accomplish that purpose, I have withdrawn my opposition to the bill. I was the only member of the Committee on Finance who was opposed to reporting it in its present form; and I have withdrawn my opposition for the present for the purpose of having these accounts settled. The other question is before the Committee on Finance, and will be brought up hereafter; and I give notice that I will contend for the whole of this civil fund as belonging in right and justice to California, and will not give up the contest until we get it.

Mr. BORLAND. When a proposition was formerly before the Senate, granting or conceding the amount of $300,000 to the State of California, I and a good many others were opposed to it; but as I think the passage of this bill is very important, not only to the Government, but to the officers whose accounts are to be settled, I am willing to make this concession of $300,000. But I must say, that if the grant of $300,000 was before the Senate as a separate proposition, I should vote against it. I shall, therefore, hold myself in readiness to make what opposition I can to the proposition which the Senator from California has given notice he shall insist upon hereafter. I think it will be well for others, who take the same view of the subject, to be prepared to meet the claim when it comes up; and I will give my vote now, as the Senator from California does, under protest, with regard to these $300,000.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was subsequently read a third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with the law of the 11th of August, 1848, the copy of a dispatch from the Commissioner, ad interim, of the United States at Canton, together with the copy of certain rules and regulations for masters, officers, and seamen of vessels of the United States at the free ports of China, which accompanied said dispatch, and which are submitted for the revision of Congress; which were read, and ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

ASSIGNABILITY OF LAND WARRANTS.

A message, from the House of Representatives, was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it insists on its amendment to the bill to make land warrants assignable, disagreed to by the Senate, and asking a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and stating that it had appointed managers at the same on its part, viz: Mr. GEO. W. JONES, Mr. GEORGE BRIGGS, and Mr. WILLIAM H. BISSELL.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill last mentioned, insisted on by that House, and it was Resolved, That the Senate insist on its disagreement to the said amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Ordered, That the committee of conference, on the part of the Senate, consist of three members, to be appointed by the President of the Senate.

And Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. FELCH, were appointed accordingly.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. PRATT presented the memorial of ship-owners, merchants, and others, of Baltimore, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steam-ships; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER presented the memorial of ship-owners, merchants, and others, of Salem, Massachusetts, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steam-ships; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FISH presented the memorial of ship-owners, merchants, and others, of New York, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steam-ships; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, the memorial of Alexander J. Atocha, praying satisfaction for damages in consequence of having been expelled from Mexico, and his claim having been improperly rejected by the late Board of Commissioners; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Iowa, held at Israel Trumbo's, in Bremer county, recommending the establishment of a land office at Cedar Falls; which were referred to the Committee on Public Roads.

Also, the proceedings of a railroad meeting held at Quasqueton, Iowa, in favor of the construction of the Dubuque and North Red River Railroad; which were referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. STOCKTON presented the memorial of John Duff, for himself and his late partner, Joseph Gonder, jr., praying that a suit brought against him by the United States for an alleged violation of a contract to furnish stone for the dry dock at Brooklyn, may be discontinued; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, praying a modification of the bounty land law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of Hugh N. Page and others, officers in the Navy, praying additional pay for the time they served in California; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Also, a memorial of ship-masters, pilots, and others, of Philadelphia, praying the construction of piers and harbors in the Delaware river and bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, two petitions of citizens of Bridgeton, New Jersey, praying an increase of the duties on iron and glass; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a petition of citizens of Essex county, New Jersey, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a petition of citizens of New Jersey, remonstrating against the renewal of Parker's patent for improvements in the water-wheel; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the petition of citizens of Erie, Pennsylvania, praying the establishment of a naval depot or navy yard and dry dock on the Lakes; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SEWARD presented resolutions of the corporate authorities of the city of New York, in favor of the adoption of measures to obtain from the British Government the release of William Smith O'Brien, and certain other natives of Ireland, now suffering imprisonment in Van Diemen's Land; which were ordered to be laid on the table.

A motion by Mr. S. that they be printed, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Germantown, Pennsylvania, praying a modification of the bounty land law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JAMES presented a petition of citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. DAVIS presented the memorial of Charles Gordon, praying compensation for services as draughtsman to the Committee on Public Lands; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Also, a memorial of merchants, ship-owners, and others, of Boston, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steamships; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BADGER presented a petition of P. K. Dickinson & Co., praying that Woodworth's patent for a planing machine may not be renewed; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of Joseph H. Marsh, only child of Samuel Marsh, deceased, late a soldier during the Mexican war; praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the memorial of citizens of Washington, D. C., praying certain amendments to the city charter by the removal of certain restrictions on the right of suffrage; which was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. UPHAM presented the petition of Jonah Brooks, assistant marshal for taking the Seventh Census in Vermont, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of citizens of the State of New York, praying that pensions may be granted to widows or children of officers and soldiers of the revolutionary war who have never received pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of residents on the Menominee purchase, praying the removal of the Indians therefrom; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PAPER WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. DOWNS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Maria Taylor, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. MANGUM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the memorial of Mrs. Ann Robinson, asking payment for certain negroes carried away by the British in the war of 1812, reported a bill for her relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

MEXICAN INDEMNITIES.

Mr. PRATT. I am instructed by the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Don José Maria Jarero, a citizen of Mexico, to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of that memorial, which claims compensation out of the fund appropriated under the Mexican treaty, and to ask the reference of these papers to the select committee recently appointed by the Senate to take charge of all matters relating to this subject.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have a minority report on that subject which I wish to present. The majority of the committee have reported a resolution to refer this case to the select committee upon this subject. I have a minority report to present, concluding with a joint resolution. I do not know what has been the practice of the Senate in such cases, but I design, when the majority report comes up for consideration, to move to strike out all after the word "resolved," for the reasons stated in the minority report, and insert the resolution accompanying the report which I offer. I move the printing of both reports.

The PRESIDENT. The motion now made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] is to place the subject beyond the power of the Senator from Pennsylvania to make any amendment whatever. The motion is merely to discharge the committee from the further consideration of this memorial, and to refer it to the select committee on that subject, and when it is thus referred it goes out of the possession of the Senate. There would, therefore, be nothing before the Senate to which the minority report of the Senator from Pennsylvania could refer.

Mr. PRATT. When the select committee shall report, if the motion which I have made should prevail, it will be in the power of the Senator from Pennsylvania to offer a substitute in the shape of the report he now holds in his hand. I would suggest to that Senator, that if the papers are referred to the select committee, the whole subject will come under the consideration of that committee; and the majority of the Committee of Claims have thought it better that it should be referred to the select committee untrammelled, than that the question should be prematurely discussed here.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The minority of the committee entertained the opinion that this claim should be paid; in other words, that the balance of the $3,250,000 of the Mexican indemnity fund should be paid to the Mexican Government, or upon the order of the Mexican Government to any person that Government might choose to authorize to receive it. I am, therefore, of opinion that this case should not go with the others to the select committee; and for that reason I trust the matter will go over, and that the minority report will be considered. I suppose that is the proper course to pursue in such a case.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the motion of my friend from Maryland will be adopted, and that the Committee of Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of this memorial. Whether the claim is referred to the select committee or not, is, in my judgment, not a subject of so much moment. The case is a very simple one; and it is a matter of some surprise to me that the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania should doubt the construction to be put upon this treaty. This memorialist claims the right to some forty odd thousand dollars, which is the residue of the $3,250,000, after the payment of all the claims under the commission appointed by virtue of the treaty with Mexico. There is this balance remaining to the United States, which the Government stipulated to pay on a certain class of claims. General Jarero claims this balance on the ground that the Mexican Government have given an order for its payment through their minister—claiming thus that this balance belongs to the Mexican Government. I have looked into this question attentively, and I cannot find the least shadow of a ground on which Mexico can claim that fund. I do not intend to enter into the discussion of this question now; but I must say that the matter appears to me to be so plain that "He who runs may read;" and in that treaty there is no stipulation which would entitle Mexico to the balance of that fund, after we have discharged the claims which we are forced under the treaty to pay. It is upon this ground, and on this ground alone—that the party has no claim founded upon the rights of the Mexican Government to this fund—that the Committee ask to be discharged. The ground of proposing the reference to this select committee, is simply that we know that memorials of this character have been so referred; and we think it right and proper, as this claim was rejected by the commission on the ground that it was not an American claim, that it should go before that committee. It seems to me inscrutable, if this was originally a claim of an American citizen, that because a Mexican was the holder of it the commission should have rejected it. I cannot conceive on what principle they could arrive at such a result. At all events, I think the matter is worthy of a reference to the select committee. What may be the result of their investigation is another question.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I understand there is but one memorial. I only make a report with regard to one. I will not now undertake to discuss the question. It is a question of the construction of the treaty. I have discussed it in the minority report, which I have submitted to the Senate. The only question is, what is the proper course to pursue to dispose of this minority report, and what is the proper way to bring the subject to the attention of the Senate. I ask the opinion of the Senate as to the proper construction of this treaty. The question has been presented by the memorialist. It is a question of construction, and of construction alone, and therefore I think it should not go to the select committee. If the construction is as I contend, then the memorialist will receive the money. If the construction should be as contended for by the Senators from Delaware and Maryland, then I agree that the memorial should go to the select committee.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that there is no report from the committee. They simply ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial, and that it be referred to the select committee. The report of a minority of a committee cannot be received without the unanimous consent of the Senate. The question is now whether the Senate will discharge the committee from the further consideration of the memorial, and refer it to the select committee on Mexican Claims.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I hope, then, the committee will not be discharged, or that the unanimous consent of the Senate will be given for the introduction of this minority report. All I ask is that the Senate will examine the subject.

The PRESIDENT. There is no majority report.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The majority ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and a reference to the select committee. I ask that the whole subject may be laid on the table, and that the report may be printed.

Mr. BADGER. Why? I shall certainly object to the report being printed.

The PRESIDENT. What report? The committee simply ask to be discharged, and to have the memorial referred to another committee, as the Chair has already stated.

Mr. BADGER. Why should they not be discharged?

Mr. HAMLIN. If I understand the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania aright, he asks that the report which he has submitted be received and printed, whether there be any majority report or not. I beg leave to inquire of the Chair if the paper which is submitted by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania may not be received with the unanimous consent of the Senate, and be printed?

The PRESIDENT. Most certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well; I hear no objection.

Mr. BADGER. I object.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator from North Carolina objects. Then the question recurs on adopting the motion made by the committee, which is to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial, and its reference to the select committee.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania has submitted at length, in writing, his reasons why that committee ought not to be discharged.

Mr. BADGER. Very well. We will hear them now, if he will offer them.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think we could appropriate the time of the Senate to better purpose, and that it would be better to let the report be printed, and the matter remain for the present where it now is until it is printed, and then we can judge whether we will discharge the committee or not. If the committee is discharged, we shall not have the benefit of the matter which is proposed to be submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Pennsylvania can present in his individual capacity as a Senator anything which will throw light upon this subject, or give any information to this body; but that he cannot present such a paper now as a minority report.

Mr. BADGER. I will state some reasons why the minority report should not be received. In the first place, this is a case of the first impression of the Senate. The committee to which the subject has been referred direct a member of the committee to move that they be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial, not upon the ground that the claim is not meritorious, not upon the ground that they have considered and decided the case—it is not in the nature of an adverse report—but simply that it may be referred to another committee, which they think is more appropriate to take charge of the subject—

Mr. PRATT. Which the Senate has appointed to take charge of this whole subject.

Mr. BADGER. I understand it. Now a member of that committee brings in what he calls a minority report, and upon what? Upon the merits of this claim; undertaking to show in this minority report that the claim is a valid one, and ought to be paid. Now, that is not the question before the Senate, and I do not want the Senator from Pennsylvania to preoccupy that question by presenting a report here which he calls a minority report, while at the same time we are sending the subject to a committee which we wish to be entirely untrammelled by any previous action.

Mr. BRODHEAD. One word, if the Senator pleases. I undertake to show that the reasons which are introduced in the minority report are reasons which go to show that the memorial should not be referred to the select committee.

Mr. BADGER. Whatever they may be, I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania presents what he calls a minority report, there being no majority report in which the merits of this claim are investigated. I do not see where we shall be led, if the Senate adopts a system of that kind, admitting one gentleman on a committee to which a particular question was referred to bring in a report investigating the merits of the whole case and have it printed. I cannot conceive why any petition, memorial, or claim, which grows out of the Mexican treaty, or the proceedings of the late Mexican Board, should not be referred to the select committee of which the honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] is the chairman. I think the whole subject is one that properly comes under the consideration of that committee; and if there be any reason why relief should be given to this claimant, although that reason does not extend to any other, that committee is perfectly competent to make a report in favor of this claimant, although it reports against all others. It is as competent for that committee to investigate the construction of the treaty as it is for any other committee to do it. And why not? They are to determine and present to the Senate what they think ought to be done in relation to the subject-matter of the claims which are alleged to exist in consequence of what are considered the wrong or mistaken decisions of that Board. Now, whether these wrong decisions relate to the construction of the treaty or anything else, the whole matter will be before the committee. Therefore, it is not with the slightest disrespect or unwillingness, to accommodate the Senator from Pennsylvania, that I must interpose an objection to having the paper presented and printed. I am totally unable to understand why the memorial should not go to the select committee which the Senate have raised expressly to take charge of this subject.

Mr. PRATT. I do not consider that it is at all necessary to go into the consideration of the question which will be presented whenever a report shall be made; but I wish to say a single word, that the Senate may understand the position assumed by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania. The late commission omitted to expend or appropriate some $42,000 of the $3,250,000 which were originally appropriated for the purpose of paying the liabilities of this Government, under the treaty with the Mexican Government. The Mexican Government now claim this $42,000 which are unappropriated, as belonging to that Government under the treaty, and they have given an order to the petitioner in this case, directing the payment of that $42,000 to be made to him. Now, I suppose that the select committee which has been raised would necessarily have under its consideration, for its decision, that very question, under the treaty, which is made by the Government of Mexico. It will be one of the first preliminary questions to be settled by this select committee, with reference to the residue of this fund claimed by Mexico, and to which a majority of the Committee of Claims believe that Mexico has no just right. The claim which General Jarero sets up to this money in the memorial he presents, is on account of the order he has received from the Mexican Government that the money shall be paid to him. The Senator from Pennsylvania is a member of the select committee, and there can be no difficulty in bringing his peculiar views before that committee with reference to the rights of Mexico. If the select committee are of the same opinion as the Committee of Claims, he can present his report there as well as here. It seems to me that the whole subject will then come up properly in the report of that committee, and not till then. I hope the Senate will discharge the Committee of Claims, and suffer the memorial to go to the select committee.

Mr. BAYARD. I will suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that certainly the construction of that treaty must come before the select committee. They cannot enter upon the performance of their duties without considering its construction. It is essential to the examination of the claims. Any views which the Senator entertains can be brought before that committee; and if they agree with him, they will report accordingly, and if they disagree, it will be competent for him to bring in a minority report, in which he can present the whole subject. Or if the Senator pleases, he can, at a subsequent day, introduce a bill for the relief of the claimant, or adopt some course of that kind.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I admit that this is a subject which can be considered by the select committee; but it was referred to the Committee of Claims, and I think it was properly so referred, and that the question should have been considered by the Committee of Claims. Why, therefore, refer it to the select committee? It is a memorial upon which a select committee would not have been raised. I think the select committee was raised for an entirely different purpose. Hence it is that I consider it my duty to oppose this motion. It is, however, quite immaterial to me.

Mr. RUSK. It seems to me that to take this minority report, in the present state of the case, would be to prejudice the whole question.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly it would.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair has already stated that there can be no minority report presented now.

Mr. RUSK. Then it seems to me that there ought not to be the least objection to the motion of the Senator from Maryland—that the Committee of Claims should be discharged from the further consideration of this memorial, and that it should go to the select committee on this subject. I do not believe that there is the slightest foundation for this claim, even admitting in advance that the commission have provided for the payment of all the debts to which this fund is properly liable. But to act upon this claim now, and to determine that $40,000 are due to Mexico, under the provision made for the payment of the creditors of the United States, before that committee acts in any way, would to all intents and purposes be anticipating the action of that committee, which would not be proper. Besides, it may be ascertained that the sum we have to pay may be a much larger amount than is claimed, or it may be much less. As the matter stands now, I can see no reason why this balance should be paid to Mexico. But it is clear to me, that to take any action now in reference to this report, which might go by implication to pre-judge the claim in favor of Mexico, would only be equal to precluding the select committee from acting at all.

The question was then taken on the motion to discharge the Committee of Claims from the further consideration of the memorial, and it was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. I now move that it be referred to the select committee appointed to take charge of these matters.

The motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.—DAVID L. DAVIS.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the adverse reports upon the President's table. The first was the report of the Committee on Pensions in the case of David L. Davis. The report states that the petitioner was employed as an assistant in a Government survey, under the late survey of Mr. John M. Smith, in the State of Arkansas, from the 20th of May to the 24th of July, 1851; that, while a party of men were encamped on the day last named, a tree was blown across the camp by a hurricane, which killed two men instantly, and seriously injured the petitioner so as to prevent his ability to perform manual labor.

The committee recommend that the prayer of the petitioner be rejected.

The report was concurred in.

SAMUEL SPALDING.

The next report was from the Committee on Pensions in the case of Samuel Spalding.

The report was read, from which it appeared that the petitioner had been upon the pension-list for about seventeen years, and that he asked for arrears of pension from the date of his discharge in 1814, stating as a reason for his not applying for a pension previous to the year 1834, that he had been informed, on what he supposed to be good authority, that he would be allowed a pension from the date of his discharge. It further appeared that the petitioner was discharged on account of the expiration of his term of service, and not on a surgeon's certificate.

The committee report that the prayer of the petitioner ought not to be granted.

The report of the committee was concurred in.

LOUISIANA VOLUNTEERS.

The Senate next proceeded to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the memorial of the officers of the first regiment of Louisiana Volunteers, for indemnity for loss by the wreck of the ship Oudiska, on the coast of Mexico.

The committee reported that it was not expedient to grant the prayer of the petitioners; and the report was concurred in.

ADAM HAYS.

The Senate next took up the report of the Committee on Pensions in the case of Adam Hays.

It appeared that the petitioner had served during the war of 1812 as an army surgeon, and that from exposure he had contracted a severe disease of the lungs; that in the year 1838, he received a pension of $22 50 per month, and he now asked for arrearages of pension from the year 1815 to the year 1838, when he was discharged.

The committee reported adversely, and the report was concurred in.

GEORGE W. SEVIER.

The Senate next proceeded to consider the report of the Committee on Military Affairs in the case of George W. Sevier.

The report set forth that the petitioner claimed compensation for hogs said to have been destroyed in Texas by troops of the United States.

The committee reported that, in their opinion, the claim was sustained by no proof under any principle which should bind the Government, and concluded that the prayer of the petitioner was unreasonable, and ought not to be granted.

The report was concurred in.

WILLIAM A. DUER.

The PRESIDENT announced, as next in order, the report of the Committee of Claims, on the petition of William A. Duer, administrator of William Duer.

On the motion of Mr. SEWARD, on account of the absence of the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MILLER,] who introduced this bill, its further consideration was postponed to Friday next.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. PRATT. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we are occupying the time of the Senate very unnecessarily in reading over all these reports of cases, on which the several committees have reported adversely. I move that the reading of these reports be dispensed with, where there are no minority reports, and that they all be concurred in at once.

The PRESIDENT. It is indispensable that the resolutions of the committees should be read, in order that the Senate may know what has been done in each case.

Mr. PRATT. All these are unfavorable reports, and I move that they may all be laid upon the table, in order that we may proceed to the Calendar.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope not; we will soon get through these reports.

The PRESIDENT. It is utterly impossible for the Chair to determine which case is reported upon favorably, or which unfavorably, until the report be read by the Secretary.

Mr. BADGER. There is no adverse report on the Calendar, and every private claim on the Calendar is a case in which a bill has been reported for the action of the Senate. If these reports could be all disposed of at once, we could get along very well, and I think my friend from Maryland is right in this respect. The bills we pass have to go to the House and be acted upon, whereas these reports present no subject for action beyond the mere concurrence of the Senate in the recommendation of their committees. I think it would be better to go to the Calendar and take up the bills.

The PRESIDENT. A number of these reports are favorable, and a number of them are unfavorable. If it be the pleasure of the Senate to postpone the consideration of these reports to take up the Calendar, all very well. The Chair can have no objection.

Mr. RUSK. I move that these reports be passed over, and that the Senate take up the Calendar.

Mr. GWIN. Some of these cases which have been unfavorably reported upon I desire to test before the Senate.

The question was then taken on the motion to take up the Calendar, and it was decided in the affirmative.

JOHN F. CALLAN.

The Senate then proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the bill for the relief of John F. Callan, administrator of Daniel Remner, deceased.

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to cause the claim of John F. Callan, administrator and surviving partner of Daniel Remner, deceased, arising out of the alleged burning of a rope-walk in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, in the month of August, 1814, to be settled upon principles of justice and equity; provided that in no case the sum shall exceed $6,744.

Mr. BAYARD. I dissented from the views of the committee as to reporting that bill. Before it is sanctioned by the vote of the Senate, I should like to have a former report read. This claim was before the House of Representatives some thirty years ago, and was allowed as to the personal property, but was refused as to the house; and the claim is now made for the real estate. The Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD,] I believe, has a thorough knowledge of the circumstances of this case. The claim is this: During the last war, wherever the British troops landed and obtained a foothold in this country, their depredations were excessive. The ordinary rules of civilized warfare were put at defiance by them throughout the whole country wherever they went. Claims were made by citizens from all quarters of the country after the peace, for remuneration for their losses. The principle on which these claims should be allowed was established, after much discussion, by acts of Congress passed in 1816 and 1817, and subsequently settled in 1825. This principle involved the propriety of payments to this extent, and no further: that wherever the destruction was made by the enemy contrary to the rules of civilized warfare, Government should not pay the citizens for their losses, as it was one of those exigencies of war which the citizens must themselves sustain.

In this particular case the claim was based upon this ground: The parties were the owners of a rope-walk in the city of Washington, in which there was a parcel of cordage and a quantity of rope which were destroyed by the enemy, together with the rope-walk, in 1814, when the British took possession of the city of Washington. The claim was allowed by a committee after an adverse report against the whole claim in 1818. A second committee allowed that portion of the claim which applied to personal property, on this ground, that the petitioners had provided the means of removing their personal property out of the city of Washington, and out of the reach of the enemy, and on the distinct ground that the Government took away the wagons they had and appropriated them to its own use. Therefore it is claimed that Government is liable for the destruction of their personal property. At that day, the claim was never based on any other ground. The claim now made is for the burning of the rope-walk. That could not be removed.

The ground on which I have differed from the majority of the committee, is this: They say the inference is, that the enemy having destroyed the cordage and burned the building with a view to the destruction of the ropes and cordages, it rests upon the Government to show that the rope-walk would have been destroyed if the material, which is called munitions of war, I think, in the report of the committee, had not been there. In my judgment, according to the report of the former committee, there was not the semblance of anything like munitions of war which would authorize the enemy to destroy this property. These parties had a private rope-walk. They may have had contracts with the Government, and they may have supplied the Government with cordage sometimes, but no cordage of the Government was there at that time. That was not the ground on which the claim was made, but simply on the ground that the means of removing their personal property were taken away. Therefore, whether their property was destroyed according to the rules of civilized warfare or not, they claimed they would be entitled to remuneration to the extent to which they were prevented from removing their property on account of loss of their wagons and carts which were taken by the Government.

The present report of the committee is made somewhat on the ground that these articles were a species of property which the enemy would be justified in destroying, or if not justified in destroying them, it seems reasonable to conclude that the enemy would have destroyed the rope-walk whether this property was in it or not. The argument upon the other side is, that it is for the Government to show that such would have been the result. I think it would not. When a party makes a claim here, he should show that there is sufficient ground to sustain that claim. The Government did not prevent him from removing his rope-walk, because he could not remove it. They have paid him for property which he could have removed, but was prevented from removing by the impressment into the service of the Government of the means of its removal. He now asks payment for that which he could not remove. I think the claim ought not to be granted.

By turning to the former report of the committee, to which this matter was referred, I think the Senate will be satisfied that the claim ought not to be allowed. On page 442 of "The American State Papers," under the head, "Claims," we have the following report:

"Indemnity for property lost by the impressment into the public service of the means of its removal. Communicated to the House of Representatives, November 19, 1814.

"Mr. VANCE, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Daniel Remner and Nathaniel M. Heath, of the District of Columbia, made the following report:

"That the petitioners were owners of rope-walks in the city of Washington, in which was contained a large quantity of spun yarns and navy cordage, all of which was destroyed by the enemy in his late incursion into this city. On or about the 20th of July last, one of the petitioners [Mr. Heath] applied to Mr. Southlan, the owner of some longboats lying in the Potomac, and engaged of him five of them to transport his cordage and yarn up the river if the enemy should invade the city. On the 18th and 19th of August, it was deemed expedient by General Winder to employ the boats of Mr. Southlan for the purpose of transporting the troops across the Potomac, which were kept in the employment of the Government until after the invasion of the city. On the 20th of August, the petitioners applied for the boats according to contract, for the purpose of removing their property, when they were informed that they were impressed. It also appears to the committee that on the 22d of August, the petitioners employed a wagon and nine or ten carts for the purpose of removing their property; but the wagon and two or three of the carts were impressed by the officers of the Departments to remove the public papers and property, and that seven of the carts employed, after taking loads from the rope walks out of the city, refused to return to haul any more for the petitioners, apprehending that, if they did so, they would be impressed into the employment of the Government. It is also stated and believed that, after that day, and before the enemy entered the city, carriages were not to be had in the city to remove the property. The loss of the petitioners, exclusive of the price of the rope-walks, is estimated at about $34,800. They ask of Congress to be reimbursed to the amount of their loss.

"The committee are of opinion that the Government is under no obligation to pay for the property. The destruction of private property by the enemy, in the progress of the war, is much to be regretted and highly to be deprecated; but when it does happen it is to be considered between the Government and its citizens as one of the calamities of war. It may be presumed that the circumstance of the boats, wagon, and carts being impressed by the Government to perform services valuable to it, may create some equitable consideration in favor of the petitioners. It is, however, believed by the committee not to be sufficient to authorize them to allow the claim. They, therefore, present to the House the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted."

That was the first report in 1814. The claim was again presented for the loss of the rope-walk, and the report of the committee will be found in the same book, under the date of January 17th, 1817. The report was adverse: "That the prayer of the petitioners ought not to be granted." I think there was a third report made to Congress on the 16th of March, 1818, and the report stated that the petitioners asked for compensation for the real estate, the rope-walk, as well as the personal property. The committee allowed the claim as to the personal property, estimating it at what they conceived to be proper, but reported against the claim as to the rope-walk; and they based their report entirely on the ground of the impressment by the Government of the means of removing their personal property. I will read a part of that report:

"Your committee are of opinion that the allegations of the petitioners are fully supported by testimony; that the intervention of officers of the Government in wresting from the claimants every description of means provided by them for the removal of their property was the cause of the movable part thereof being destroyed by the enemy. The conduct of the petitioners, at the period aforesaid, sufficiently shows what was the opinion generally entertained by our citizens, at that day, as to the destruction of private property of this description by the enemy. In this case no claim is set up of military deposit or military occupation, as is the pretext for payment in many other cases where property of a like description was destroyed by the enemy. The claimants seem to have been well aware what would be the fate of their property in case the enemy did invade the city, and made great exertions to save it; and it would not be presuming too much to say that they would have effected that object but for the intervention of the officers of the Government in taking from them the means of doing so.

It is believed that the exertions of the petitioners in procuring the means to remove their private property, brought within the reach of the officers of the Departments the means whereby records, and documents, and papers of the nation were saved of great value, and ought not to be neglected for any individual interest, and that the petitioners have a reasonable and just claim on the Government for the removable part of their establishment, consisting of rope, spun yarns, and hemp, deducting therefrom what would reasonably have been the cost of transporting the same to a place of safety, and back to the rope-walk, after the danger ceased, and damage done to the materials by such removal, with, perhaps, some deduction from the prices at which the articles are charged.

Included in the sum stated of their loss is $5,650, estimated as the value of the rope-walk which your committee think ought to be rejected, as the same would have been burnt by the enemy if the materials of cordage and hemp had been removed therefrom. The balance of the claim ($24,767) is stated by the claimant as follows:

[Then come the several items, and the committee thus conclude.]

"Should it be satisfactorily proved that the above quantity of cordage and hemp was destroyed, the committee are of opinion that the latter sum would be no more than a reasonable compensation; but they have not been able to satisfy themselves as to the quantity. They, therefore, recommend the passage of an act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to pay for whatever quantity may be satisfactorily shown to have been destroyed, not exceeding in amount the above sum of $19,813 60, and for that purpose report a bill."

That amount was allowed to the petitioners. Having claimed for their personal property at that time, they now claim for the destruction of the real estate, and I wish the Senate to understand that the difference between myself and other members of the committee consists in this: They say we have no right to infer that the enemy would have destroyed the rope-walk if the cordage had been removed. I think that such is the reasonable inference, and if you are in doubt as to the inference, it rests upon the claimant to show a valid claim. Government did not and could not prevent him from removing his rope-walk, because it was real estate. Therefore, I think the ground on which the former part of the claim was allowed is not sufficient to justify the allowance of the present claim.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, if I can obtain the attention of Senators for a very few moments, I will endeavor to explain the views of the majority of the committee upon this subject, and state, in answer to my friend who has just spoken against the bill, why this claim ought to be allowed. In the first place, without contesting the principle upon which my learned friend goes—because it is not necessary for the occasion—I will endeavor to show that, from the facts of this case, according to the principle which he avows as right, the claim ought to be paid. What is the principle? It is, that wherever private property is destroyed by a public enemy, in accordance with the usages of civilized warfare, in consequence of any act of this Government or its agents, the Government ought to be responsible for it. There can be no doubt that this is going in favor of the Government to the utmost extent to which any one can go—that wherever, in accordance with the usages of civilized warfare, the property of a citizen of this country is destroyed because of the occupancy or usage of that property by the Government or its agents, the Government is bound to pay for it.

In 1814, when the British army came to the city of Washington, the husband of the lady who is the claimant here—since dead—owned a rope-walk in this city, which manufactured the rope, twine, and naval stores necessary for our vessels at the navy-yard at this place. There was on deposit in the rope-walk a large quantity of naval stores, amounting to some $16,000 or $17,000. Its owner had provided a sufficient number of wagons, carts, and boats—putting the boats upon the Eastern branch of the Potomac—to carry those munitions of war from his house and take them away to a place of safety. Now, if the munitions of war had not been within the house belonging to this individual, according to the usages of civilized warfare, the house would not have been destroyed. That is conceded; my learned friend concedes it. The evidence is conclusive that the owner of the rope-walk had provided sufficient means to carry away all those things which would have justified, according to the usages of civilized warfare, the destruction of the property. He could have carried them away, but the means of carrying them away were taken possession of by our army to carry their baggage. Hence it was that Congress has already paid for the twine and rope.

But my friend says they ought not to pay for the rope-walk. I cannot for my life see the propriety of the distinction which is made. Here was an individual who had twine and rope within his house. He had provided means for carrying them away. The fact that the twine and rope were there, justified the burning of the property. Now, unless the honorable Senator can show that $17,000 worth of twine and rope would be burned in a house, without burning the house, he must come to the conclusion, as it seems to me, inasmuch as he admits the rope was properly paid for, that we ought equally to pay for the house.

Mr. President, I am not given to making speeches for the purpose of prolonging debate. I have given to the Senate my view of this case. It is within the nutshell I have stated, and I do hope this claim will pass. We have devoted much more time, upon various occasions, to questions of minor importance than to this. This claim is a just one. It is conceded, according to my humble apprehension, by the Government to be just, because it has paid for the burning of the twine and rope, which the individual would have removed had he not been prevented in the manner I have mentioned. The house was destroyed in consequence of the right of the British army to destroy the twine and rope; therefore we have admitted that we are bound to pay for the house because we have paid for the twine and rope.

Mr. BRADBURY. The honorable Senator from Maryland rests this claim upon the assumption that the building was burned in consequence of the twine and rope being stored in it. That assumption seems to be contradicted by the record. This case was investigated in 1818, and the committee having it under examination made their report. They reported a bill in favor of the parties, to remunerate them for the loss of the twine and rope which was in the store-house. In that report they expressly state that the building would have been destroyed if those articles had not been stored in it. I will call the attention of the Senate to the language of the report:

"Included in the sum stated of their loss, is $5,650, estimated as the value of the rope-walk, which your committee think ought to be rejected, as the same would have been burned by the enemy if the materials of cordage and hemp had been removed therefrom."

They had better means of knowing it than we have. They investigated it when the facts were fresh—when witnesses could be called in. They investigated it in the immediate vicinity where the transaction occurred; and they find, in their report, that the building would have been destroyed had the materials been removed. Now, the question is this, whether when a committee, investigating under the circumstances which that committee did, find a fact, we shall, after a lapse of more than a quarter of a century, infer, without any proof whatever, that their finding was erroneous? I think it would be safer, when a finding of that kind is explicit, that we should rest upon it, rather than undertake, by inference, to overturn the report of a committee that investigated that subject at the time. My apprehension is, that if we undertake anything of the kind it will lead to a vast mass of cases in which the parties, becoming dissatisfied with the investigation, would ask us to go into their cases again.

Mr. PRATT. The Senator from Maine has read from a report which, he says, has stated a fact. He also says it would be unwise for us to override that fact, so found by that committee, a long time ago. That committee say, that the rope-walk would have burned any how. Is that a fact? It may be an opinion; but I cannot conceive how the Senator can say that it is a fact which the committee did report, or had any right to report. They say it would have been burned any how. I take the gentlemen according to their own showing; either that that committee had acted not in accordance with the principle they state, or that we are bound to pay for the house. No property is to be paid for unless it was properly burned according to the usages of civilized warfare. This cordage must have been properly burned according to the usages of civilized warfare, or it would not have been paid for. It was, therefore, according to the concession of the other side, properly destroyed by the British army. They had a right to destroy it. It is from that proper destruction alone that our right and obligation to pay grows. The British, therefore, had a right to destroy it. The party could have removed it from his house; he had provided the means for removing it. According to the concession of the other side, he could have removed it, and then it could not have been destroyed. It was properly destroyed by reason of the action of our Government in this house; it consequently destroyed the house; and I cannot, for my life, see why we are not as much obliged to pay consequential damages for the burning of the house as for the twine which it is admitted was properly destroyed.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator from Maryland has misapprehended my view of the case altogether, perhaps from the imperfect manner in which I explained it. I will endeavor to correct his misapprehension. I stated that the committee did not put this claim upon the general principle on which relief was granted in other cases, but that if the general principle had been applied in this case—that is, the right of the enemy to destroy this property—the petitioners would have been entitled to no relief. But the committee made an exception on other grounds; that no matter what was the character of the property, the Government, having taken away from the party the means of its removal, was bound to compensate the party, whether the destruction by the enemy was according to the usages of civilized warfare or not. That is the ground upon which the claim was made, and upon which part of it was allowed in 1818, thirty-odd years ago. If that be so, the Senator's argument is entirely beside the question. He assumes that the enemy had a right to destroy the personal property, and that in doing so, the destruction of the house was consequential to it. I deny that the enemy had, according to the usages of civilized warfare, a right to destroy the property. The reason why the personally was paid for, was that the Government had taken away the means of its removal; and as the party could have removed it, no matter what its character was, it would have been safe from destruction. I think the Senate will now understand my views. The ground I mean to take is that which was taken by the committee of 1818 and two previous committees, and the ground upon which the claim was then made. This was not the property of the Government. These parties may have supplied the Government, or they may not. They had a private rope-walk. They sold to those who were the best purchasers. The vast mass of the property which was in the building at the time, as appears from the report of the committee, was unfinished ropes of various kinds. A very small portion, only to the value of $610, was cordage; the rest was unspun and unfinished. I know of no principle which would justify the destruction of it by the enemy; but Great Britain did not pause, during that war, destroying property, because it was not in accordance with the usages of civilized warfare. The parties did not venture to claim compensation on that ground, and the committee rejected it on that ground, but allowed it on the other.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I examined this claim when I was a member of the Committee of Claims, and came to the conclusion that it had no just foundation. I rise for the purpose of stating why I think it ought not to be paid. We have a navy-yard upon the east branch of the Potomac here, and just in the neighborhood of it, according to the proof, was this rope-walk, this twine, and everything which is usually manufactured at a rope-walk. Now, I say, that according to the usages of civilized warfare, an invading army would burn up the navy-yard and all its appurtenances, and I would cashier a General, if he were in my service, who would not do so. When an invading army sees a navy-yard, and just by it a rope-walk where all the cordage, twine, and if you please, sails for vessels may be prepared, would not, according to the usages of civilized warfare, the General direct the destruction of property which was applied to furnishing the navy-yard? Why, sir, can anything be plainer? It seems to me not. I take it that there was not a particle of the twine, cordage, and those other things manufactured in the navy-yard, there at all. Suppose they had all been removed by the wagons and carts which were prepared—they were not, and therefore were properly paid for, as I conceive, heretofore—but suppose they had succeeded in removing every particle, and nothing had remained but the house, then, I ask, what would have been the consequences resulting from the presentation of the appurtenances of the rope-walk, just by the navy-yard where ships were manufactured, to the invading commanding General? He would have said, Here the enemy obtain supplies for their shipping. Would he take the distinction whether this was public or private property? Could he tell whether the rope-walk and its appurtenances did not belong to the Government as appurtenances of the navy-yard? He could know nothing about that. It would have been a rational conclusion, that if the Government owned the navy-yard, it also owned the adjacent rope-walk. It seems to me that, under these circumstances, the laws of civilized warfare would have required the destruction of the property. It seems to me that if our Generals, invading a foreign country, should find a navy-yard and an adjacent rope-walk, they would destroy all for the purpose of disabling the enemy. If our Generals ought not to do that, British Generals ought not to do it. But I think the laws of war would justify the destruction of property, thus situated, as public property.

Take the case of a private manufactory of guns. Everybody would say that if an invading enemy could destroy the public works at Springfield or Harper's Ferry, it would be right and proper. So if our invading Generals could have destroyed the manufactories where the Mexicans, in the late Mexican war, obtained their supplies, it would have been lawful, and proper, and just; and if General Scott had left in his rear at Vera Cruz, a manufactory of either cannon or small arms, and gone on to Mexico, it would have deprived him of many of those laurels which we all concede to him, and would have been looked upon as a great imprudence and want of foresight. Now, suppose the manufactory, instead of being property owned by the Government, was private property, just as Mason's works above the city for the manufacture of cannon, would not the invading army say the Government derives supplies from this private establishment for the purpose of disabling the enemy, and that they had a right to destroy it? That is the case, it seems to me, in regard to this rope-walk. All its appurtenances being near the navy-yard, when the navy-yard was burned, the enemy would say "this is the place whence this navy-yard derives its supplies, and of course when we burn the navy-yard, we will burn all its appurtenances, whether they be private or public property." That is the ground upon which I rest my objection to this claim.

Mr. BRIGHT. Four years ago, when this claim was before the Senate, I joined the Senator from Kentucky in opposing it; and I believe it was owing to his opposition and my own on the last night of the session that it was defeated. My attention was afterwards called to the claim by a gentleman in whom I had the most unlimited confidence, and I have become satisfied that I was wrong in opposing it. I generally concur with the Senator from Kentucky on claims of this kind, and take it for granted that their name is an objection to them; but I am satisfied that this claim has merit, and that the amount proposed to be paid by this bill is nothing more than the parties are entitled to. I do not know that I could make a better argument upon the point than is presented in the report of the Committee of Claims, which I hold in my hand. That committee has made a favorable report. The Senator from Delaware, however, dissenting. I shall ask for the reading of the report, and I wish to call the attention of Senators to it. It states in a very clear and concise manner the points of the case. It was made by my colleague, [Mr. WHITCOMB,] and has the concurrence, I understand, of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD,] chairman of that committee. I think the facts of the case may be narrowed down to these: The parties for whose benefit this bill is presented owned certain materials and the building referred to. They made all necessary and proper arrangements to remove their cordage, hemp, and other materials, and were upon the verge of removing them when the means they had employed for that purpose were taken by the Government officers, and used by them for the benefit of the Government. All the testimony goes to show the fact that if the Government officers had not taken the wagons and boats of these parties, and impressed them into the public service, their hemp, and cordage, and other articles, would have been removed to a place of safety. It was the fact that these combustible materials were left in the building, that led to its being destroyed by fire. A committee formerly reported a bill, which became a law, to provide for payment of the materials destroyed in the building. The materials having been paid for, the only question that remains is whether or not the building should be paid for. I think that, as a legal point, if presented to any court, there could be no doubt about the duty of the United States to pay, in this case, all that is claimed. The report presents a better argument than I can make, and therefore I ask that it be read.

The report was read accordingly.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not mean to discuss this question any further. The Senate have heard enough of it. But, with a view to test the sense of the Senate, I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

RECESS.

On the motion of Mr. STOCKTON, it was ordered that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

FRENCH SPOILIATIONS.

Mr. BRADBURY. Some time ago the Senate assigned a day for the consideration of the bill making provision for French spoiliations prior to 1801. I desire to call it up at an early day. It is time that it should be acted upon, and I should have desired to devote to-morrow to its consideration; but I give notice that I shall call it up on Monday under the conviction that it can be voted on, and finally disposed of on that day possibly in a very short time.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I hope my silence will not be construed into consent on my part to take up that bill.

THOMAS H. McMANUS.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill to authorize T. H. McManus to enter, by preemption, certain lands in the Greensburg district of Louisiana.

Mr. DOWNS. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "in township No. 1 of range No. 3;" and also the word "aforesaid," the last word of the bill, which will be rendered necessary by the other amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Louisiana, why the quantity of land allowed to be entered by this bill is so much larger than the quantity which the settler is allowed to enter? And whether the bill allows the land to be entered all in one body?

Mr. DOWNS. The bill does allow the land to be entered in one body. The reason was explained when the bill was up before; but I will state it again very briefly. The land claimed was originally settled—part of it—by a man who presented his claim, but a preemption right could not be completed, because a survey had not been made. He died, and his right to this preemption was sold at probate sale, and purchased by Mr. McManus for $1,800. That gave him a right to the other party's claim for a preemption to one hundred and sixty acres. Another man, a brother of this individual, Samuel McManus, settled another lot of land adjoining it, and presented his application for a preemption; but it was not completed because the surveys were defective in that quarter of the district. He died, and at probate sale the petitioner here bought that claim. That gave him a right to two preemptions. In addition to that, there were two or three settlements on lands adjoining. Some presented claims for preemption and some did not; but all of them sold whatever rights they had to this petitioner, T. H. McManus, and he has made his plantation on the body of land thus claimed by those settlement-rights, all of which have been sold to him. He has been living there for years, but has never been able to complete his title; and he now comes in and asks that he may be allowed to enter, by preemption, the settlement-rights thus purchased from individuals, and a small fraction adjoining.

Mr. FELCH. If I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, it gives no definite location to the land whatever.

Mr. DOWNS. The Senator is mistaken, as he will see by reading the bill. I will state the reason why I proposed to strike out the number of the township. It was ascertained, on investigation at the Land Office, that the township was erroneously mentioned; there was a mistake as to the number. But the provision of the bill is, that he shall have the right to enter, by preemption, the lands on which he resides. That is a sufficient designation. Here are the provisions of the bill: they are, "that Thos. H. McManus be, and he hereby is, authorized, under such instructions as may be given by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to enter, by preemption, at one dollar and twenty-five cents an acre, at the land office at Greensburg, Louisiana, such quantity of the public lands, not exceeding eight hundred acres, in legal subdivisions, as may embrace his actual improvements, in the parish of East Feliciana, on the waters of Black creek." It was found that in consequence of the defectiveness of the surveys, the number of the townships stated in the bill was not the right number; and therefore, to prevent a conflict, I proposed to strike out the number of the township. But this is to embrace the settlements on which he resides, hence there can be no difficulty about it. There is among the papers in the case, a statement made by his neighbors to the effect that these lands on which he resides do not interfere with the claim of any other person, and that they see no reason why he should not be allowed to enter it by a preemption. The land being well known in that part of Louisiana, there can be no difficulty about the location of it.

Mr. FELCH. There is no difficulty at all arising in this case from the want of surveys, or the want of returns at the Land Office. There was a difficulty in the Greensburg district a few years ago. From some interested motives, the lands there were reported as not surveyed; and it was said that the returns were erroneous and fraudulent; and hence the lands were withheld from sale. But I understand now, on further investigation, that they are held for sale as other lands are. The returns have been made, so that there can be no difficulty in ascertaining the range or the township in this district of Greensburg more than elsewhere. If this amendment is made, it abandons altogether the location as originally described in the bill and the report of the committee of the Senate. The only description of the land is, that he shall be permitted to enter, so as to embrace his improvements.

Mr. DOWNS. The parish, and the navigable stream on which the land is situated, are named.

Mr. FELCH. I know it refers to the parish and the land district, but I speak of the specific description of the tract. Now, the fact is this: The petitioner alleges that he resides in township No. 1 of range No. 3; and he goes on in his petition, and gives a description of the premises, of what he claims under occupancy, and what he claims under two purchases, I think, at administrators' sales. His petition describes the land as being in township No. 1 of range No. 3. There is a statement from the Land Office on that subject. I wrote to the Commissioner about it, and ascertained from him that on examination of the papers in the case, it was found that there was a discrepancy. The petitioner says he lives in township No. 1 of range No. 3, and describes the land and his improvements, as within that township; whereas, the surveys show that they are within township No. 3. Therefore there must be some mistake about the matter. I am not able to say where the mistake is; but certain it is, that what is asked for in the petition, and what is granted by the bill, as it stands, is not in accordance with the proof adduced in the case. By the change in the bill, striking out the number of the township and of the range, it leaves the land to be taken within township No. 1, or township No. 3; and it strikes out, as I said before, all that there is in regard to the definite location of the land. If he takes land according to the proof, he takes land which, in his petition, he does not claim. Where the mistake is I cannot say; but if we grant the land for which he asks in his petition, then we grant land to which his proof does not apply.

Mr. DOWNS. There is no difficulty about it at all. I suppose I have exactly the same statement, as the gentleman has, from the Land Office; and it is for that very reason that I moved the amendment. It is very true, that this person, in his petition, did mention a township, which, according to the report of the Land Office, is not that which he intended to name. That is merely a mistake in the number: there is no mistake or difficulty about the actual location; it is perfectly well known; and if this bill fixed no location, there would be no difficulty. It requires that the land shall be laid out under the direction of the Surveyor General, so as to include this man's improvements. The only reason why I had the township stricken out was, because the individual has made a mistake in regard to the number. Therefore, in order to prevent any difficulty, I struck out the number of the township, and left the bill merely to embrace his improvements in whatever township they might be. There is a clause in the bill which shows that there can possibly be no difficulty about it.

The bill provides that this entry shall not interfere with the valid rights of others, and shall be made after the return to the Land Office of the approved plat and survey of the township. I have here a statement made by the neighbors of this individual, showing clearly the locality. The Surveyor General will have no difficulty in directing how the survey shall be made. I have here a statement, signed by Judge Scott and other citizens of the parish of East Feliciana, Louisiana, who say that they have examined the memorial of Thomas H. McManus, that they are his neighbors, are well acquainted with the situation of the lands on which he lives, and know that there is no conflicting claim; they give a description of the lands and say that no injury could result to the Government from complying with Mr. McManus's request. This shows that there will be no difficulty about the location; that will be settled by the Surveyor General without any trouble.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment made in Committee of the Whole was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. RUSK, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business, and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 5, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. McLANAHAN. I rise to a privileged question. On the 11th day of December last the memorial of Mrs. Mary Reeside was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That was a clerical error. The Journal stands, with that clerical error upon its face. I ask that the committee be allowed to report the same back, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, which is the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

On motion by Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of the heirs of Lemuel B. Montgomery, for the purpose of having them referred to a committee in the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is upon the engrossment of the private bills upon the Speaker's table reported from the Committee of the Whole, with the recommendation that they do pass.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will it be in order for me to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I feel bound to make that motion; and, in doing so, I desire to state to the House that there are two or three special orders before us which are consuming the time of the House, so that it seems to be impossible for me to get up the deficiency appropriation bill, although the public service is actually suffering for the want of legislation upon it. I therefore appeal to members to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, that the special order may be disposed of to-day.

A MEMBER. "Oh no! That cannot be done to-day."

Mr. DANIEL. As the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has thought proper, upon this day, to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I shall move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of taking up for consideration the Private Calendar. I raise the question, and hope it will be settled as to which of these motions has precedence. The private business is suffering as much as that to which the gentleman has referred. We have been guilty of such remissness in the prosecution of the private business, that it is enough to excite the clamor and censure of the people throughout the country. We have meritorious claims submitted here—this being the only body that can afford relief—and every consideration of justice and good policy require us to extend attention to that description of business. I wish the Chair to decide which of the motions submitted has the preference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the special order has the preference over private bills, and that a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order, takes precedence of the one to go into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DANIEL. Now, sir—

The SPEAKER. The Chair must say to the gentleman that questions in regard to the priority of business are not debatable. The rule says that questions of that character must be decided without debate.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope I shall have the indulgence of the House to state the view that I entertain.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be happy to hear the gentleman's views.

Mr. DANIEL. The enforcement of the rules is what I desire, and am seeking to obtain. I think, Mr. Speaker, until recently there was no sort of question about—

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman is making an argument in favor of the point of order, I object. I desire to get into committee to dispose of the public business. If I cannot get the House to proceed to the business I am anxious to have them, I am willing that the business suggested by the gentleman shall be disposed of. I do not wish the time of the House consumed by debates upon irrelevant points.

Mr. DANIEL. Have I not a right to discuss a question of appeal in regard to the order of business?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The questions upon priority of business cannot be debated. The Chair is very well satisfied about that.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not desire to transgress any rule. I am for the enforcement of the rules. I think that is the best way to have business properly conducted.

Mr. HOUSTON. If it were not for the fact that the public business is suffering for the want of legislation upon this deficiency bill, and that one branch of the public service is absolutely and actually without means to carry on its operations, I would be willing to hear the gentleman. My object is to effect that legislation as soon as may be.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the second rule, by which it will be seen that debate on this point is allowable.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to read the 113th rule:

"All questions relating to priority of business shall be decided without debate."

Does the gentleman appeal?

Mr. DANIEL. I do; and I wish the 29th rule to be read to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the special order made by the House is to give it the preference over all other business upon the Calendar for the consideration of the House. The gentleman from North Carolina is of the opinion that no special order can be made to interfere with the private business of Fridays and Saturdays. The Chair decides that a special order sets aside the business appropriated to Fridays and Saturdays as well as that to Monday and Tuesday, or any other day. The Chair is clear in his opinion, but it may be an erroneous one. The gentleman appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. DANIEL. I call for the reading of the 29th rule, and the note explanatory, and also the 26th rule. The view I entertain is sustained by the decisions of points of order in the Journal.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia. Does the Chair decide, that if we go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the special order will have preference, and that if the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole the private business will be first in order?

The SPEAKER. The question of order involved in this matter is simply this: It is competent at all times for the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union by a majority vote. This is only a question, whether the proposition to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall take precedence in point of time. It is in the power of the House to decide against the one, and in favor of the other. The decision of the Chair is simply to the effect that the proposition to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order has precedence, in his opinion, and must be first put. That is all.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I understand the 29th rule of the House as setting apart Fridays and Saturdays for the consideration of private bills.

The SPEAKER. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DANIEL] will be indulged in having that rule read.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was merely going to remark—and I imagine every member upon the floor understands the 29th rule—that the order setting apart Friday and Saturday of each week for private bills merely makes it one of the standing rules, and the House, making a special order, of course sets that aside—suspends it.

The SPEAKER. You will find, the Chair will remark to the gentleman from North Carolina, that our rules set apart Mondays for petitions, Fridays and Saturdays for private bills, and a special order sets aside these, as well as all other rules making preference to particular business.

Mr. DANIEL. I call for the reading of the 29th rule and note.

There being no objection, the rule and its explanatory note was read by the Clerk, as follows:

29. "Friday and Saturday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private bills and private business, in preference to any other, unless otherwise determined by a majority of the House."

"Note.—Under the rule of 26th April, 1828, relative to a postponement or change of the order of business, it has been decided that it takes two thirds to proceed to public business on Friday and Saturday. The reason of this decision is, that the rule of the 26th April, 1828, made no exception in favor of the clause, for a majority, contained in this rule, and that therefore that provision was annulled. There have been three appeals upon this point, but the House in all instances affirmed the decision in favor of two thirds."

The SPEAKER. Two thirds have already decided to set that aside, and upon each and every day of the week the special order has the preference over other business.

Mr. HOUSTON. For the information of the House I will inquire of the Chair, if the special order does not expressly read "that it shall be the special order for that day, and from day to day until disposed of?"

The SPEAKER. It is so, and from that decision the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DANIEL] takes an appeal.

Mr. DANIEL demanded tellers; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?" and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois. I desire to know of the Chair whether there are not private bills upon the Speaker's table which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. There are; and the Chair stated this morning that the first business was upon their engrossment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was going to suggest that before we go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, this private business be disposed of.

Mr. DANIEL. Vote down the motion made by the gentleman from Alabama, and those bills will come up in order.

The question now being on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union,

Mr. HOUSTON demanded tellers; which were ordered.

Mr. DANIEL demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. SACKETT. It is in order, if the House refuse to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to move to postpone that special order to a day certain, with a view of going into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair is inclined to think that we would not have control over it in that form. We must first relieve—

Mr. ORR. If the House refuse to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, we can go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Most certainly.

Mr. DANIEL withdrew his call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOUSTON. I renew the call, as I feel it to be my duty to do so.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. HOUSTON were appointed tellers.

The question was then taken upon the motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was decided in the affirmative, the tellers having reported—ayes 78, noes 62.

HOMESTEADS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 7, for the encouragement of agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and other branches of industry, by granting to every man, &c., one hundred and sixty acres of land; and upon which question the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, resumed the remarks which he began yesterday. He thought that while gentlemen were arranging presidential candidates, they had better look to the source from which they would obtain votes. Notwithstanding the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRACKINRIDGE] yesterday in reference to General Butler, the House was left in utter darkness as to his position in relation to the great question of the disposition of the public lands. The gentleman also passed a high eulogium upon General Cass, but he [Mr. C.] would appeal to any of the friends of that distinguished man whether, during the whole course of the political contest for the Presidency in 1848, General Cass ever gave the country to understand what were his principles and feelings on the great question of internal improvements? When upon the lake shore of the Ohio he was appealed to, and his attention called to the disasters to commerce and the immense loss of life and property which occurred upon the Western waters, the only answer he gave was "that the noise and confusion was so great that he could not be heard." And yet the gentleman from Kentucky announced yesterday that General Cass went before the people, making known his principles everywhere. Again, when the Northwest, driven almost to desperation by the refusal of the General Government to attend to the improvement of these great thoroughfares, held a convention at Chicago—not a convention of any party, but a convention of all classes of people—when the distinguished Senator from Michigan was invited, circumstances prevented his attending. He [Mr. CAMPBELL] was never able to ascertain the opinions of General CASS or General BUTLER upon this question.

He remarked yesterday that the question of the disposition of the public domain devolved upon this Congress, for it was well understood that the General Government would no longer regard it as a source of revenue; and he therefore had a right to demand of candidates what course they would pursue, if power should be given them, upon this question. He would tell gentlemen who were building up platforms on the subject of slavery, that there were people in the Northwest, of all political parties, who intended that the candidates should make themselves perfectly understood on this subject.

He was in favor of the principle embodied in the bill which had been reported by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] and it was one which addressed itself at once to the best feelings of our nature. It provided simply that there should be grants of public land made to all the States of the Union, for the purpose of enabling them to found and sustain hospitals for the support of the indigent insane. A great deal had been said in relation to the bill under consideration, by which they were to vote a farm to those who were not able to buy. He was in favor of this to some extent; but he held it first to be their duty to provide homes for that class of persons who had been unfortunately deprived of their reason.

He was also in favor of giving to the States a reasonable quantity of the public land, so as to enable them to found institutions of learning; because, if they were to place any faith in the reasoning of that document which lately had been regarded as one of consequence—he meant the Farewell Address of the Father of his Country—they were to look to institutions for the dissemination of learning as the surest basis upon which our republican structure stands.

He was in favor, to a certain extent, of the principles of the bill now before the committee, because he believed that by providing the means by which honest poverty might be able to sustain itself, they would add to human affections and promote our national wealth. The remainder of the public lands he would give to works of internal improvement. He then proceeded to discuss the constitutional power of Congress to donate the public land for such purposes, in the course of his remarks referring to the inconsistency of the Democratic party on the question of internal improvements.

[See Appendix for Mr. CAMPBELL's speech.]

Mr. CHASTAIN said that he found a disposition manifested on the part of the House to squander the public lands, and it seemed useless to attempt to resist it. He would only say that he would vote against the proposition under consideration, and likewise vote against all propositions disposing of the public lands for railroad or internal improvement purposes.

He then referred to the latitude given to debate in Committee of the Whole, and said that he intended to avail himself of the privilege, which he believed was recognised by the rules, of discussing questions other than those pending before the committee. He did not propose to vindicate or make an attack upon any of the aspirants for the Presidency of either party, but simply desired to vindicate his own position and the party with which he was now acting—the Union party of Georgia.

The position of the Union party of his State had been greatly misunderstood by some, and greatly misrepresented by others; and he now proposed to consider the causes which led to its organization, the principles upon which it stood; its past action, its present policy, and its probable destiny. His object was to put the Union Democracy right before the country, and to defend them from the unjust and unfounded charges which had been so freely made against them.

The compromise measures of the last Congress were passed by the votes of a majority of the Democratic party; those measures had gone before the country for approval and confirmation, and the Democratic party, by an overwhelming majority, had approved and sanctioned them. Without intending to disparage the claims of the Whigs who aided in the adoption of these measures, he felt authorized to repeat that the compromise was a Democratic measure, based upon Democratic principles, and passed by Democratic votes; and if it entitled its supporters to any praise or honor, the Democratic party should participate in the greater portion of it. If, on the other hand, the measure was one of fraud or injury to any portion of the Union, the responsibility should fall upon the Democracy. If he should be asked for the proof of the correctness of his assertion that the compromise was a Democratic measure, he would point to the records of the last Congress, which must forever stand as an unimpeachable witness of the truth of what he asserted. The compromise was a consummation of those principles which our republican fathers and the Democratic party had always maintained.

When the compromise had become the law of the land, the question of acquiescence was submitted to the people, and it became with the people of Georgia a paramount question, and all other political questions were absorbed in the consideration of that alone. During the pendency of this subject before Congress, there had risen up a spirit of deep and bitter opposition to the principles upon which it was expected the question would be settled, and upon which it was ultimately settled; and threats of resistance to the Government and a dissolution of the Union became as common as household words with those whose morbid spirits brooded over the destruction of the Government with almost total indifference.

Before the final action of Congress on the subject of the compromise, the Southern-Rights party was formed, whose principles were set forth at the Nashville Convention. Opposition to the compromise was the groundwork of its action, and all its efforts were directed to the point of making that opposition effectual. It was declared in one of their resolutions that all the evils anticipated by the South had been realized by the passage of the compromise measures. They proposed to remedy this evil, as set forth in a resolution of the convention, by recommending to all parties in the slaveholding States to refuse to go into all conventions whose object might be to nominate candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency of the United States, under any party denomination whatever, until their constitutional rights should be secured. This was after the passage of the compromise measures, and the Southern-Rights party declared that they would not go into any convention until their constitutional rights, which they asserted had been lost by the adoption of the compromise, should be restored. Their second remedy was a call for a Southern Congress, whose duty it was to have been to arrest future aggression and to restore those constitutional rights which they said they lost by the passage of the compromise; and, if they could not do this, to provide for their future safety and independence.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, said that the gentleman from Georgia seemed disposed to hold the State-Rights party of the South responsible for the Nashville Convention, and for all that was said there. He desired to ask the gentleman if it was not his recollection that the convention was gotten up by Whigs and Democrats and by gentlemen who were now State-Rights men? Had it escaped the gentleman's recollection that Judge William L. Sharkey, a prominent leading member of the Union party, was the first President of the National Convention? If any harm had been the result of that convention, he hoped it would be divided between its political favorers.

Mr. CHASTAIN replied that the convention was gotten up as the gentleman had said; but he would remark that so soon as the convention promulgated its doctrines, and showed that they were determined to go against the Union, then the Union Democratic party left.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, desired to know whether it was not within the recollection of the gentleman that the Nashville convention was denounced before its first meeting, before its first organization, in the same spirit in which it has since been denounced, by the National Intelligencer, published in this city—denounced as a treasonable organization, and so denounced by members of Congress and throughout the country? All the members of the Union party now joined in this denunciation, which was commenced by the Intelligencer and other papers.

Mr. CHASTAIN said that he did not see as clear as the editors of the Intelligencer, who might have seen the evil brewing even in anticipation of the assembling of the convention, but he did not see it until the convention showed its hand.

Mr. BROWN said that he was not a member of the Nashville Convention, and had nothing to do with getting it up, and had no responsibility on account of its action. Now, he would ask the gentlemen if he could say as much? Did he not, as a member of the Legislature of Georgia, have something to do with getting up the convention?

Mr. CHASTAIN replied that he was not a member of the Georgia Legislature. He was, however, a member of the Georgia Convention which repudiated the doctrines promulgated by the Nashville Convention, and he gloried in it.

Mr. BROWN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he did not vote to send delegates to the Nashville Convention?

Mr. CHASTAIN. I did not vote to send delegates to that convention.

Mr. C. then referred to the nomination of Mr. McDonald, who was President of the Nashville Convention, as Governor of Georgia by the Southern-Rights party. He said that this was the party which professed and claimed to be the Democratic party of Georgia, and he and all other Union Democrats in his State who refused to unite in this organization had been held to be deserters from the Democratic faith, and responsible for the disorganization of the Democratic party of the State. Now, he would ask national Democrats, both of the North and South, who gave their votes and voices to the salvation of the country in that dark and momentous hour of our history; those who stood shoulder to shoulder with the Union Democrats of Georgia; who voted for the compromise, and in so doing said to the country "Peace, be still"—he would ask them whether they were right or wrong in resisting this disorganizing movement, which was sowing broadcast in our land the seed of discontent, and ultimately disunion? Were they deserters in giving support to those measures which received the votes of a majority of the party, and which had since been sanctioned by more than two thirds of the Democracy? Were they deserters in refusing assent to the principles of the Nashville Convention, and in refusing to unite in its recommendation not to go into any National Convention under any party name whatever, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the next Presidency? But this self-styled Democratic party, which censured the Union Democrats for saying that they would go into Convention, now asserted that they were the true Democracy, and that nobody else but they had the right to assemble in National Convention.

Mr. C. then referred to the platform of the Georgia Union party, which he said had determined, by a large majority, to acquiesce in the compromise measures. Although they did not concur in the whole of them, yet they had determined to abide by them as the settlement of the slavery question. This they proposed to do in good faith, and it was what they expected and required from other parts of the country. The finality and faithful performance of the compromise in all its parts was the Georgia platform. They intended to hold these principles to the end, and invited all to their cooperation who desired to unite to put down further agitation, and who desired to secure constitutional rights to their section of the country. He had no hesitation in making the declaration that there was no measure which the Georgia Union Democratic party supported, nor any principle which they advocated, which was not in strict accordance with the well-settled doctrines of National Democracy.

[See Appendix for Mr. CHASTAIN'S speech.]

Mr. OLDS said that the Democratic party throughout the United States looked with no ordinary anxiety to the result which shall be announced through the ballot-box at the next presidential election. He wished to send forth this warning voice to the Democracy of the country and call their attention to the exhibitions which had taken place here, which proclaimed to the people of the country that the Democratic party—that party to which they were looking for success and a maintenance of the present form of Government—was in danger of being divided. Such had been the result that the organ of the Administration had grown very bold, and proclaimed to the world that the Administration feared not the Democracy of the country; for that party was so divided that they could not pass a single resolution condemning a single measure of the Administration. The organ had grown bold in what it had seen to be the divided counsels of the Democratic party. If they were to understand the organ of the Administration, notwithstanding it had run riot with the public money, yet they were casting into their teeth the assertion that the Democratic party was divided, and could not pass a resolution condemning one single act of the Administration. The responsibility rested upon the Democratic party; for whenever a resolution was introduced condemning a single measure of the Administration, some prominent member of the Democratic party had been found to defend the Administration.

He did not propose to express a preference for this candidate or that candidate for the Presidency. It was sufficient for him to say that, amongst all the prominent gentlemen whose names had been mentioned in connection with the office of President, there was not one whom he would not infinitely prefer to the best Whig in the country. He did not wish to see prominent men of his party placed in such a position that when a nomination should be made, it could be said that this prominent Democrat had said this or that of their candidate. He did not wish to be compelled to defend the candidate of the convention to assemble in June from any assertions made by members of the Democratic party. He heard with pleasure the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] in reference to General Butler; and if that gentleman should receive the nomination of the Democratic party, he should be most happy to defend him against the attacks of the Whig party. If Mr. DOUGLASS should receive the nomination, he should be just as happy to battle in his behalf; or if General Cass should be nominated, he should be as happy to do battle under his banner.

Voices. What about Mr. Buchanan?

Mr. OLDS said, that if any distinguished gentleman who had been named in connection with the Presidency should receive the nomination of the Baltimore Convention, he would be most happy to do battle under his flag.

Mr. O. then replied to the remarks of Mr. C. in reference to the position of the Democratic party on the question of internal improvements, and denied that General Cass's opinions were unknown on that subject, referring his colleague to the votes of that gentleman on the subject. He called the attention of the committee to the fact, which stood out in bold relief, that notwithstanding all the clamors for reform, and that Administration had succeeded Administration, yet the expenses of the Government had increased enormously year after year; and so long as the National Treasury should be replenished from such sources as revenues from the public lands, just so long could the administration of the country run riot with the public money. He spoke of the reform advocated by the Whig party; and in contradistinction to this, referred to the Galphinisms, Chickasawisms, Gardinerisms, &c., connected with the present Administration. He then advocated the bill before the committee, and was in favor of giving the land to actual settlers, in limited quantities.

Mr. OLDS' speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts, obtained the floor.

M. BROWN, of Mississippi. I ask the gentleman to allow me to offer an amendment to the bill. I wish to offer it at this stage of the proceedings, that it may be discussed along with the general proposition.

Mr. DAVIS yielded for that purpose.

Mr. BROWN submitted the following amendment:

A bill to perpetuate preemption to actual settlers on the public lands.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the laws now in force, granting preemption to actual settlers on the public lands, shall continue until otherwise ordered by Congress, and that the same be extended to all the Territories of the United States.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, the rights of preceptors shall be perpetuated: that is to say, persons acquiring the right of preemption shall retain the same without disturbance, and without payment of any kind to the United States, but on these conditions: First. The preceptor shall not sell, alienate, or dispose of his or her right for a consideration; and if he or she voluntarily abandons one preemption and claims another, no right shall be acquired by such claim until the claimant shall first have testified, under oath, before the register of the land office when the claim is preferred, that he or she has voluntarily abandoned his or her original preemption, and that no consideration, reward, or payment of any kind has been received, or is expected, directly or indirectly, as an inducement for such abandonment; and any person who shall testify falsely in such case shall be deemed guilty of perjury. Second. Any person claiming and holding the right of preemption to lands under this act, may be required by the State within which the same lies to pay taxes thereon, in the same manner and to the same extent as if he or she owned the said land in fee simple; and in case such lands are sold for taxes, the purchaser shall acquire the right of preemption only. Third. Absence of the preceptor and his family for six consecutive months shall be deemed an abandonment, and the land shall, in such case, revert to the United States, and be subject to the same disposition as other public lands.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That lands preempted, and the improvements thereon, shall not be subject to execution sale or other sale for debt; and all contracts made in reference thereto, intended in anywise to alienate the right, or to embarrass or disturb the preceptor in his or her occupancy, shall be absolutely null and void.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the preceptor may at any time, at his or her discretion, enter the lands preempted by paying therefor to the proper officer of the United States $1 25 per acre.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That in case of the preceptor's death, if a married man, his right shall survive to his widow and infant children, but the rights of the older children shall cease as they respectively come of age, or when they shall reach the age of twenty-one years. In all cases the right of preemption shall remain in the youngest child. And in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children, the executor, administrator, or guardian, may, upon submitting satisfactory proof of that fact to the register and receiver of the proper land office, demand a certificate of title to the lands so preempted for the benefit of said infant child or children, and may thereafter sell said lands, or otherwise dispose of them for the benefit of the infant child or children aforesaid.

Mr. FOWLER. With the permission of my colleague, I move that the committee rise.

ASSIGNABILITY OF LAND WARRANTS.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of Mr. DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that that body had insisted upon their disagreement to the amendments of the House to the bill providing for the assignability of bounty land warrants, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House; and that they had appointed Messrs. FELCH, SHIELDS, and SMITH, as managers on their part.]

Mr. HOUSTON demanded tellers upon the motion that the committee rise; which were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER and FREEMAN were appointed.

The question was then taken, and there being—ayes 87, a further count was not insisted upon.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee rose accordingly, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 7, to encourage agriculture, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. HOUSTON. If it be in order for me to make a motion now, I will ask the House to clear the Speaker's table of the bills and communications which are there.

Mr. MASON moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask the gentleman to give way that me may dispose of a few bills.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia, moved that when the House adjourned, it adjourns to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, demanded the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON withdrew his motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is the motion to adjourn until to-morrow or Monday?

The SPEAKER. It is a motion to adjourn until to-morrow.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the House adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. GREEN: The petition of citizens of Wyandott county, Ohio, praying Congress to so amend the bounty land law as to make equal provision for the widows of deceased military officers and soldiers, whether married or unmarried.

Also, the remonstrance of 56 citizens of Crawford county, Ohio, against the extension of the patent of Woodworth's planing machine.

By Mr. GOODENOW: The remonstrance of Benjamin Allen and 49 others, citizens of Franklin county, Maine, against the renewal of the patent granted to Austin and Zebulon Parker for alleged improvements in reaction water-wheels.

By Mr. MILLER: The petition of the heirs of James Russell, of Cape Girardeau county, Missouri, praying Congress to confirm a title to a tract of land in said county.

Also, the petition of John Byrd, praying Congress to confirm a title to land in the same county.

By Mr. CONGER: The petition of John Burt and others, for the establishment of mail routes—

1st. From Sault Ste. Marie, by way of Grand Island, to Marquette, in the county of Marquette, Michigan.

2d. From Navarino, or Green Bay, Wisconsin, by way of Little Bay de Noquet, to Marquette.

3d. From Marquette, by way of Le Amuse, Houghton county, to Eagle River.

4th. From Le Amuse to Ontonagon, Ontonagon county, Michigan, and thence to La Point and Fond Du Lac, in Minnesota Territory.

By Mr. APPLETON, of Massachusetts: The petition of Thomas B. Curtis and others, citizens of Massachusetts, praying that further aid be granted by Congress for the support of the Collins' line of steamers.

By Mr. CURTIS: The petition of citizens of Clarion county, Pennsylvania, praying for a modification of the tariff of 1846.

Also, one of like import from the county of Lawrence, Pennsylvania.

Also, a petition from citizens of Crawford and Warren counties, Pennsylvania, for the establishment of a mail route from Titusville, via Enterprise and Youngsville, to Sugar Grove, Warren county.

By Mr. BABCOCK: The remonstrance of citizens of Oswego county, New York, against the removal of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania: Three memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, in favor of an extension of the Woodworth patent.

Also, memorials of citizens of Delaware county, and of Germantown, Pennsylvania, asking for an amendment of the bounty land act of 1850.

By Mr. FLOYD: The petition of residents of Port Jefferson, that Port Jefferson be made a port of delivery.

By Mr. DURKEE: The remonstrance of H. F. Cox and 257 others, of the county of Racine, Wisconsin, against the renewal of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. JONES, of New York: The petition of Sarah Smith, widow of Cornelius Smith, late a sergeant in the United States Army, for relief.

By Mr. JONES, of Pennsylvania: Resolutions of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, relative to the bridge over the Ohio river, opposite Wheeling.

Also, the petition of John G. Fox, asking compensation for naval services in the year 1846.

By Mr. MACE: The memorial of Vincent Virgin, of Warren county, Indiana, asking additional pay for taking the census.

By Mr. PICKLIN: The memorial of a convention composed of delegates from the counties of Clark, Coles, Moultrie, and Macon, in the State of Illinois, assembled at Charleston on the 23d of February, 1852, for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Terre Haute to the Mississippi river, with a branch from Marshall, through Charleston and Sullivan, to Decatur, in Macon county, thereby supplying the necessary links in the Mississippi and Atlantic railroad, and in the railroad connection between Terre Haute, in the State of Indiana, and St. Joseph, in the State of Missouri, and contemplating a continuation of railroad connection to the Pacific, which said memorial prays a grant of the right of way and alternate sections of land to aid in the construction of railroads.

By Mr. HENN: The proceedings of a meeting held at Cedar Falls, Black Hawk county, Iowa, recommending a land office at that place.

By Mr. HARPER: The memorial of J. V. Cushing and 103 others, citizens of the county of Muskingum, Ohio, and the memorial of John Hawes and 123 others, citizens of the same county, praying for the establishment of the bridges of the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company as post roads, and that said bridges remain at their present height, &c.

By Mr. ROBBINS: A petition signed by George Landell, Joseph M. Ritterson, S. Duffield, C. Fortner, and 79 others, citizens of the county of Philadelphia, against the renewal or extension of the Woodworth patent for planing boards, &c. They state that the patentee has enjoyed the benefit from 1828, which will continue, by act of Congress, until the year 1856, and that a further extension would be injurious to the public interests.

Also, the petition of Thomas Wilson and 56 others, citizens of the county of Philadelphia, asking for an extension of the Woodworth patent for a planing machine.

Also, on the same subject, the petition of Alfred S. Price and 91 others, citizens of the county of Philadelphia.

Also, on the same subject, the petition of Samuel Wilson, and 44 others, citizens of Philadelphia county.

Also, on the same subject, the petition of F. Engleman and 63 others, citizens of Philadelphia county.

Also, the petition of John Statton, Reuben Sands, and 33 others, citizens of the county of Philadelphia, asking Congress to so modify the bounty land act of September 28, 1850, as to give those intended to be benefited by said act, and seamen and marines who served in said wars, not less than 160 acres of land.

By Mr. TAYLOR: The petition of John Windall, and 35 others, citizens of Pike county, Ohio, praying Congress to establish a mail route from Bainbridge, in Ross county, Ohio, to Waverly, in Pike county, Ohio.

By Mr. FLORENCE: Letters from Montgomery & Neall, Edward W. Cavanaugh, Joseph S. Snowden, Joseph T. Bailey, Charles Crauer, and A. L. Raymond, citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the extension of the Woodworth patent for planing boards, &c.

Also, the memorial of John C. Hancock, George Ireland, William G. Ireland, and others, citizens of the county of Philadelphia, praying for the extension of the Woodworth patent for planing boards, &c.

Also, the memorial of Thomas B. Henderson, Jacob M. Whartanby, George T. Sorber, and others, residents of Germantown, in the county of Philadelphia, praying that 160 acres of land may be granted to the soldiers of the war of 1812, &c.

By Mr. GOODENOW: The petition of Joseph H. Clapp and others, assistant marshals of Maine, asking additional compensation for taking the Seventh Census.

By Mr. BARRERE: The petition of numerous citizens of Highland county, Ohio, praying for the construction of a ship-canal around the Falls of the St. Mary's river, in the State of Michigan.

By Mr. RIDDLE: Joint resolutions of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Delaware, upon the following subjects:

1st. The breakwater and harbors in the Delaware bay and river.

2d. The fortification upon the Pea Patch Island or Fort Delaware.

3d. The custom house in the Delaware district.

Also, a memorial of the Board of Trade, of Wilmington, praying Congress to make an appropriation for a custom-house in the Delaware district.

By Mr. BABCOCK: The petition of 56 citizens of Oswego, for a Marine Hospital at Oswego, New York.

Also, the petition of 183 citizens of the port of Oswego, New York, for the same purpose.

By Mr. WASHBURN: The memorial of Elijah L. Hamlin and 289 others, citizens of Bangor, Maine, that the pension laws may be extended to the case of widows of revolutionary soldiers who were married subsequently to A. D. 1799.

By Mr. CONGER: The memorial of the Zitwaukie, Grand Travers, and Mackinaw Plank Road Company, in favor of granting the right of way and certain public lands in aid of the construction of said road.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 6, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. L. F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is upon ordering the engrossed bills on the Speaker's table to be read a third time.

Mr. WARD. I move that we take up the Senate bill No. 182, for extending the time for selling the lands granted to the Kentucky Asylum for teaching the Deaf and Dumb.

Mr. W. said: The time granted by the law, which passed some ten years ago, in which to dispose of these lands, will expire on the first of next month. The lands have been all disposed of except some refuse lands lying in the State of Florida. The trustees of the institution have made exertions to dispose of these lands, but have failed to do it. They desire an extension of five years, and I hope the House will pass the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I suggest that we shall this morning take up the business on the Speaker's table, and dispose of the private bills which are there.

Mr. WARD. The bill I wish to take up will not occupy more than five minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is very true; but if we take up the bills in their order, we will reach it in less time than that. These bills have all to be referred; and I ask, if there be no objection, that it should be done this morning.

Mr. WARD. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not object to the gentleman's motion.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BEALE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation, which shall not consume much of the time of the House.

There being no objection, Mr. B. said: The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] yesterday made an observation that none or but few Democrats had refused to vote for the appropriation of overflowed lands of the Mississippi, by the act passed the last session of Congress. I responded to him, that I did not so vote. He said that he had the Journal before him, and my name was recorded for the passage of that law. In examining the Journal, I find that to be the case. Now, I declare that the whole drift of my feelings, my inward sentiments, my open declarations, and my repeated conversations on this floor and elsewhere, were in hostility to that bill. I went home and denounced that bill as part and parcel of a system to vote away the public lands to the Western States, which belonged to all the people of the Confederacy. And I ask if I am to be supposed so inconsistent as this conduct would show me to be. There is an error in the Journal; and if a dozen men should get up now and declare that I voted for that bill at all, I say that the probability is that I misconceived the question and voted in mistake. I appeal to the gentleman who roomed with me the greater portion of two years during the last Congress, to say whether my sentiments were not such as I now declare them to be.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I respond with pleasure to the call made upon me by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BEALE.] The gentleman and myself roomed at the same house during the last Congress, for the greater portion of the whole session. I recollect to have had very frequent conversations with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BEALE] upon the subject of the disposition of the public domain. We differed in relation to some of the propositions which were pending before this House. I recollect that he expressed very frequently to me his fixed and settled hostility to this proposition to give to Arkansas and other States the overflowed lands. He was also hostile to the bounty land bill. I recollect, from frequent conversations, that this was his position during last Congress. I have no recollection, however, as to how he voted upon the bill in question.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I should dislike very much to put the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BEALE] or any other member of this House, whether a political friend or opponent, in a false position. I referred to the Journal, and stated in general terms what was the vote of the Democratic side of the House upon that question. That was all. I do not understand the honorable gentleman as intimating that I have been guilty of any improper act in this matter.

Mr. BEALE. By no means.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am very happy in affording him an opportunity of presenting himself, as far as he may now, in a proper position in relation to this matter. But the honorable gentleman will find by reference to the vote of many of his colleagues, who have assumed the same general position in relation—

Mr. HOUSTON. I call the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] to order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. With the permission of the House, I wish to say a single word in relation to the subject now before us. I will say by suggestion to the member from Virginia, [Mr. BEALE,] that in all probability if he would refer to the original Journal he might find his name there correctly recorded. Mistakes of this kind have occurred to me. While the bill was pending to establish the Department of the Interior, I was lying in my room sick, and remained there until it was discussed and passed. Upon examination of the Journal, I found that my name was recorded upon the passage of the bill, when I was at home sick. I merely throw this out by way of suggestion, to show that mistakes of this kind occur; and, perhaps, by reference to the original Journal, his vote may be found recorded right.

Mr. HOUSTON. I insist upon the regular order of business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion by Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers in the case of Jacob Banta, for the purpose of reference in the Senate.

On motion by Mr. THOMPSON, of Virginia, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Daisilla Bukey, and that leave be granted to withdraw the papers in said case for the purpose of reference to one of the Executive Departments.

RUFUS DWINEL.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering Senate bill No. 88, for the relief of Rufus Dwinel, to a third reading.

Mr. FICKLIN. I would like to know what the bill is about. It is to pay a considerable amount of money.

Mr. FOWLER. The bill has been considered in Committee of the Whole, where all the facts in regard to it were elicited; and it was reported with a recommendation to the House that it do pass.

Mr. FICKLIN. Will the honorable gentleman state what the character of the bill is?

Mr. FOWLER. It is a Senate bill, and the report can be read if necessary.

The bill was then read. It provides indemnity to Rufus Dwinel for the violation of his contract by the Post Office Department for carrying a daily mail.

Mr. AVERETT. I rise for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, [Mr. OLDS,] as to the character of the contract made by the Department with the parties here. I wish to know if there was not in the contract an express reservation of the right of the Department to lessen or increase the service, by paying to the contractor a pro rata allowance for any increase or diminution of the service. This is an important inquiry; for I find, in regard to the establishment of post offices and post routes and the change of transportation, that the contractors are coming in and presenting their petitions for extra compensation, upon the ground that their services are too onerous. I wish to know if there is not an express reservation to determine the right to vary the compensation according to the service rendered.

Mr. OLDS. I will reply to the inquiries of the honorable gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. AVERETT,] in all the present contracts made by the post office department for carrying the mails, such a reservation as that he has named is made; but this form of contract is of recent date. In all former contracts no such reservation was made, and in the contract upon which this bill is predicated, no such reservation was made. The whole argument of this case consists in this fact.

Mr. HOUSTON. Before the gentleman passes from the point of contract, I would like to propound a question to him also; whether at the date of the present contract the law did not itself constitute a part of the contract, and authorize the Postmaster General either to curtail the service or take it away entirely, and if that law did not give the contractor also, wherever service was stopped under the contract, a certain extra compensation of one or two months, according to the law? Although it may not be in the body of the contract, yet such was the law. I have no doubt about the fact; the law constitutes a part of the contract in this case. I desire further to know whether the contractor could not get the month's extra pay after the suspension of compensation for his services?

Mr. OLDS. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] I think, mistakes the nature of the contract upon which this bill is predicated. The law is, that where, in the opinion of the Department, it becomes necessary to suspend a contract of the character made, it provides for the allowance of one month's, or perhaps three months' extra pay. But this is not a suspension of a contract for carrying the mail. It was a contract to carry a daily mail, if I recollect right, from certain points. The Post Office Department became embarrassed under the administration of Mr. Barry. This contractor was a special friend of Mr. Barry. The Postmaster General sent his special agent, Mr. Brown, to this gentleman, and requested him to consent to an abatement of the service—that is, carrying the mail twice a week, instead of daily, promising him that if he kept his stock upon the road, as he actually did, or if he made sacrifices in disposing of his stock at a most unsaleable season, that so soon as the temporary embarrassment of the Post Office Department should be removed that he should be relieved and paid the full price of his contract, or full remuneration for all losses sustained in this abatement of service.

This gentleman received from the Department pro rata pay for the service performed under this pledge, given by the Department to pay in full, after the embarrassment of the Department had been removed. When, however, Mr. Kendall came into office, he held these contractors to the strict letter of the law. There was no evidence upon the books of the Post Office Department as a matter of course of this agreement made between O. B. Brown and this contractor for carrying the mail. Mr. Kendall refused to make any allowance, but held him to receiving his pro rata pay, which would bring this contractor some $900 in debt to the Department. This contractor asked that the suit should be commenced against him for the $900 in the United States court for the District of Columbia, and the Department was represented by the District Attorney. The evidence was adduced, and O. B. Brown was put upon the stand, and testified fully that he had been authorized by Mr. Barry to say to this contractor that he should, so soon as the temporary embarrassment of the Post Office Department was removed, receive his full compensation, in accordance with the terms of his contract. Upon the evidence adduced at the trial, and under the instruction of the court, a verdict was rendered; and upon that verdict this bill is predicated. It does not allow the interest allowed by the jury on the trial from 1837 to the time of rendering the judgment; but it is merely for the payment of the money which was found to be due upon the trial, and to which this contractor, under the express arrangement between him and Mr. Brown, was entitled.

Mr. FICKLIN. With the permission of the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I wish to propound this question: Whether this contractor receives, by the bill, the full amount that he would have received if he had carried the mail regularly all the time?

Mr. OLDS. He did not get paid in full; but this bill provides full payment, abating the interest.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the permission of the chairman on the Post Office and Roads, I understand from the report that the service was stopped entirely. That was the reason why I propounded the question I did. The report says that the service was suspended.

Mr. OLDS. You have mistaken the language of the report.

Mr. WASHBURN. I am acquainted with this case, and with the parties to it. There was, as I understand it—I may be mistaken, but I think not—a suspension of the service; but inasmuch as that could not be done by the contractor without total ruin to himself, he kept the route going, and I believe, in reality, carried the mail for the whole time, although not under a contract with the Government. He did this upon assurances made to him by Mr. Brown, that when the Department should be dis embarrassed, they would pay him. The Department was very much embarrassed at the time, and found it necessary to make the change.

I will state further, that in order to enable Colonel Thomas to go on with the contract, he borrowed money of this petitioner, Dwinel, and other gentlemen in that section, and he was in fact nearly ruined by reason of the non-fulfillment of its contract by the Government. Mr. Dwinel receives, by this bill, no interest upon the money which he has advanced for this object; and in consequence of the non-fulfillment of its contract by the Government, the original contractor has been embarrassed and nearly ruined. It is a very just case, and I think there can be no doubt about its merits.

The bill was then read a third time and passed. Mr. FOWLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

The following House bills, reported from a Committee of the Whole House, without amendment, were then taken up, and ordered to be engrossed; and being engrossed, were read a third time and passed, viz:

No. 139. A bill to authorize the issuing of a register to the brig America;

No. 140. A bill for the relief of William S. Payne;

No. 142. A bill to authorize the registry of the brig Kossuth; and

No. 148. A bill for the relief of Andrew Smith.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following messages heretofore received from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 17th ultimo, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of the Navy, and a report from the Solicitor of the Treasury Department, in relation to the accounts of Prosper M. Wetmore, late navy agent in the city of New York.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, March 4th, 1852.

On motion by Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, it was Ordered, That the said message and accompanying documents be laid on the table, and be printed.

To the Senate and

House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with the provisions of the act of Congress of the 11th of August, 1848, I transmit to that body the copy of a dispatch from the Commissioner ad interim of the United States at Canton, together with the copy of certain rules and regulations for masters, officers, and seamen of vessels of the United States of America, at the free ports of China, which accompanied said dispatch, and which are submitted for the revision of Congress.

MILLARD FILLMORE.

WASHINGTON, March 4th, 1852.

On motion by Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, it was Ordered, That the said message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and be printed.

Also a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury asking an appropriation to pay the salary of D. V. Whitney, Esquire while acting as Secretary of the Treasury of the Territory of New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the Engineer Department enclosing a conditional cadet appointment for Halder B. Lyon; which was referred to the proper committee.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a memorial, and the proceedings of a meeting of the citizens of Detroit in relation to the Irish patriots, O'Brien, Mitchell, and others.

Mr. STUART. I move that that communication be laid upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, without printing.

The question was first taken upon the motion to lay upon the table and print, and it was not agreed to.

The communication was then referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Senate bill No. 27, being an act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize notaries public to take and certify oaths, affirmations, and acknowledgments in certain cases," was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Senate bill No. 63, being an act to grant to the city of Burlington, Iowa, the land heretofore reserved between that city and the Mississippi river, was next taken up and read a first and second time.

Mr. CLARK. I ask that the bill may now be put upon its passage. It concerns only the people of the town of Burlington. Beyond the original line of the town, between the town and the Mississippi, there is a strip of land reserved which has become greater by accretions. The people of that city now ask that they may have leave to sell the land. That is the sum and substance of the bill, and I presume no gentleman upon this floor will object to it.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman from Iowa tell us how much land it is proposed to grant?

Mr. CLARK. The quantity is very small indeed.

Mr. FOWLER. A thousand acres?

Mr. CLARK. Not half of that I presume. It is a mere local question in which no one has any interest except the people of that city.

Mr. KING, of New York. I think bills of this character ought first to go to committees. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The question was then taken, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

DEAF AND DUMB ASYLUM IN KENTUCKY.

Senate bill No. 182, being an act to extend the time for selling the lands granted to the Kentucky Asylum for teaching the Deaf and Dumb, was taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WARD. I desire to have that bill acted upon immediately. The limitations upon that grant, provide that it shall revert back to the General Government, unless disposed of sometime during the present month. I hope the bill will be acted upon and passed immediately. The trustees of that institution have attempted to sell the land, but have failed to do it.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I will state that the grant of land, the time for the sale of which this bill proposes to extend, was made to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, in the State of Kentucky, in the year 1826. They have had from that time to this to sell the land, but they have not done it; and they hold them to the detriment of the people of my own State. The people of Florida are very anxious that they should sell them. The Government have extended the time for selling the lands, for five years and ten years at a time, down to the present time. As a Representative from the State of Florida, I protest against the passage of this bill. At all events, I hope it will be referred to the appropriate committee, and be properly considered, before the House take any final action upon it. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WARD. I hope and trust that the proposed reference will not be acceded to. I acknowledge that the grant was made in 1826. But the failure in its sale was not the fault of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum. The grant was made in 1826; but in the mean time, Florida was in a condition that no one was willing to buy lands in that State; But those lands have now become somewhat valuable. Now, I hope and trust that for an object of charity so universally acknowledged as that, no member of this House will refuse to vote for the passage—and the immediate passage—of this bill.

Mr. CABELL. These lands have been held by the trustees of that institution, and the reason why they have not been sold is, that they have been held at an exorbitant price. They have held them at an enormous price, while the people of Florida have sold their own lands and the lands of the Government have been sold at half the price, or at least, for very much less.

But it is not stated what is the quantity of lands proposed to be granted by the bill; yet, the House is asked to make this further extension, although it has already extended for nearly thirty years. This we are asked to do without any information as to the quantity of lands involved in the proposed extension, or as to the time which it has been already extended. I protest against the passage of this bill at this time, and most earnestly hope it may be referred to the appropriate committee, who will investigate it, and inquire into its expediency. Then, if they find, after a full investigation into the interests of all parties concerned, it expedient to pass this bill, I shall make no further opposition to it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I am somewhat surprised at the course the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] has seen fit to pursue in relation to this subject. He says this bill does not state the number of acres contained in the original grant. Why, sir, when that grant was made, it specified the number of acres; and it seems to me it cannot be a matter of much importance whether the number be stated now or not.

The very best reason why the grant should be further extended, is that given by the gentleman from Florida, to wit: that the holders of the land want to sell it out at a higher price than the people of Florida are willing to pay. Why, the people of Florida come here with a great deal of disinterestedness, as it seems to me, through their Representative, and undertake to force a grant to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum in Kentucky into market in order that they may be able to get it at a lower price. According to the statement of the gentleman from Florida, the trustees of this Asylum are true to their interests, to hold these lands at such a price as not to compete with the lands in the possession of Florida around them. I can conceive no reason why this bill should be referred, or why it should not pass immediately.

Mr. CABELL. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me, I have only stated this: we do not ask these people to hold their lands upon the same terms with the people of Florida; we only ask that they should sell them for what they are worth. We do not ask them to sell them for less than their value, but only to sell them at a fair price.

Mr. MARSHALL. I ask if it is the custom in Florida to compel people to sell their lands at whatever price the purchaser may choose to give for them?

Mr. CABELL. This was a mere gratuity upon the part of the Government; and it has been against the policy of this Government, as has been proclaimed in speeches upon this floor, from time to time, to aid corporations who hold large bodies of land in such a manner as to prevent settlement. It is against that which I protest. It is against this corporation in the State of Kentucky holding, I think, some 40,000 acres of land, granted to them in the State of Florida. They will not sell the lands, they say, because they cannot get the price they want for them, and yet they will not hold them at a reasonable price, or at the price at which other people are selling their lands. They are asking us to keep settlers from settling upon these lands. It is that to which I object.

Mr. MARSHALL. If these people asked more for their lands than they were worth, or more than they considered them worth, they would be the most curious proprietors ever seen in this country.

Mr. BISSELL. If I am rightly informed, this grant was made in 1826.

Mr. CABELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BISSELL. Well, I think in justice to Florida, this company ought to have disposed of its lands before this time. They might have been settled in the thirty-odd years which have elapsed since that time. I do not know at what price they are held now, or at what price they have been held, but I am very sure the State of Kentucky might have sold them, and realized something from them.

Mr. MARSHALL. The State of Kentucky has nothing to do with them. They were granted to the deaf and dumb in that State; and gentlemen certainly do not desire to make that asylum part with their lands, without proper consideration, for the benefit of the people of Florida.

Mr. BISSELL. The deaf and dumb asylum have had already twenty-six years; and if this bill shall pass giving this extension for five years, application will be made to extend the time five years longer, and so on from time to time.

Mr. CABELL. Let the bill be referred, and then we can get at the proper state of facts.

Mr. WARD. The deaf and dumb of Kentucky have not lost those lands at all. By the act of Congress, the time for disposing of these lands has been extended to the first of next month. The title of the lands is vested in trustees; and I hold it a strange and unheard-of species of morality, that on account of default—if any has taken place at all—of the trustees, that these men, the deaf and dumb, shall suffer the loss.

Mr. BISSELL. I do not suppose there has been any default anywhere. I think there has been liberality enough shown to the trustees of these deaf and dumb, and to all others interested in this grant, when it is considered that they have had twenty-six years in which to dispose of these 40,000 acres of land lying in the State of Florida. I think something is due to a young and feeble State like Florida. It is something to Florida that these lands should be opened up to settlement, and it is a very serious thing—as every man from the new States knows—when lands are held, from year to year, by speculators, by companies, by corporations, and by States, and thus kept out of market. It is a serious inconvenience and drawback, and it is unjust. I am for making liberal appropriations of this kind. I am for making appropriations of land for the benefit of the insane and for the deaf and dumb—in which respect I believe I differ from some of my Kentucky friends. But at the same time—

Mr. GENTRY, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman allow me, as I wish to understand this question, to direct his attention to one view of this subject. I understand that the condition upon which these lands are at present granted to the deaf and dumb asylum in Kentucky, is that they may be sold by the first of next month. Suppose Congress fail to legislate, will not the grant be forfeited? I think that if the gentleman will remember the state of things which have existed in Florida for many years past, he would find in that state of things a sufficient excuse for the trustees in not disposing of these lands up to the present time. I do not desire to have this grant forfeited by failure to legislate. The question is one of time in which these lands shall be disposed of.

Mr. CABELL. I will state that these lands are not within five hundred miles of the Indians. There is no reason why the parties cannot have sold them. They are situated in West Florida, mostly, I think, the richest and most populous counties of our State. The trustees hold these lands and will not sell them to anybody, and we insist that it is unreasonable, under these circumstances, that they should be allowed more time to dispose of them after having had nearly thirty years already for that purpose. I am entirely willing, as a representative of Florida, that if this grant is about expiring, to give them some reasonable time. I am willing to give them twelve months; but I protest against a long extension.

Mr. BISSELL. I was about to say, that whatever the consequence of the non-passage of this act, Congress or the General Government would not be responsible, for they have already allowed twenty-six years in which to sell this little batch of 40,000 acres of land.

Mr. WARD. The gentleman seems to misunderstand the history of the whole transaction. There are not 40,000 acres of land. There were 40,000 acres originally, of which 40,000 nearly the whole have been disposed of. A part of that land was in Florida, and a part in Arkansas. The entire lands in Arkansas have been disposed of, and a remnant of those lying in Florida are still undisposed of. Now, to show that there has been no neglect on the part of these trustees, I will state that they have had an agent in Florida, continually superintending these lands, and in making efforts to sell them at reasonable prices. It is entirely new to me that they have placed upon these lands an exorbitant price or value, and where the gentleman obtains authority to justify him in making that declaration, I am wholly at a loss to determine.

Mr. BISSELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? At what price have these lands been held?

Mr. WARD. I have never heard.

Mr. BISSELL. Then, for anything that appears here, the reason why these lands have not been sold, is because they have been held at an exorbitant price. I ask any gentleman interested in this question, if he can tell me at what price these lands have been offered for sale?

Mr. WARD. I cannot.

Mr. BISSELL. I am opposed to the bill. I think it would be wrong to allow them five years more, especially when they cannot show that they have put them in market, and offered to sell them at reasonable prices, or $1 25 per acre.

Mr. MEACHAM. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois, whether all the lands offered at a reasonable price, namely, the Government price, in Florida have been sold? If not, then there is no reason, lying against the Kentucky lands, why they have not been sold, on account of any unreasonable price which may have been asked.

Mr. BISSELL. In reply to the gentleman's question, I would simply observe, that if he is disposed to act upon the principle which he indicates, then, instead of allowing them five years, he should say that they should have time until the Government has sold all its lands in Florida. Will he do that?

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. BISSELL. I was going to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Florida, that if he will withdraw his motion to refer, I will move to amend the bill by striking out five years and inserting one year, and in that form, understanding that it will satisfy the gentleman from Florida, I will vote for the bill.

Mr. CABELL. I will withdraw my motion, with that understanding, after having replied to the suggestion of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MEACHAM.]

Mr. STUART. I must protest against this mode of discussing the question.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for one gentleman to yield the floor to another for explanation.

Mr. COBB. I merely wish to say—

Mr. STUART. I object to this mode of discussion, unless the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] loses the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has one hour to occupy the floor, and the practice of this body has been for the gentleman occupying the floor to yield it for explanation, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STUART. But the point that I make is this, that he cannot give the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] the right to answer the argument of another gentleman who has taken the floor in the meantime.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has not transcended the practice of the House.

Mr. CABELL. I wish merely to say, that the argument of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MEACHAM] is this: that because the General Government has not sold the 16,000,000 acres of surveyed lands in Florida at $1 25 per acre, therefore there is no force in the argument that these trustees have refused to sell their lands at reasonable prices. In reply to that, I will say, that the officers of this asylum had the selection of their lands from all the lands in Florida—out of the 16,000,000 acres of surveyed lands we had—and it is unreasonable that they should hold up these lands at high prices. They have sold some of these lands at $6 and some at $10 per acre. That is a sufficient answer to the gentleman's argument. Now, I have already stated that I am perfectly willing to acquiesce in the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL], and give the trustees one year's extension of time.

Mr. BISSELL. Is the motion to refer withdrawn?

Mr. CABELL. For the present.

Mr. BISSELL. I move, then, as an amendment to the bill, that the word "five" be stricken out and the word "one" inserted in its place.

Mr. JENKINS. I offer as an amendment to the amendment the following:

"Provided said lands shall be sold for a price not exceeding $1 25 per acre."

Mr. GENTRY. Why not let the deaf and dumb get as much for their lands as they can?

The question was then taken on the amendment to the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. BISSELL.

Mr. WARD. I do not want to trespass upon the time of the House, but it is impossible for the trustees to make any disposition of these lands in twelve months, unless it be at an entire sacrifice; and I hope that the members of this or any other House will not attempt to compel those who have the charge of the deaf and dumb to sacrifice their property, as will be the case under a forced sale.

Mr. COBB. Is the proposition to give them one year?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. COBB. I think we ought to be liberal, and give them more time.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is the question divisible?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The question is to strike out five years, and insert one.

Mr. COBB. I move to insert "two" in the place of "one," as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STUART. I have listened to the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Bissell.] I confess, with some little surprise. I know the views of the gentleman upon subjects of this character. He has partially avowed them this morning. He favors liberal donations of the public lands for the benefit of the insane, deaf, dumb, and blind. It is one of the most meritorious propositions that can address itself to the Congress of the country. It has been carried out partially in this donation to the institution in Kentucky.

There are reasons, sir, why this donation has not yet been exhausted. Congress, from time to time, has extended the operation of the law under which the grant was made. Now, we know that the history of the State of Florida is such, in regard to its settlement, as sufficiently to answer any objection that can be made in point of time. The State of Florida does not yet contain a sufficient number of inhabitants to entitle her to more than one representative upon this floor. It comes nowhere near the population of many single districts in this Union. It results from commercial as well as political causes, and it does not become this House, nor the Congress of the country, to insist that a donation for charitable purposes shall now be forfeited, and that the grant shall revert to the Government of the United States—which lands may fall a prey to worse speculation than ten shillings an acre. I am in favor of the bill as it stands, and for the purpose of bringing the House to a direct vote, I move the previous question.

The previous question received a second; there being, on a division, ayes 109—noes not counted.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. Cobb to the amendment, and it was rejected.

The amendment of Mr. Bissell was rejected.

Mr. CABELL. Is it in order to move to refer the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The House is voting under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. CABELL. It is perfectly well known to the House that I withdrew my motion to refer upon the express condition that the amendment inserting "one year," in the place of "five," would pass.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. CABELL. Upon that condition it was that I was asked to withdraw it, and I did so.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. Is it in order to move to lay the bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. CABLE. I then make that motion.

Mr. GENTRY. Why not take the question upon the bill now?

Mr. CABLE demanded the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. Under the circumstances upon which my motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands was withdrawn, I ask the general consent of the House to be allowed to renew it, that a vote may be had. The House will recollect—

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I object, and call the gentleman to order.

Mr. CABELL. I only request that a vote may be taken upon the motion to refer.

Mr. BISSELL. Move to reconsider the vote ordering the main question to be put.

Mr. CABELL. I move that the vote ordering the main question to be put be reconsidered.

Mr. MARSHALL. Did the gentleman vote in the affirmative? The House divided upon his motion.

The SPEAKER. Not upon ordering the main question. It was upon the seconding of the call for the previous question that the House divided.

The question was then taken upon the motion to reconsider; and it was disagreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. MARSHALL. I move that the vote by which this bill was ordered to be read a third time be reconsidered, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARSHALL. I call for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. CABELL. Is it engrossed?

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill, and of course, engrossed.

Mr. CABELL. Well, I give it up now. [Laughter.]

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

Mr. MARSHALL moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

CHARLES A. GRIGNON.

Senate bill, No. 212, entitled "An act for the relief of Charles A. Grignon," was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

DRAWBACKS.

Senate bill No. 165, entitled "An act extending the like privileges to those conferred by the act entitled 'An act allowing drawback on foreign merchandise exported in original packages to Chihuahua and Santa Fe, in Mexico, and the British North American Provinces adjoining the United States,' approved 3d of March 1845, to foreign merchandise exported to Mexico by certain indicated routes," was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOUSTON. From the reading of the title of the bill, it strikes my mind that it should have another direction than the one moved.

Mr. ROBBINS. It emanates from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. That may be; but I understand from the title of the bill, that it proposes to refund a portion of the revenue under certain circumstances. If that is true, it is very evident that it should not go to the Committee on Commerce. I do not care to which committee it is referred.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I will state, in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama, that the general import of the bill is to allow the same privileges of drawback upon goods which shall be taken into Mexico through the south part of Texas, as has been allowed by previous laws to goods taken in by the way of Santa Fe; and also to the North American provinces. It is for the purpose of facilitating the commerce of the country. I suppose it ought to be referred to the Committee on Commerce, as indicated by the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KING, of New York. The law this bill proposes to amend originated in the Committee on Commerce, and the whole subject relates to commerce rather than to finance. It certainly should be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The question was then taken, and the bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RALEIGH AND GASTON RAILROAD.

Senate bill No. 185, entitled "An act for the relief of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company," was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. MEADE. I would be glad if the House would consent to put that bill upon its passage. This is a railroad leading from the Roanoke river to the capital of North Carolina. It went down a few years ago. The road rotted, and a company has now been formed for the purpose of reconstructing it. It connects with the town of Petersburg and the city of Richmond, enters the interior of North Carolina, and at Raleigh connects with the Central railroad, which goes westward towards Tennessee and Alabama. That road is now about being reconstructed—the company are laying the iron rails, and have progressed some twenty or thirty miles. They ask Congress to give them a credit on the duties upon their railroad iron, similar to that which was granted to the Wilmington road, which connects Roanoke with Wilmington and Charleston, South Carolina, being the connecting lines stretching from New York to New Orleans. At present, on many parts of the track, there is not a particle of iron, and yet the cars travel upon the road. I have heard gentlemen say that they believed that the engines upon the Raleigh and Gaston road go a fox hunting upon the beach, such is the condition of the road. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a company actively engaged in reconstructing that road for the purpose of connecting these important links, and they only ask a short credit for the duties upon the imported iron, which will soon be paid by the amount the Post Office will pay that road for carrying the mail. These amounts, of course, will be deducted every year as they become due, if I understand the bill. At any rate, the company will pay the duties at the expiration of the credit which this bill proposes to give it.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would suggest to the gentleman to move the reference of this bill to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. HOUSTON. This bill involves, so far as it involves a principle at all, precisely the principle of the bill that the House have just ordered to be referred to the Committee on Commerce. Certainly, if the bill which the House have directed to go to the Committee on Commerce was properly referred, this bill ought not to go to the Committee of Ways and Means. One proposes to take part of the revenue out of the Treasury of the country, and the other proposes to give a credit upon duties which have or may accrue to the Treasury. From the reading of the title of the bill, it seems to me that it should go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, for the duties which have accrued or may accrue upon this railroad iron will be turned over to the Post Office Department.

Mr. WOODWARD. I wish to express briefly my approbation of the proposition before the House. We are inconsistent in declining to extend these facilities to railroads. The construction of railroads, with their machinery, is a part of the manufacturing business of the country, and those who will consult our revenue system will find that we have legislated upon the principle of admitting raw material free of duty. There is another inconsistency. We are donating lands, in large amounts, to encourage the construction of railroads, and at the same time are putting an enormous tax upon the indispensable and most costly material in the business of constructing them. There is a gross inconsistency in this discrimination. Now, it is much more according to principle, and much more consistent with the appropriate powers of this Government to encourage railroads by not taxing them, than to encourage them by donating public lands. We know certainly what is to be the fruit of this donation. As to what is to become of these lands, we do not know. Besides, we do not give them to meritorious companies who have already invested their own means in roads, but we give them to prospective and possible roads—roads that may or may not be made, and to an administration that may be judicious or injudicious. In remitting these taxes there is no question about the meritorious claim of the parties who make the application, and there is no question that the full benefit of the same will go to the advantage of the road. My opinion is, to be consistent with the principle by which we have exempted the material for manufacture from any duty, and to be consistent with that other principle by which we bestow lands for possible prospective roads, we ought to abolish the duty on railroad iron; and I am prepared to vote to abolish the tax upon railroad iron. In my opinion, nothing advances the wealth of the country and the settlement of the new States more than the construction of railroads; and I only require, in lieu of the proposition before the House, that we should repeal this duty upon one of the most important branches of manufacture in the country.

Mr. CARTTER. Before we act upon the remission of duties upon this railroad, I think it is well enough for the House to consider the subject. I agree with the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. Woodward,] that if there is any article which ought to be imported into the United States at this time free of duty, it is railroad iron. This bill does not propose to relieve railroads, but the railroad in question, of the incumbrances of the tariff upon railroad iron; and it is a proposition to foster a road which it appears from the confessions of its own friends has not cleared enough upon experiment to sustain itself by its own business. The honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Meade] said, that in process of time this railroad will be able to restore the amount of revenue that is suspended. What evidence have we of this, where a road having been once constructed upon the basis of its own business has gone into ruin? I am willing to relieve railroad enterprises of all imposts upon railroad iron, and I think, with the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. Woodward,] that it ought to be done, but—

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a short explanation? I agree with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Carter,] and the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. Woodward,] that railroad iron ought to be left free of duty; but that question need not be discussed now. My purpose in rising is to say to the gentleman from Ohio that the circumstances under which this road failed to sustain itself were these: The company originally subscribed $700,000 or $800,000 of stock. That was not sufficient to build the road, and they borrowed more than $1,000,000 in addition. It was the borrowing of this money which obliged them to have the road sold. The company could not meet its liabilities, and the State, being endorser for the company, purchased the road. The State has subsequently given permission to the company to become owners of half of the stock, provided the company relay the road with heavy iron. The company are now relaying it. The road would have been always good stock and have paid well, had it not been in debt; and the company was so heavily in debt that the road was obliged to be sold in this way. The only question, therefore, at present, is one between the Treasury and the road. It is said upon all hands that the Treasury does not need the money. Why not give the credit therefore? There is no doubt whatever that the money will be paid. The road will be amply good for the money. It is a mere question of time in regard to the payment of the duty. As the company have had some difficulty in raising money sufficient to buy $500,000 worth of iron, it will be a matter of great advantage to them to be relieved from the payment of the duty upon that iron at the present time. They will get the means of paying those very duties in the course of three or four years for transporting the mail.

Mr. NABERS. Is the motion to commit the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. NABERS. I wish to ask the gentleman to amend it by instructing the Committee of Ways and Means to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the duty altogether upon railroad iron. I offer that amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order. It is that the instructions proposed are inconsistent with the bill. The bill proposes one thing, which is to allow a credit upon the duties; and the instructions an entirely different thing, and that is, to repeal the duty generally upon railroad iron.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think the amendment is not in order, on the ground of irrelevancy.

Mr. NABERS. I desire to give notice of my intention to offer that amendment at the proper time.

Mr. MEADE. I rise for the purpose of making an earnest appeal to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTTER,] in consideration of the circumstances of this road, to make that question upon some other bill. I ask the attention of the House for a moment, in order to urge every man who is a friend to his country and its agricultural interests not to make that fight upon this bill, which may have the effect of delaying it for months, and defeating the object of its introduction. As I stated to the gentleman before, this road is already constructed. It is already graded, being an old road. The rails are being laid from Roanoke river to Raleigh, so as to connect with the road leading from Petersburg and Richmond. Railroad iron is being imported, and it is arriving every day in the ports of Norfolk, Petersburg, and Richmond. The length of the road is about eighty miles, probably eighty-five. Let me answer the objection of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTTER] urged just now. It was a very plausible and reasonable one, and I was not astonished he should take that view. This railroad was built at a time when the cost of such a work was very high. It cost about $1,600,000. It goes to a town that does not have much trade, in the interior of North Carolina; and although it passes through a very fertile country comparatively speaking, yet at the same time, being an agricultural country, it cannot furnish much profit. There was very little travel along the road, except that which was local, no through travel, and hence the receipts from that source were very small. I am sorry I am so hoarse that I cannot make myself better understood, and more perfectly heard by the House.

I will now tell the House that, in consequence of the vast amount of money which this road cost, the company got very much in debt, especially to the State of North Carolina. The road was sold to pay those debts, and North Carolina became the purchaser, becoming responsible for the debt. In a spirit of generosity she proposes to put in this road—which cost $1,600,000—$400,000, provided individuals living along the line of it will raise $400,000 more, for the purpose of laying down the rails.

We believe that this road, which will cost $800,000 to complete it, will pay a dividend of five or six per cent—a dividend sufficiently large to induce those who feel an interest in the road to invest their money in it. I trust that the gentleman from Ohio, if he is determined to test the question raised by the gentleman from South Carolina, will not do it upon this bill.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi. I desire to ask if the morning hour has not expired?

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not yet commenced. We are now, by unanimous consent, at the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. CARTTER. I have no animosity to this road. The picture drawn by the gentleman from Virginia commends it to my sympathies. If I thought that we ought to discriminate between one road and another of the same kind, most certainly the description he has drawn would induce me to do it in favor of this road. It is not antagonism to the road which prompts me to protest against this measure. But here it is sought by a private enterprise to repeal our revenue laws. It is no less a proposition than that, and it cannot be regarded in any other light. Who is there here who believes the time will ever come when these suspended duties will be paid by these companies? It is merely a harbinger to a proposition to remit the duties altogether.

Mr. ASHE, (interrupting.) The gentleman says that this is a proposition, in effect, to suspend the revenue laws, and that these bonds will never be paid. Two years ago, this House passed a bill of a similar import, for another railroad in North Carolina, and the bonds in that case are all paid, and the Government is now in debt to the road.

Mr. CARTTER. It may be that the bonds will be paid. The statement made by the gentleman from North Carolina may be true.

Mr. ASHE. I say it is true.

Mr. CARTTER. I have no doubt at all that it has, but has that company paid anything other-wise than in the carriage of the mails?

Mr. ASHE. The carrying of the mails has more than paid the Government. The Government is now in debt to the road.

Mr. CARTTER. That I supposed would be the case. The Government will always be in debt to any company under such circumstances. It is a poor corporation that cannot contrive to make out a balance sheet against the Government.

It appears, then, that the advances made to this company upon their railroad iron have been more than paid by the carriage of the mails. If you follow that practice, you will find your Government in debt to every one of these corporations. I have no doubt this company too will pay it, by carrying the mails. I do not object to the remission of these duties. All I ask is, that the same rule shall be extended to every portion of the Union, and that the railroads that every member in this Hall represents in other portions of the Union, shall come on to a common platform of exemption. If you are going to patronize corporations, let them all be patronized. If you are going to patronize one district, patronize the whole. Let us all have the same rights here.

Mr. MEADE, (interrupting.) We are not asking an appropriation of money.

Mr. CARTTER. No; it is merely a suspension of the payment of money.

Mr. MEADE. Before the question is taken on referring the bill to a committee, which would destroy and defeat it, I ask that the bill may be read; and before the bill is read, let me call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio and of the House to the facts.

I appeal to the Northern portion of this House to remember that their railroads, generally, were built between the years 1831 and 1842, and that during that time railroad iron was introduced free of duty. The railroads now being built in the South and West are recent enterprises. We did not progress with the same rapidity as our brethren of the North in these works of internal improvement between 1831 and 1842, and they built up their railroads with iron that was admitted free of duty. All we ask now is, that they will give to the Raleigh and Gaston railroad a short time for the payment of the duty on the iron which they employ.

Mr. CARTTER. There does not seem to be any reason why this road should be distinguished from others. The objection which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Woodward] takes to the donation of lands to these roads, applies with its full force to this description of patronage. I believe with him that in donating lands to build roads, instead of increasing population, you merely divert it, and that, instead of following the suggestions of enterprise, you apply an arbitrary rule.

Mr. WOODWARD, (interrupting.) I did not mean to express any opinion as to the propriety of granting lands. I simply meant to say that to donate lands and yet lay heavy duties on the materials for making the roads, was a gross inconsistency.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order. The proposition before the House is, if I mistake not, to refer the bill to the Committee of Ways and Means. It seems to me that this debate is going far beyond that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that a question of reference opens up the whole merits of the bill; practically it must be so.

Mr. CARTTER. I wish merely to add that I feel myself bound to vote against the special exemption of any particular railroad from the operation of the revenue laws; but at the same time I am ready, at any time, to vote to suspend the duty entirely upon railroad iron, for the purpose of encouraging the railroad enterprises of the country. That is my position.

Mr. OUTLAW. I hope that the proposition which has been made to commit this bill to the Committee of Ways and Means will not prevail. There are no facts connected with its consideration which are not already before the House; and there is no gentleman here who cannot be as well prepared to give his vote now as after it shall have gone to a committee. The reference which is proposed will entirely defeat the bill. It is ascertained that the cost of laying the iron will be $5,000 a mile, and that will take up the entire amount of private subscriptions. The iron is now arriving daily, but the company have not the means of paying the duties to the Government, and hence the result must be that the work will be impeded and retarded.

Sir, it seems to me a most extraordinary proposition that whilst the gentleman from Ohio is willing to repeal all the duty upon iron, he will not grant the small favor which is asked for this railroad. We of North Carolina come here to ask for very little. We make very few demands from this Government; and it passes my comprehension how gentlemen who are willing to vote millions of the public domain to build up internal improvements, can refuse this small aid for the construction of a railroad.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, (interrupting.) If I understand this bill, it proposes that the duty on the iron to be used on this road, shall be remitted?

Mr. OUTLAW. Not at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, that it shall be suspended?

Mr. OUTLAW. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand, also, that a large portion of the iron for this road has been already introduced, and of course duty must have been paid upon some portions of it.

Mr. OUTLAW. It is in warehouses, in bond.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, is the duty on that portion already introduced to be paid or not?

Mr. OUTLAW. In reply to the gentleman from Arkansas I will state, that the iron which has been already imported is in warehouses, in bond; and it must necessarily remain there until the company can raise money enough to pay the duty.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I ask why the gentleman from North Carolina, and the gentleman from Virginia, and other gentlemen who advocate the remission or suspension of the duty on this iron, and who would stop this money from going into the Treasury, are not willing to appropriate an acre of the public lands to aid in the construction of railroads?—lands, fourfifths of which, they know, cannot pay a cent into the Treasury for years, if at all? I am willing to go with the gentleman for the remission of these duties; but I do not see the difference, in point of principle, between voting for a bill of this kind and a bill to grant lands to railroad companies.

Mr. OUTLAW. If the honorable gentleman will turn to the records of the last Congress, he will find that I voted for the bill to give the swamp lands to Arkansas. I have not voted, and I will not vote, the public domain to particular States for their benefit, to the exclusion of my own constituents, but I am willing to appropriate the proceeds that may arise from the sale of that domain fairly, justly, and equally to all parts of the country.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understand this bill proposes to permit this railroad in North Carolina to pay the duty on its iron in bonds which may be discharged in mail service. Is that the proposition?

Several VOICES. It is.

Mr. JOHNSON. I intend to vote for this bill, but I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina, if he is willing to let the new States buy the alternate sections of the public lands along their railroad lines, and pay for them in bonds to be discharged in the same way?

Mr. OUTLAW. I am not here to be catechised; nor can it be expected that when a new proposition of this sort is propounded, I can answer it at once.

Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania. I raise this question of order, that it is not competent for members of this House to rise publicly and make bargains with each other about their roads. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. The gentleman is perhaps the first and the last one that would make bargains in this House, or out of it. No one here has proposed such a thing.

Mr. OUTLAW. The question propounded to me is one which I will consider when it shall be properly presented; but, in regard to the improvements of the new States, and in regard to the improvements of the western rivers and lakes, the honorable gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] will recollect that I stood side by side with him, and voted for the river and harbor bill of the last session of Congress But I am wandering from the point—

Mr. MEADE. I find upon examination that this bill grants this privilege for four years to this company. It also provides for the payment of whatever may be due by the Post Office Department to the road at the end of each year, which is to be received in part payment. The balance is to be secured by the bonds of the company, and by good personal security, to be approved by the district judge; and let me say to my friend from Arkansas, and my friend from Missouri, that to make the cases parallel they should ask us to allow them to purchase the public lands upon a credit of four years, for the purpose of building their railroads, provided at the same time they gave good personal security for the payment of their bonds as they became due. Let them do that, and I will vote for the proposition.

Mr. OUTLAW. It seems to me that the only possible reason which can reasonably be urged for referring this bill is to ascertain the condition of the Treasury—to see whether it was in such a condition as to authorize this Congress to grant the credit which is asked at their hands. We all know what the condition of the Treasury is. We know that there is a surplus of money there, and we know that the public cannot, by any possibility, be injured by granting the credit which this bill provides. It may be that the honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CARTER] might have some scruples in asking this credit for his own State; but we in North Carolina are in the habit of paying our debts, and we here offer to give good security to this Government that we will pay them when they become due. I move the previous question upon this proposition.

Mr. EWING. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw for a moment.

Mr. OUTLAW. I must insist upon it.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask that the bill be read.

Mr. JOHNSON. I object to its being read.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the bill been read at all?

The SPEAKER. Not by sections.

Mr. FOWLER. I hope the bill will not be put upon its passage without giving us an opportunity of knowing what it is.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I submit whether we have not the right to order the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is in order to have the bill read.

It was then read through.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question now being upon the motion to refer to the Committee of Ways and Means,

Mr. EWING demanded the yeas and nays; but they were refused.

Mr. OUTLAW demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER and CARTER appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—yeas 66, noes 71.

So the bill was not referred.

Mr. MASON. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. There is no morning hour.

Mr. GENTRY. What is the precise state of the question?

The SPEAKER. The question now before the House is on ordering the bill to be read a third time, under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. SMART. I move that the bill do lie upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MASON. Is it in order to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. It is not; under the operation of the previous question.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

Mr. MASON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the motion is not in order.

Mr. COBB. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. COBB. Is the previous question still in operation?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. COBB. I am sorry for it, for I have been endeavoring to get the floor during the discussion of this bill for the purpose of offering an amendment extending the provisions of this bill, so far as can be made applicable, to the Charleston and Memphis, and the Selma and Gunter's Landing, and the Winchester and Alabama railroads, in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee. If we intend such provision as the bill proposes, I cannot see why it should be confined to this road alone. The roads in my county are at this time importing iron, and have just as much right in equity, I think, to such provisions as are proposed in this bill.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. SMART to lay the bill on the table, and it was disagreed to; there being—yeas 64, nays 99—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, William Appleton, Busby, Joseph Cable, Lewis D. Campbell, Carter, Chapman, John G. Davis, Dawson, Doty, Duham, Edgerton, Evans, Ewing, Faulkner, Ficklin, Florence, Floyd, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Gilmore, Goodenow, Green, Isham G. Harris, Hart, Henn, Hibbard, Thomas M. Howe, Ingersoll, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kurtz, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, McNair, Meacham, Morrison, Murray, Nahers, Newton, Andrew Parker, Perkins, Phelps, Rantoul, Robbins, Ross, David L. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Snow, Benjamin Staunton, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, George W. Thompson, Townsend, Washburn, Wilcox, and Wildrick—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, Ashe, Averett, Barrere, Bartlett, Beale, Bell, Bennett, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, E. C. Cabell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chastain, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Conger, Cottman, Curtis, George T. Davis, Dockery, Duncan, Edmundson, Fitch, Fowler, Freeman, Gaylord, Gentry, Gorman, Grey, Hall, Harper, Sampson W. Harris, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Holladay, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Ives, Jackson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Kuhns, Landry, Lockhart, Mace, Edward C. Marshall, McMullin, McQueen, Meade, Miller, Motony, Henry D. Moore, John Moore, Morehead, Murphy, Olds, Orr, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Pennington, Porter, Powell, Price, Savage, Schoelcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Scurry, Smith, Stanley, Stone, St. Martin, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Wallace, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Addison White, Alex. White, Woodward, and Yates—99.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I wish to inquire if the previous question still applies to the bill?

The SPEAKER. It applies upon the proposition to read the bill a third time.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and having been read the third time,

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. SMART. I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. EWING. Is it in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. How did the gentleman vote on that question?

Mr. EWING. I voted in the negative.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The gentleman, then, cannot make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] voted with the majority, and he has a right to make the motion.

Mr. EWING. I move, then, to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, and I wish to state the reasons for the motion. It is in order to get the bill in a proper condition to refer it to some committee with instructions to—

Mr. OUTLAW. I rise to a question of order. I submit whether this proposition is debatable?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, and that proposition is debatable; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] has a right to make a statement.

Mr. EWING. My purpose, as I was stating, is to get the bill in such a condition as that it will be proper to move its reference, with instructions of a general character, if the House will concur in doing so. It has been decided, it is true, that it is out of order to move instructions to this bill to abolish duties upon railroad iron, but it is not out of order, as I conceive, to move instructions to the committee to prepare and bring in a bill into this House, applying the provisions of this bill to all railroad companies who choose to take advantage of it. While I concur in the general propriety of the principles involved in this bill, I believe it improper as an act of special legislation. I believe that it is improper, when we have laid down a general system, to turn this House into a court of chancery to relieve hard cases from the operation of that system. There is no reason, either in the insolvency of this railroad company or in any other circumstances connected with it, why we should not apply the same provisions and the same favor to other railroad companies, who will of course take the advantage of it if it pass. Protection upon railroad iron, like all other species of protection, is for the advancement of the interest of the manufacturer. Under all proper circumstances and restrictions we should be willing to protect the manufacturing interests of the country. For my own part, when it comes manifestly in conflict with the agricultural interests of the country, when it is not asked to afford protection to that agricultural interest but merely to relieve them from burdens, I am at all times prepared, as a representative of an agricultural district, to abolish that protection, and place them, at least, upon a fair and equal footing. If a bill can be prepared and introduced into this House, abolishing duties upon railroad iron, I, for one, am prepared to vote for it as a general bill; but I am unwilling to make this special provision affording relief to one railroad only. I have heard no special reason assigned for yielding this advantage to one railroad company, which might not properly be urged by all.

My object in moving a reconsideration, is to get the bill back to such a stage as will render it proper to move instructions to a committee to prepare and bring in a bill, extending the same advantages to all railroad companies which it is proposed to extend to this. I hope the House will concur with me in these views.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I fully agree with my friend from Kentucky [Mr. Ewing] in the general views he has thrown out. In fact twelve months ago I took occasion to say, that I thought there was no article which it was so important to admit free of duty as railroad iron. I still adhere to that opinion; and I have upon my table an amendment which I intend to offer, exempting railroad iron entirely from duty. But, sir, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Ewing] must see that a motion of that sort may meet with opposition in this House. There is a difference of opinion upon that subject; and hence whenever it comes up we shall have a discussion, and there will be a good deal of delay, and no man can foresee what will be the result. Now, this bill does not raise that question at all. The only question proposed by this bill is, that this company shall have a credit of four years to pay the duties upon their giving bonds for the payment, and also allowing the Government to retain the money falling due to the company for the transportation of the mail over their road, and applying it upon the bonds, which will probably be sufficient to pay the duties in two years. Now, sir, if we go into the whole question of exempting duties upon railroad iron, my friend will see at once that this bill may not be passed for weeks or months, even if it is passed at all. In the mean time, this company is importing iron, and there is a delay in laying down the road, upon which the Postmaster General has been obliged to stop the daily mail. It is, therefore, important that we act upon this bill at once. Now, I am very glad that we have got into this general discussion. I am glad to hear gentlemen upon all sides of me come out and say that they are ready to exempt railroad iron from duty. I shall go as heartily into this question as anybody, if this question now pending can be got out of the way. I will vote to get at that general question at any moment, but I do not like to embarrass a little proposition like this. Gentlemen say they are willing to exempt all roads; then why not relieve this one now? As I know the House is impatient to get at another question, and hoping that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Davis] will be allowed to occupy the floor to-day as he desires, I will move to lay this motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio, moved that the House adjourn: which motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. Is it in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is not, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. SMART demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. SMART and CHANDLER were appointed.

The question was then taken upon the motion to lay the motion for reconsideration upon the table, and it was agreed to—the tellers having reported, ayes 85, noes 48.

Mr. MEADE called for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Davis] is entitled to the floor in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that he is desirous of submitting his speech to-day. I appeal, therefore, if I am correctly informed upon the subject, to the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have no objection to that, provided the gentleman will allow the call for the previous question to be sustained, that this question may come up on Monday.

Mr. HOUSTON. It has been demanded, and this subject will hold its place.

The SPEAKER. In order to give this question the preference, the main question must be ordered to be put; then you only can pass from it by general consent.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Unless the call for the previous question is seconded, the bill will not come up, as a matter of course. I insist upon that question being put.

Mr. HOUSTON. My motion is in order anyhow, and I therefore insist upon it. Under the state of facts I have mentioned, I hope the House will resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The question was put and agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair.)

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The business first before the committee is the special order, being House bill No. 7, for the encouragement of agriculture, and for other purposes. Upon that question the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Davis] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts, then addressed the committee an hour, in reply to remarks made by Mr. RANTOUL some time since. He referred to the remarks of that gentleman in regard to the position which he (Mr. D.) held some years since on the abolition question; and said that if the gentleman had presented other facts of later occurrence, he would have found that a change had taken place in his opinions. If the gentleman had gone on, and said that afterwards he (Mr. D.) voted for slaveholding Presidents, and that in 1844 he was a Delegate to the Convention which nominated a slaveholding candidate, and that he favored that nomination; if he had gone on to say that he was opposed by the Free-Soilers in his district, and, on two trials, elected, it would have been unnecessary for him to make any further explanation.

Mr. D. then answered the charge of Mr. RANTOUL, that he libelled Massachusetts in charging a coalition in that State. He said that he had stated nothing but certain facts, from which he drew certain inferences, and the question was, whether these facts—which his colleague did not undertake to deny—warranted the inferences he had drawn; and if the facts which he stated were such that the mere statement of them was a libel upon Massachusetts, it did seem to him that it was for his colleague, and those who acted with him, to put their hands upon their mouths, and their mouths in the dust, and apologize for having any connection with this act, the mere statement of which, his colleague had asserted, was a libel upon Massachusetts.

Mr. D. then reviewed the opinions held by his colleague at different periods of his political career, to show that they had not been uniformly the same, and cited proofs of his connection with the Free-Soil party of Massachusetts.

In conclusion, he referred to the fugitive slave law, and said that though he believed that in many respects it required alteration, yet there was an increasing sentiment throughout the country that one part of the Constitution was as binding as another; and, as it regarded this question of detail, it was not now the time for making any change.

[Mr. Davis's speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. FITCH here obtained the floor.

Mr. ORR. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Fitch] will give way, I will move that the committee rise.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee rose accordingly, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 7, to encourage agriculture, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. CLARK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce joint resolutions of the Legislature of Iowa, respecting the compromise. I will merely state to the House that I have sought to introduce these resolutions for weeks, and have not been able to do so. I trust I may be permitted to introduce them now.

Objection being made, they were not introduced. On motion by Mr. ORR, the House then adjourned to meet on Monday next.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

By Mr. RANTOUL: A bill abolishing the duty on raw silk imported into the United States.

By Mr. CHURCHWELL: A bill to admit iron rails for railroad purposes free of duty.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana: The petition of G. W. Thompson, Alexander Biles, and 30 others, relative to "Rio Hondo" claims in western Louisiana.

By Mr. MILLER: The memorial of sundry citizens of Howard county, Missouri, praying Congress to revise and change the duty on hemp and hempen yarns.

By Mr. EDGERTON: Petitions of citizens of Fulton county, Ohio, for a mail route from east line of Clinton township to Bryan, in Williams county.

By Mr. KUHN: Six petitions from citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to prohibit the importation of ardent spirits and fermented liquors into the United States, in order to prevent the evils of intemperance.

Also, three petitions from citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to sustain the Wheeling Bridge.

By Mr. ROBINSON: The memorial of James M. Clements, James C. Jones, and other assistant marshals of Franklin county, Indiana, praying further compensation, &c.

By Mr. FITCH: The memorial of Benjamin Henkle, assistant marshal of Jasper county, Indiana, and of Levi Eastridge, assistant marshal of Wabash county, Indiana, asking additional compensation for services in taking the census.

By Mr. CHANDLER: Four memorials numerously signed by citizens of Philadelphia, asking a renewal of the patent for Woodworth's planing machine.

Also, memorials of citizens of Germantown, Philadelphia county, asking that seamen and marines who served in the war of 1812 be allowed 160 acres of public land.

By Mr. ABERCROMBIE: The memorial of the trustees of East Alabama Female College, asking a grant of public lands.

Also, the petition of sundry citizens of the State of Alabama, asking that the office of chaplain may be abolished.

By Mr. CURTIS: Two petitions from the county of Clarion, Pennsylvania, numerously signed, praying for a modification of the tariff act of 1846 so far as relates to iron.

By Mr. PEASLEE: The petition of Thomas E. Oliver, that the bounty or drawback on the salt exported in the schooner Harvest Home, lost at sea, be allowed him.

By Mr. MCCORKLE: The memorial of James H. Long and Brothers, settling out that in the year 1849, in the State of California, they issued out $5,400 worth of provisions and breadstuffs to distressed and starving emigrants from the United States, and praying Congress to refund to them the amount so expended.

By Mr. WELCH: The petition of David Jones and Thomas Crawford, of Vinton county, Ohio, praying for additional compensation as deputy marshals in taking the Seventh Census.

Also, the petition of James Veale and others, residents of the Upper Peninsula, in the State of Michigan, upon the same subject.

Also, the memorial of William Werneburg, Leopold Sahl, and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to declare the forcible intervention of one State in the internal affairs of another State to be a violation of the public law of the world.

Also, the petition of George Peterson, Samuel L. Peden, Thomas Kier, and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for additional protection to salt, iron, coal, glass, and cotton.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, March 8, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of State, accompanied by lists of the clerks and other persons employed in that Department during the year 1851; and the amount paid to each; which was read and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of State showing the disbursements for the service of the State Department, including foreign missions, for the year ending June 30, 1851; which was read and ordered to be referred to the Committee on Finance, and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, showing the balances of appropriations for the service of that Department on the 1st of July, 1850; the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1851; the repayments and transfers, with the amounts applicable to the service during the same period, and the amounts drawn from the Treasury, with such appropriations as have been carried to the surplus land, on the 1st of July, 1851; which was read and ordered to be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate two memorials of officers of the army serving in New Mexico, praying for themselves and the soldiers under their command the same additional allowance of pay as is granted to those in California and Oregon; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of Arnold Hunter, an assistant marshal for taking the Seventh Census in Pennsylvania, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Also, the petition of Jordan W. Eldred and others, praying that the law abolishing flogging in the Navy may not be repealed; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, the petition of William Manchester and others, praying that the public lands may be granted in limited quantities to actual settlers not possessed of other lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, additional documents in support of the claim of the heirs of Brinton Paine; which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of William Heumann, a soldier in the late war with Mexico, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a petition of citizens of Bond county, Illinois, praying that bounty land may be granted to certain mounted men from Illinois and Missouri, called into service in 1832, to defend the frontiers against anticipated Indian attacks; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER presented the memorial of Sarah Somers Corson, nearest surviving relative and heir-at-law of Richard Somers, who fell at Tripoli in 1804, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WADE submitted a communication from P. K. Dickenson & Co., remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. DAVIS presented three memorials of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Franklin county, Massachusetts, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. MORTON submitted additional documents in relation to the claim of Chandler C. Yonge; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RUSK presented the memorial of Roderick T. Higginbotham; the memorial of Margaret P. Hallett, administratrix of John Hallett; the memorial of Andrew Moore; the memorial of Daniel Davis; the memorial of Desha Bunton; and the memorial of John W. Bunton, praying the establishment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which were referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Also, a memorial of citizens of Texas, praying the establishment of a mail route from Lynchburg to San Augustine in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SMITH presented a petition of citizens of Fairfield county, Connecticut, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. HAMLIN presented four petitions of citizens of Maine, remonstrating against the renewal of Parker's patent for improvement in water-wheels; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. HUNTER presented a petition of merchants and others, citizens of Richmond, Virginia, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steam-ships; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a petition of citizens of Brooke county, Virginia, remonstrating against the renewal of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. JAMES presented the petition of the children and heirs of Uriah Jones, a soldier in the revolutionary war, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. CHASE presented the memorial of inhabitants of Greene county, Ohio, praying that the transportation of the mails on Sunday may be prohibited by law; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. WADE presented two memorials of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Ohio, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. CASS presented a memorial of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to declare their recognition of the doctrine of non-intervention and prevent its infraction; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

In presenting this memorial the honorable Senator said, by intervention I mean the right to meddle with the concerns of other nations, and especially to put down struggles for freedom wherever efforts are made to establish free Governments. That is my doctrine on intervention.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented a petition of citizens of Wisconsin, praying a grant of land to certain companies therein mentioned, for the construction of a railroad from Chicago, through Janesville and Fond Du Lac, to Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented a petition of carpenters of the city and county of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a memorial of inhabitants of Lawrence county, Pennsylvania, praying that the transportation of the mails on Sunday may be prohibited by law; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a petition of C. Churchman and others, praying appropriations for the repair of the break-water and piers in the Delaware river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, two petitions of citizens of Montgomery county, Pennsylvania, praying an increase of the duty on iron; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against a renewal of Parker's patent for improvements in the water-wheel; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. BADGER presented two memorials of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in North Carolina, praying additional compensation; which were referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of lumber dealers of Albany, New York, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SOULE presented a resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, in favor of an appropriation for the removal of the obstructions to navigation in the Red river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the memorial of Dr. George East, of Missouri, praying the establishment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on that subject.

Also, the petition of Thomas W. Phelps, praying a pension in consequence of the loss of sight caused by disease contracted in the naval service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RHETT presented the petition of Ann Y. Kelly, administratrix of William H. Lee, praying the establishment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on that subject.

Mr. BRADBURY presented five petitions of citizens of Maine, remonstrating against the renewal of Parker's patent for improvements in water-wheels; which were referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. UNDERWOOD presented a memorial of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying a modification of the bounty land law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

In presenting the memorial the honorable Senator said: The petitioners pray that the bounty land act of September, 1850, may be so amended as to enlarge the quantity of land heretofore granted to 160 acres, because they say that 80 or 40 acres are not enough for a farm. They also say that soldiers who enlisted in the war with Mexico, and who spent only one month in barracks in comfortable quarters, get that quantity of land, and that the soldiers of the war of 1812, who fought several battles, ought at least to fare as well as those who rendered so little service.

Mr. WALKER presented a petition of citizens of Fulton county, Illinois, praying that the public lands may be granted in limited quantities to actual settlers not possessed of other lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a petition of citizens of Wisconsin, praying a grant of lands to certain companies therein named for the construction of a railroad from Chicago, through Janesville and Fond du Lac, to Lake Superior; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STOCKTON presented resolutions of the Legislature of New Jersey, in favor of an increase of the duties on coal, iron, and glass; which were ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

Mr. BRADBURY submitted a document in relation to the claim of Thomas B. Parsons to a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. MORTON, it was Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury the original reports of the examination of the claims for spoiliations by the American troops in West Florida in 1814 and 1818, communicated to the Senate by that Department the 16th of June, 1846.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the Treasury, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill amendatory of existing laws relative to the half dollar, quarter dollar, dime, and half dime; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER moved that 2000 additional copies of the above report be printed; which motion was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STOCKTON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of William Roberts, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Stephen P. Yeomans and others, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Abraham L. Kincherbocker, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill for the relief of Amos Knapp, reported the same without amendment.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of the administrator of Olive Folsom, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Charles H. Buxenstein, submitted an adverse report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of John Le Roy, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the report of the Secretary of the Navy of the 5th instant, communicating copies of certain contracts, reported in favor of printing the same.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the resolutions of the Board of Aldermen and Board of Assistants of the city of New York, presented the 5th instant, reported that the same be not printed.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the memorial of the heirs of Brinton Paine, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims. It was so referred.

BOUNTY LAND TO SAILORS.

Mr. STOCKTON. Mr. President, I desire to give notice to the Senate that I will to-morrow, or some day thereafter, ask leave to introduce a bill granting to each commissioned officer of the Navy of the United States who served in the war against Mexico, one quarter section of land; and to all petty officers, seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, and boys, and to all others who served on board of steamers, one quarter section of land each.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills from the Senate:

An act for the relief of Rufus Dwinel; and

An act to extend the time for selling the lands granted to the Kentucky Asylum for teaching the deaf and dumb;

Also, that it had passed the following bills, and requesting the concurrence of the Senate therein;

An act to authorize the issuing of a register to the brig "America;"

An act for the relief of William S. Payne;

An act to authorize the issuing of a register to the brig "Kossuth;" and

An act for the relief of Andrew Smith.

The four last named bills were severally read a first and second time by their titles, and were referred, the first and third to the Committee on Commerce; the second to the Committee on Finance; and the fourth to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

ENGROSSED BILLS PASSED.

The following engrossed bills were severally read a third time and passed:

A bill for the relief of John F. Callan, administrator of Daniel Renner, deceased; and

A bill to authorize T. H. McManus to enter by preemption certain lands in the Greensburg land district, Louisiana.

SURVEY OF NORTHERN AND CHINA SEAS.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy communicate to the Senate his opinion of the expediency of a reconnaissance of the routes of navigation in the Northern seas and in the China and Japan seas, and whether any vessels belonging to the service can be used for that purpose; and also, what would be the expense of such a reconnaissance.

THOMAS B. PARSONS.

Mr. BRADBURY submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to Thomas B. Parsons, who received an injury in the naval service of the United States, arrears of pension, or the difference between the half pay of seaman and a petty officer, in which capacity he was acting at the time he was disabled.

THE SEVENTH CENSUS.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to submit a resolution in relation to the returns of the last census.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the plan for the publication of the returns of the census, as exemplified in relation to the State of Maryland which has been submitted to the Senate, be referred to a select committee of five for revision, who shall examine and report what alteration shall be made therein before the same is ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider this resolution at this time. We have delayed this matter for a long period. The plan has been before us for a long time, and it may require alteration; and I submit that the most competent mode would be to submit the matter to the Senate in the way I have proposed. It is a subject of great importance. There is a great deal in some respects contained in the tabular statement before us which, it seems to me, is entirely useless; and in other respects, some statements which ought to have been made have been entirely omitted. It is a matter for consideration; and I know of no better mode than by a reference to a select committee, so that we may know what we are to print, and in what form we are to send these tables and facts to the world before we print them.

Objection being made, the resolution lies over.

CHEAP OCEAN POSTAGE.

Mr. SUMNER. I submit the following resolution. As it is one of inquiry merely, I ask that it may be considered at this time:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, while considering the nature and extent of aid proper to be granted to the ocean steamers, be directed to inquire whether the present charges for letters earned by these steamers, are not unnecessarily large and burdensome to foreign correspondence, and whether something may not be done, and, if so, what, to secure the great boon of cheap ocean postage.

There being no objection, the question was stated to be on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SUMNER. The Committee on Naval Affairs have the responsibility of shaping some measure by which the relations of our Government with the ocean steamers will be defined. And since one special inducement to these relations, involving the bounty now enjoyed and further solicited, is the carrying of the mails, I trust this committee will be willing to inquire whether there cannot be a reduction on the postage of foreign correspondence. Under the postage act of 1851, the Postmaster, by and with the advice of the President, has power to reduce, from time to time, the rates of postage on all mailable matter conveyed between the United States and any foreign country. But the existence of this power in the Postmaster will not render it improper for the committee, now drawn into connection with this question, to take it into careful consideration, with a view to some practical action, or, at least, recommendation thereon. The subject is of peculiar interest; nor do I know any measure so easily accomplished, which promises to be so beneficent as cheap ocean postage. The argument in its favor seems to me at once brief and unanswerable.

A letter can be sent three thousand miles in the United States for three cents, and the reasons for cheap postage on the land are equally applicable to the ocean.

In point of fact, the conveyance of letters can be effected in sailing or steam-packets at less cost than by railway.

Besides, cheap ocean postage will tend to supersede the clandestine or illicit conveyance of letters, and to bring into the mails all mailable matter which, under the present system, is carried in the pockets of passengers, or in the bales and boxes of merchants.

All new facilities for correspondence naturally give new expansion to human intercourse; and there is reason to believe that, through an increased number of letters, cheap ocean postage will be self-supporting.

Cheap postal communication with foreign countries will be of incalculable importance to the commerce of the United States.

By promoting the intercourse of families and friends, separated by the ocean, cheap postage will add to the sum of human happiness.

The present high rates of ocean postage, namely, twenty-four cents on half an ounce, forty-eight cents on an ounce, and ninety-six cents on a letter, which weighs a fraction more than an ounce, are a severe tax upon all, particularly upon the poor, amounting in many cases to a complete prohibition of foreign correspondence. This should not be so.

It particularly becomes our country, by the removal of all unnecessary burdens upon foreign correspondence, to advance the comfort of European emigrants seeking a home among us, and to destroy, as far as practicable, every barrier to free intercourse between the Old World and the New.

And lastly, cheap ocean postage will be a bond of peace among the nations of the earth, and will extend good will among men.

By such reasons this measure is commended. Much as I rejoice in the American steamers, which vindicate a peaceful supremacy of the seas and help to weave a golden tissue between the two hemispheres, I cannot consider these, with all their unquestionable advantages, an equivalent for cheap ocean postage. But I trust that they are not inconsistent with each other, and that both may happily flourish together.

Mr. RUSK. I have no objection to the passage of the resolution; but it involves an inquiry on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in relation to a subject of which I do not see how they can take cognizance. The rates of postage between this country and England are established by treaty arrangements altogether. In relation to the enormous rates of which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks, I would reply that they were reduced at the last session of Congress more than half, which was all we thought we could reduce them.

Mr. SUMNER. It will be observed, in the first place, that the resolution is one of inquiry merely, and that it is directed to a committee, which seems to me, under the present circumstances, to be the most competent to entertain that inquiry, for this reason: that it is specially charged with a review of the relations between the Government of the country and the ocean steam-packets, on their application for increased bounty. I desire that this committee, while considering this application, should inquire whether, by recommendation or otherwise, they may not do something to promote cheap ocean postage. If the committee find themselves unable to do anything in this direction, then the inquiry, so far as they are concerned, ends.

It may then go to some other committee. Before offering the resolution, I conferred with at least two members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and understood from them that the resolution would not be unacceptable to the committee. At the present moment, while the question of bounty to the ocean steamers is pending, this seems to be the committee to which it belongs.

Mr. GWIN. When the Senator from Massachusetts spoke to me on this matter, I did not at the time see the bearing of it so well as I see it now. With my present views, I think this is a subject which should go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BADGER. The Committee on the Post Office, I think, is the proper committee, if it is proper to refer the resolution to any committee at all. I certainly do not think it should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Perhaps the better way would be to lay the resolution on the table until the Senate have had time to consider what disposition they will make of it. With that view, therefore, I move to lay it on the table for the present.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator from North Carolina withdraw that motion for a moment?

Mr. BADGER. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope my colleague will permit this resolution to go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. That is the proper committee, I think, to which to refer it. My colleague will perceive that no change can be made in the postal arrangements by sea without a concurrence on the part of other Governments—that is, that we cannot diminish the rates of postage from this country, unless such a proposition is acceded to on the other side, because it would derange the whole system. It will, therefore, be for the Post Office Committee to consider whether any measures should be taken to effect such an object.

Mr. SUMNER. All that I had in view when I offered the resolution. I was aware that the reduction of postage depended ultimately upon treaty stipulations. I did suppose, however, that a committee of this body having the subject in hand, might, by recommendation at least, take some steps to promote that object. Perhaps it will facilitate a correct understanding of the question, if the resolution is read again, and I would ask that this may be done.

The resolution was accordingly read.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] whether this subject, which certainly is a very important and interesting one, would not more properly be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations? The Committee on Naval Affairs is burdened with a very extensive business not closely connected with this, while it addresses itself legitimately, I think, to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I do not know any other subject on which that committee could be engaged so profitably and beneficially. If that committee is not prepared to examine the subject, I would suggest to my friend from Massachusetts to permit the resolution to lie on the table for a day or two, till we have time to consider it more fully.

Mr. SUMNER. I would remark that the resolution was predicated upon an existing fact, namely: that the Committee on Naval Affairs is now charged with a special subject which it seems to me at the present moment is intimately connected with the inquiry into the importance and practicability of cheap ocean postage. You will observe that in the beginning of the resolution, particular reference is made to this fact, and it is on this account that the resolution is directed to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to move to amend the resolution by striking out "the Committee on Naval Affairs," and inserting "the Committee on Foreign Relations."

Mr. MASON. I think the Senator from New York in reviewing that motion will find that it is a subject which is utterly inappropriate for the consideration of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is a matter which relates to mail contracts. I am willing that it should be sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs, or to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; but it seems to me, with all due deference to the mover, that it belongs especially to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It is a matter of postal regulation, affecting the revenues of the post office; and although it may be a subject which refers to the relations between ocean steamers and the Government, which is a question now before the Naval Committee, yet it is not germane to that subject. I understand the ocean steamers want an increase of compensation from the Government for their services. That may be right or wrong. That will be a matter for the Naval Committee to inquire into; but whether it is proper for this Government to enter into any arrangement to reduce the postage is a question for the consideration of the Post Office Committee. I submit, therefore, to the Senator from New York to withdraw his proposition.

Mr. SEWARD. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BADGER. Like my friend from Virginia, I am willing that the resolution should go either to the Committee on Foreign Relations or to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, or to any other committee except the Committee on Naval Affairs. Now, each of us seems to be willing that the subject should go to any committee except the one which we are upon. I think it would be better to let the matter lie over till to-morrow, until we see what committee will be the most proper one to take charge of a subject of which none of the committees hitherto named seems desirous to take charge.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; I am willing to consent to that.

Mr. BADGER. Then I move that, for the present, the resolution be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa in aid of the construction of certain railroads in said State, the pending question being on the amendment offered by Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD replied to the remarks of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DODGE] in a speech which will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not suppose that any Senator proposes to discuss this bill further to-day; I do not myself purpose to speak upon it at all; but there are some matters, of an executive character, to which I desire to invite the attention of the Senate, and which require its action. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of this subject until to-morrow, for the purpose of afterwards moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. BORLAND. I wish to say to the Senate that I desire to offer a very few remarks on this bill before it is finally disposed of. Therefore, if the honorable Senator will permit, I will make the motion to postpone, so that I may have the floor when the subject again comes up.

Mr. HAMLIN. I withdraw the motion to accommodate the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BORLAND. Then I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. CLARKE. It will be recollected by the Senate; that some ten or more days since, to-morrow, (Tuesday,) was assigned for the consideration of the resolution which I had the honor to introduce upon the subject of non-intervention. The honorable Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] has the floor upon that subject; and it is very desirable, indeed, to him that he should have an opportunity to-morrow to deliver his sentiments upon it. I shall, therefore, to-morrow morning ask the Senate to take up that question with a view to the accommodation of the honorable Senator from New York. After that, there will be nothing to interfere with this bill, and Senators can express their opinions upon it.

The PRESIDENT. It will of course be in the power of the Senate to take up either subject to-morrow.

Mr. BORLAND. To accommodate gentlemen, I will modify my proposition by moving to postpone the further consideration of the subject until Wednesday.

The motion was agreed to.

D. D. MITCHELL.

The following message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. J. W. FORNEY, its Clerk:

MR. PRESIDENT: The House of Representatives have passed Senate bill No. 161, entitled "An act for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Mitchell, of the State of Missouri," with an amendment, in which I am directed to ask the concurrence of the Senate.

On the motion of Mr. MANGUM, the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the said bill.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

"That it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the writ of error pending before the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of D. D. Mitchell versus M. X. Harmony, without cost to the plaintiff in error.

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Attorney General be, and he hereby is, directed to cause such chancery or other proceedings to be instituted in the name of D. D. Mitchell vs. M. X. Harmony, or his assigns, before the proper court at St. Louis, Missouri, as shall stay proceedings upon a certain judgment at law, in the name of said Harmony, against said Mitchell, till the rendition of an opinion by the Supreme Court of the United States upon the writ of error aforesaid. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause such security to be entered by the United States as shall indemnify and save said Mitchell harmless against said judgment.

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That whenever the Attorney General of the United States shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that the writ of error aforesaid has failed, or that no further steps can be taken at law or in equity whereby to avoid the payment of said judgment, in favor of said Harmony, rendered in the State of Missouri, then it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he is hereby authorized to liquidate and satisfy said judgment, damages, and costs, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. MANGUM. It will be remembered that a bill has been passed by the Senate at this session, providing for the immediate payment of the judgment obtained against Colonel Mitchell. This amendment of the House of Representatives proposes to give the defendant in the original suit an opportunity of having it regularly adjudged in the Supreme Court of the United States. As I understand, the verdict was deemed a very extraordinary one. It was for a very large amount of money; and Mr. Mitchell, who had been acting as the agent of the Government, was unwilling to bankrupt his private fortune, and call upon other gentlemen to bankrupt theirs, in all probability, by entering such large security for prosecuting it further. This amendment proposes that the Secretary of the Treasury, for the Government, shall meet that responsibility; and if, ultimately, the claim shall be adjudged to be good, the amendment only provides (what we have already voted) that the money shall be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BORLAND. The bill which was originally passed by the Senate and sent to the House, and to which this is an amendment, was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs. I see no other member of the Military Committee of the Senate now present; but I think I fairly represent that committee in advocating the immediate adoption of this amendment. In reporting the bill originally, the committee proceeded upon the ground that although, in their opinion, the judgment was an improper one, and had been obtained by improper means, yet Colonel Mitchell acted in good faith, and should be protected. On that ground the Senate passed a bill for his relief. This amendment of the House of Representatives secures all the relief which the bill passed by the Senate secured, and at the same time authorizes and requires steps to be taken to see if we cannot also relieve the Government from the payment of an unjust claim.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On the motion of Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 8, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Mitchell was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. THOMPSON. I offer the following resolution for the adoption of the House:

Resolved, That this day be appropriated, to the exclusion of all other business, to the call of the States, beginning with the State of Maine, for resolutions, and bills of which previous notice has been given, and upon which no debate shall be allowed.

Mr. GENTRY. Let us have reports from committees.

The SPEAKER. The introduction of the resolution is objected to.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Will it be in order to move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing that resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, for the reason that the bill for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Mitchell is now before the House on a motion to reconsider. When that is out of the way, it will be in order to submit the motion indicated.

POST ROADS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. PENN, by the unanimous consent of the House, submitted the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, in favor of the establishment of certain post roads in that State; which were read, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CLINGMAN called for the regular order of business.

Mr. ROBBINS. I hope the gentleman will allow me to offer certain joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DOTY objected.

Mr. CLARK. Will it not be in order to move for the suspension of the rules, with a view to the introduction of the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. THOMPSON?]

LIEUTENANT COLONEL MITCHELL.

The SPEAKER. It will not, until the bill for the relief of Colonel Mitchell, immediately before the House for consideration, is disposed of, it having been introduced under a suspension of the rules. The House is now called on to act upon that bill thus introduced.

Mr. STUART. I think the question pending is upon a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The question pending is a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. STUART. Will it be in order to move to postpone that subject?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it will be.

Mr. STUART. Then I make the motion to postpone it for thirty days.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. STUART. I understand, sir, that the Supreme Court will not sit again, to decide this question now before it, within thirty days, and if that be so, I will modify that motion to extend it to sixty days—to allow time for the Supreme Court to act upon the question before it. Now, I submit that it is reasonable for the friends of this measure—and I claim to be one of them—to proceed cautiously and prudently. If the Supreme Court of the United States reverse the original judgment rendered in New York, then relief can be sought against the judgment and execution in Missouri. But there is another reason, and it is this: There has not been one particle of evidence furnished to this Congress, so far as I have been enabled to learn, of the present condition of that judgment and execution in the State of Missouri. A report which is made to the Senate, and which is said to be a unanimous one, is the most meager thing imaginable. That committee reports unanimously that the judgment ought to be paid. They report there is an execution issued against the property of Colonel Mitchell; that it is levied upon; that there is danger of its being sacrificed, he bankrupted and ruined, and yet they do not furnish one particle of evidence to sustain that fact. And it will be seen that they speak of the impending difficulty existing then—that is, four months ago. It existed then, and every time this question has come up we have been urged to act precipitately, without reflection, without evidence, because there is an impending execution over the property of that agent—that it is about to bankrupt him. Now, if this has existed for four months—the same evil hanging over his property—it is time that there was evidence of it here. There is another fact which should not be lost sight of. It is not reasonable, nor has any gentleman here yet been able to furnish any evidence how it is reasonable, that judgment should be rendered against him if all was fair. I insist, and I do so with proper deference, that it becomes the House of Representatives to pause, and not to pass a law paying this judgment, which would put it beyond our reach even to get out of the difficulty, until we have some positive, incontrovertible evidence that the facts which are claimed to exist in this case, do in truth exist.

If Colonel Mitchell shall be compelled to pay this debt, and the Supreme Court shall reverse the judgment rendered in the city of New York, it would leave a remedy—the money can be recovered back by him; but if the Government of the United States pay the judgment, it would be gone forever. I am disposed to indemnify that man, and I am very strongly inclined to think that he should be indemnified; but I say, it is due to ourselves that we should have the proof, and not to go and precipitately consummate an act that never can be retrieved, and to do an injustice to this Government for the want of the proper evidence before us. I hope, therefore, that the House will take such action upon this subject as not to reject it—I do not wish that done—but that they will hold it within their power to postpone the consideration of it to a time when we can learn from Missouri what is the condition of things there, and to learn from the Supreme Court of the United States what they will do in regard to the original judgment. That there is a writ of error pending there is now thoroughly shown. It is beyond dispute; and the court have got to pass upon it. If they reverse the judgment, then there is no reason why we should pay the judgment in Missouri. If they shall affirm that judgment, why, sir, it will bedue when the court meets again on the first of April, or shortly after. It will be in ample time to save this man, to save his property, and to save the Government of the United States from an injustice that may happen if we act precipitately. All I suggest, therefore, to the consideration of the House is prudence, and a proper degree of discretion in this matter.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Speaker, there has been no disposition upon the part of the friends of this bill, I am sure, to precipitate the action of the House. The other day, while it was under consideration, a statement was made by me that no writ of error was pending—that it was abandoned. This statement was made upon the authority of the report of the Committee on Military Affairs in the Senate, which I then had before me. No one was more surprised than myself when the statement of the Clerk of the Supreme Court was read, showing that the case was still on the docket of that court. Since that time, by the kindness of one of the Judges, I have been furnished with his printed copy of the record, and now have it before me. If any relief is to be given Colonel Mitchell, it must be given early and promptly.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] now proposes that further action upon this bill shall be postponed for sixty days. That proposition I am bound to resist. The gentleman says that he desires to know what evidence we have of the judgment in the circuit court of St. Louis county. The report of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate states the fact. I presume no record was brought here from Missouri to prove it by that character of evidence, because during this winter a number of gentlemen, members of the bar, from St. Louis county—gentlemen conversant with the action of this court in St. Louis—were in this city, and I suppose the evidence upon which that statement in the report was made was obtained from them.

I admit this would not be legal testimony in a court of justice, nor do we require that. I take it for granted that no one will deny the existence of this judgment, and that it is the one against which Colonel Mitchell asks to be indemnified.

The property of Colonel Mitchell can and I fear will be sold under the execution issued upon the judgment which Harmony has obtained against him in the court in Missouri, unless we afford him relief. There is no power here to stay that judgment. I then will suggest to my friend that perhaps this bill may be so modified that not only relief may be afforded Mitchell, but at the same time the Treasury be guarded. Suppose this bill be modified by the House so as to provide that the Attorney General of the United States shall prosecute, in behalf of the United States, the writ of error pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and that he be also directed to take the necessary steps to stay further proceedings upon the judgment issued in Missouri against Mitchell, if it can be done; and in the event of being unsuccessful, that the judgment shall be liquidated by the money that we shall appropriate. Then you place the United States to defend Colonel Mitchell. You prosecute the suit, where Colonel Mitchell is the plaintiff in error, now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, and you really make the United States (though not in name) defendant in the judgment which now exists in Missouri.

But it is stated that this judgment might have been postponed, or stayed, by the action of the courts of Missouri. That could not have been done. No defense which existed prior to the rendition of the judgment of the circuit court in New York could be urged as a defense to the suit brought in that record in the courts of Missouri. Although Colonel Mitchell might have felt himself aggrieved by that judgment, still, so long as that judgment was unreversed and in force, he had no ground of defense against the suit which was pending against him in the St. Louis circuit court. But here let it be understood that in Missouri we have abolished the forms of action as they existed at common law, and our suits are commenced by petition, and that not only the plaintiff is required to verify the facts set forth in his petition, but the defendant is required to make answer to the allegations contained in the plaintiff's petition, and to verify his answer by affidavit. What defense could Mitchell make? None whatever. I say he had nothing, therefore, which he could urge in defense of that suit which was brought against him in St. Louis county, and judgment was bound to go against him. I desire that the gentleman who has made the suggestion shall be apprised of what may be the results in the event that you seek to enjoin that judgment obtained in Missouri: ten per cent. damages, besides costs, are allowed by the law of our State if the injunction should be dissolved.

Gentlemen have inquired why, since this case was taken up from the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York to the Supreme Court, there was not a stay of execution? Do you believe that a resident of the State of Missouri—no matter what his reputation for pecuniary responsibility may be—if he should be in the city of New York, and a judgment to the amount of $95,000 should there be rendered against him, could give security for double the amount of the judgment—say $190,000—in order to have a supersedeas of the execution? It could not be done. There are two methods by which you take a case to the Supreme Court. In one method there is a supersedeas; and that is where you give bond in double the amount of the judgment rendered, with security—the sufficiency of that security to be adjudged and determined by the court. In the other way, you may take an appeal during term time, or within ten days thereafter; in which event you have to give a bond, with security, for the costs of prosecuting the appeal. The very question of defense, and the very charge delivered by Judge Nelson in the trial of this case, has undergone the revision of the law officer of this Government, and I hold here in my hand the report made by the Solicitor of the Treasury—Mr. Clark—when he was called upon to examine into the propriety of prosecuting the case in the Supreme Court, or probability of a reversal of the judgment. His opinion upon that subject was given last winter. It is a pamphlet containing some twelve pages.

It will be recollected that this suit was pending in New York under the instructions of the Solicitor of the Treasury. Mr. Shepard, the then district attorney for the Southern district of New York, was directed to defend the case, and to aid Colonel Mitchell in his defense; and the whole record shows that Mr. Shepard was the attorney in that case, although Colonel Mitchell employed another gentleman by the name of Eager to aid in his defense. It appears that a transcript of the record was presented to Mr. Clark. He reviewed the case, and here follow the points which he makes upon a full examination. The record shows that the counsel for Mitchell excepted to the charge given by Judge Nelson to the jury, and the bill of exceptions is contained in the volume

I hold in my hand. The Solicitor of the Treasury remarks:

"Upon a full examination of the whole case, I conclude:

"1st. That there is no error in the charge of the court to the jury. If there was any error, it was one in favor of the defendant, to which he had no right to except.

"2d. There being no error in law, no dispute concerning the facts, (they having all been found by the jury,) it would be unjust to the parties to protract useless litigation; to Harmony, by delaying the payment of his demand found by the court and jury to be just; to Colonel Mitchell, by keeping suspended over him this heavy judgment, so well calculated to embarrass and discredit him.

"3d. If there be any error in the charge to which the defendant had a right to except, it must be found in that part of it which speaks of the existence of a public necessity, &c. Now, if the Supreme Court, having the case before it on a writ of error, should send down the case for a second trial for the reason that Colonel Mitchell did act under the pressure of such necessity, and was, therefore, justified in seizing the property for the public use, then in what better condition would be the Government? None. It would be bound to make just compensation to Harmony, instead of indemnifying Colonel Mitchell.

"4th. Should the case go to the Supreme Court, and the question of the right of impressment of private property under the law as it now exists be presented to it, I feel an entire confidence that they will decide that the right does not exist, and never can exist, until Congress shall confer it by law passed in pursuance of the Constitution. If so, Colonel Mitchell cannot avoid the payment of the judgment; and as he acted in obedience to the order of his superior officer, and the chief in command, in making the seizure; and as that order and seizure I have no doubt was issued and executed under the honest belief that the seizure of the property was necessary to the safety of the Army, (though in point of fact, as it subsequently appeared, such necessity did not exist,) the Government is bound, by every principle of justice, to stand between him and all loss."

In the decision of the court, it stated that the seizure of property took place some distance north of the place where the battle of Sacramento was fought. It was at the time, however, when Colonel Doniphan, with about nine hundred volunteers, was proceeding upon his march to the city of Chihuahua, a city containing a population of from twenty to twenty-five thousand inhabitants. Whilst on this march he received information that the Mexicans had assembled in large force and were prepared to give battle. The information was true, and the battle of Sacramento was shortly after fought, in which nine hundred of our volunteers were engaged against more than four thousand Mexicans. The traders and teamsters accompanying our army amounted to three hundred. They were organized by command of Colonel Doniphan into two companies, commanded by Captains Glasgow and Skillman, composing a battalion under the command of Colonel Owens, a trader from Missouri, who was killed in the battle of Sacramento.

The seizure of Harmony's goods was consummated when he was compelled by Colonel Mitchell to follow in the rear of the army, and when his teamsters were ordered (if the emergency should arise) to abandon the teams and whips, shoulder the rifle, and fight our enemies.

I therefore hope that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] will not prevail. If any relief is to be given Mitchell, it must be given speedily. I am willing to go as far as any man can go to protect the rights of the Government, and at the same time I ask that you protect the rights of the citizen. I am desirous of a full investigation of the question. I wish not to avoid it. I was importuned by my friends to shut out discussion. I do not wish it to be stated that Colonel Mitchell has called upon this House and the Congress of the United States to do an improper act.

Let me remark, that by the laws of our State, real estate can only be sold on execution during term time; and if the sheriff does not find sufficient real estate upon which to levy the execution, it would be his duty to levy upon personal property of the defendant, and that can be sold upon ten days' public notice. Harmony has the entire control of this judgment, and from this time forward no indulgence to Mitchell can be expected.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. If I understood him to say he would be satisfied if this bill could be so modified that the Attorney General of the United States, in the name of Mitchell, should be authorized to prosecute the suit in the Supreme Court, and also obtain a stay of execution upon the judgment in Missouri?

Mr. PHELPS. Yes, sir; I said this. I am satisfied if we could, by our act here, substitute the Government as plaintiff, and also direct the Attorney General, or some other officer of the Government, to defend Mitchell against that judgment obtained in Missouri; and in the event the defense is unsuccessful, then to appropriate money to pay the judgment. I will be satisfied with that, and it is all I ask for.

Mr. STUART. I move to amend by postponing the matter to the first Monday in May, so that it may come upon a Monday.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I imagine that the object which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] seeks to obtain, will not be reached by the postponement which he moves. It is evident that this case has been recently tried in the circuit court of New York. It stands as a recent case upon the calendar of the Supreme Court, and every gentleman who is acquainted with the situation of that, must be aware that no action of the Supreme Court will be had upon this case until long after the time to which the gentleman moves to postpone this matter shall have expired. In that view of the case, and inasmuch as the friends of the bill are willing it shall be so modified, as the rights of the Government upon one hand may be perfectly protected by the action of their very able Attorney General—and at the same time an investigation may be had in this matter—and, if possible, which I presume can be done, the interests of the party who appeals here, Mr. Mitchell, may be protected, if this writ of error is intended to be seriously prosecuted in the Supreme Court, which will test the merits of the case, there can be no difficulty in staying the proceedings upon the judgment of the court of the State of Missouri. It seems, therefore, if the House will take such action upon this bill as to meet the views which have been stated by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] justice would be done to every party, and the interests of the Government would be protected. The interests of this individual, whose services have been stated to be highly meritorious, will be protected, and there surely can be no objection by the Government to such a course. If upon an investigation upon the merits of this case, which will come up in the argument upon the writ of error, it shall turn out that there is error, and the judgment be reversed, there will be an end of the matter, and the case will be decided upon its merits. The only suspicion that has arisen in reference to this matter, it strikes me, has arisen from the fact, that the individual whose property was originally taken is said to have been willing to have received a far smaller amount in satisfaction of damages than has been now recovered against Colonel Mitchell. Every gentleman who is acquainted with the manner in which these matters are presented and disposed of here, and with the rules of evidence which would apply to cases of this kind in an investigation, according to the strict rules of law in court, will see at once that this might well exist, and an individual might be willing to take upon the immediate action of the Government a smaller sum, which would cover about his outlay of expenditure upon these goods; whereas if he was driven into a court of justice and was obliged to defend his case, he would insist upon all that the rules of law would give him, and those would give him the full, the enhanced value of all these goods that were taken from him and destroyed by Colonel Mitchell.

A VOICE. They were not destroyed.

Mr. SEYMOUR. Whatever it may have been, they were taken out of his possession, and he lost the value of them at any rate. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] will not prevail, and that the House will now reconsider the vote by which the bill has been ordered to a third reading, and that the amendment which has been indicated by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] will be adopted, and then complete justice can be done to all parties, and the rights of all secured.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order to ask the previous question upon this motion to postpone?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I make such motion?

Mr. PHELPS. I learn that the gentleman from Alabama asks for the previous question. I only desire to know whether it will extend further than the question to postpone?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided the other day that the previous question did apply only to the question to postpone, which decision was sustained by the House. Upon looking into the law relating to that subject, however, the Chair is disposed to doubt the correctness of that decision.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to know what is the decision of the Chair now upon the subject—how far does it extend?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. What will be the effect of the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It will bring the House to a direct vote; first upon the question of postponement, and if that fails, upon the reconsideration of the bill.

Mr. MARSHALL. I appeal to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] to withdraw his call for the previous question. I promise to say all I have to say within five minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am very anxious to dispose of the bill and proceed to other business. I will, however, withdraw the call for the previous question for five minutes in favor of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL.]

Mr. MARSHALL. I now ask that the substitute for the bill, which I have sent to the Chair, may be read.

It was read by the Clerk, as follows:

That it shall be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the writ of error pending before the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of D. D. Mitchell vs. M. X. Harmony, without cost to the plaintiff in error.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Attorney General be and he is hereby directed to cause such chancery, or other proceedings, to be instituted in the name of D. D. Mitchell vs. M. X. Harmony, or his assignees, before the proper court at St. Louis, Missouri, as shall stay proceedings upon a certain judgment at law, in the name of said Harmony against said Mitchell, until the rendition of an opinion by the Supreme Court of the United States upon the writ of error aforesaid, and it shall be the duty of said Secretary of the Treasury to cause such security to be entered by the United States as shall indemnify and save said Mitchell harmless against said judgment.

Be it enacted, That whenever the Attorney General of the United States shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, that the writ of error in the cause aforesaid has failed, or that no further steps can be taken at law or in equity, whereby to avoid the payment of said judgment in favor of said Harmony, rendered in the State of Missouri, then it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he is hereby authorized to liquidate and satisfy said judgment, damages, and costs, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. M. continued. If I can have the ear of the House for five minutes I think I can make the merits of this substitute understood.

A VOICE. We understand them already. There is no need for explanation.

Mr. MARSHALL. The gentleman says there is no need for explanation. If my amendment covers, then, the proper view of the case, I hope I shall be allowed to offer it, and that it will be adopted. I will state that I have looked into the record in relation to this case, and for one, I will not vote for the payment of this money so long as there is a chance for reversing the judgment in relation to that case. I hope the motion to postpone will be voted down, unless the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] will consent to withdraw it.

Mr. STUART. I have no objection to withdrawing my motion to postpone, if the gentleman's object can be effected by it. If I understand the order of business—my motion being withdrawn—the question will recur upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and should that prevail the gentleman's substitute will be in order.

The SPEAKER. The substitute will then be in order.

Mr. STUART. Then I will withdraw the motion to postpone.

The question was then taken, and the House agreed to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. MARSHALL. I now offer my amendment as a substitute for the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes, before the amendment is received, the question must be taken on reconsidering the vote ordering the main question to be put.

Mr. HALL. Can the amendment not be offered by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent the entire action under the previous question may be considered.

There was no objection, and the amendment was then declared to be in order.

Mr. HEBARD. I believe the question now pending is upon the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. OLDS. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HALL. I thought the previous question had been called upon this amendment.

The SPEAKER. So it had, but by unanimous consent it was set aside in order to admit the amendment.

Mr. HALL. I understood that unanimous consent was given for the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] to introduce his amendment merely, but not to interfere with the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand it. The Chair understood the proposition, and so propounded it, that unanimous consent should be given to remove the operation of the previous question altogether.

Mr. HEBARD. I was proceeding to remark, that if I understood the purport of the substitute I should not be in favor of it. So far as I understand the nature of the claim, the great question with me is as to its amount, and I desire a further opportunity of inquiring into it before it is finally acted upon. The effect of the substitute, as I understand it, will be to have a writ of error prosecuted for the purpose of showing whether or not the judgment of the court below was made up properly or not. It was stated the other day by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] that from a conversation he had with Judge Nelson, he learned the fact that the question litigated in the circuit court before him was in relation to the validity of the claim, but not in relation to the amount, but that the amount was agreed upon by the parties. It was stated upon this floor the other day when this bill was before the House, that the plaintiff in the suit, Mr. Harmony, had offered to take $30,000 for his claim, and the fact was not contradicted. Now, if this be true, I desire to know why a judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $95,000? I have looked into the schedule prepared in the case to see if I could find any reason for this judgment. I find that the estimates for the property taken on the occasion to which it relates are made out in round numbers. It consisted for the most part of what is called bleached shirting, and the amount is made out in round numbers at the rate of thirty-one and one quarter cents per yard. The quality of the cloth is not in any way shown, but it is to be presumed that—

Mr. PHELPS. I think I can explain in regard to that matter. The value of the property, established by the testimony taken in the case, was $95,000, and was based upon the price the goods were worth in that country at the time and place they were taken. That testimony shows the value of the goods, with the interest upon the amount, up to the time of the rendition of the judgment.

Mr. HEBARD. I can only say in relation to it, that I have the documentary evidence before me, and it does not bear out any such conclusions. I will state the facts which are contained in this document. It says the property consisted mostly of unbleached shirting cotton, estimated at thirty-one and a quarter cents per yard. Now, that is a species of merchandise of which all of us know something. We know that the article which is here estimated at thirty-one and a quarter cents per yard, is worth from eight to ten cents.

A Voice. Less than that.

Mr. HEBARD. I am aware that it can be bought for much less than that, but I did not choose to put it at the lowest prices. I presume this was an article which could be bought for six and a quarter cents per yard. Now, what will be the actual expenses of transporting these goods from the place in which they were purchased to Chihuahua, I will not pretend to say. I do not know; but I do not believe the cost of transportation would equal the price at which the cloth was purchased. I come to this conclusion, and I do not believe any gentleman upon this floor can come to any other, from the proof furnished. This $95,000, then, must come from some other source than this property; for even at the price at which it is estimated, it will only amount to about $80,000. I say, I do not believe a single gentleman in this House can come to any other conclusion than that this property was valued at more than one hundred per cent. above its actual value. And before I can vote to have this claim allowed and paid, as I said before, I want to know upon what ground, upon what basis, a judgment was rendered against Colonel Mitchell for $95,000? Perhaps it can be explained; but I am not willing to vote this money until I can have some proof, other than that which I now possess, that it ought to be paid. I think some investigation should be made into the matter. If I am correctly informed, Colonel Mitchell made an agreement in relation to the amount of damages to which Harmony was entitled.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman is mistaken in regard to the facts. Colonel Mitchell made no agreement in regard to the damages. The testimony shows the amount of damages, and the judgment was rendered, I believe, upon the evidence of three witnesses, who testify that the price which was allowed was the price at which the property was valued in Chihuahua at the time it was taken.

Mr. HEBARD. I should like to know of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] where this testimony was taken, because the facts he states do not corroborate those which I have before me.

Mr. PHELPS. The testimony was taken by virtue of a commission issued from the circuit court of the Southern district of the State of New York. A portion of it was taken in the State of Missouri, a portion in New York city, and a part of it, the testimony of one witness, either in New Mexico or Chihuahua. I speak of the testimony which was before the court, and not of that which was taken in support of Harmony's memorial to Congress for relief.

Mr. HEBARD. I was proceeding in my argument upon the assumption that the statement of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] in relation to the manner in which the judgment was rendered, was correct; and in connection with that, I took occasion to refer to the value put upon his own goods by Mr. Harmony at the time he presented his claim to Congress for relief.

Mr. PHELPS. I will state the testimony of John Gracia, who was sworn as a witness upon the trial in the city of New York. He states he is acquainted with the traders, and familiar with the quality and price of goods in the Mexican trade. His statement is merely in relation to the value of some particular goods. The testimony of Mr. Low shows that the value of the goods, and of the mules and wagons taken near El Paso, was $75,263 94, estimated according to the price there. That the interest from the 10th of February, 1847, to the 10th of September, 1850, at the rate of seven per cent., is $19,129 56, making in the aggregate $95,393 49. The whole judgment was for some $90,000.

Mr. HEBARD. The explanation of the gentleman has not relieved my mind upon the point raised by me in the slightest degree. Now, this case does not show upon what ground the estimate of the value of that property was founded. By looking at the schedule, it will be seen, as I stated before, that it is made up mainly of cotton goods, unbleached shirtings, put by the bale, at the price of thirty-one and a quarter cents per yard. Now, I wish to know upon what basis, either of the witness or of the claimant himself, he puts a price of thirty-one and a quarter cents to cloth of that description, which every gentleman who is acquainted with the article, knows can be purchased anywhere in the United States at from six to ten cents per yard. Now, I have not much more to say upon this claim, but I wish to know upon what ground such a judgment was rendered in the court of New York.

Mr. PHELPS. In relation to the value of this property, permit me to read an extract from a deposition taken in the city of Chihuahua, before William A. Hereford, Commissioner. It is from the deposition of José Maria Uriá Naffarondo:

"To the sixth interrogatory he saith: That such goods as the plaintiff left at Chihuahua could have been sold and did sell in the city and State of Chihuahua, in and for several months previous to the month of February, 1847, at the following prices: the bleached shirting at thirty-one and a quarter cents per vara, the prints at thirty-one and a quarter cents per vara, the brown shirting at thirty-one and a quarter cents per vara." The prices of various other articles are also given by this witness.

The witness testifies to the price of these goods in the month of February, in the city of Chihuahua, within whose limits those goods were taken. He further testifies that he examined those goods at the time they were there in the custody of those troops, and he also made an inventory of them in the month of February or March, 1847. The number of yards is specified. It shows the number of bales, and the number of yards in each bale of the various articles taken. The prices of the other articles were furnished by the testimony of Arango and Oliver.

Mr. HEBARD. It has turned out as I supposed it would when investigating the testimony, and it conforms to the supposition I had before. The testimony of these witnesses, whose names I did not attempt to pronounce, says that this kind of property, of which I am speaking, has been sold in Chihuahua for thirty-one and a quarter cents per yard.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman misunderstands me. The testimony was "that such goods have been sold," not that these goods have been sold.

Mr. HEBARD. The gentleman misunderstood me. I so stated, or intended to. What these goods could have been sold for is not known. He only says that goods like these could have been sold for that price. Now, this whole matter shows most conclusively to my mind that there has been an entire fictitious value placed upon these articles for some purpose; whether for the benefit of Harmony, or whether Colonel Mitchell is to share in the enormous profits to be made upon them out of the Government in case this judgment is paid by it, I do not undertake to say; but I undertake to say that there is an attempt here to do that which, if successful, will be an enormous swindle, in my judgment, upon the Government. These goods are valued at a price three or four times the cost of them here.

Now look at this matter a little further. There is some other property besides these cotton goods; and all this property together, estimated at the exorbitant and unreasonable price put upon it by the claimant, amounts to only about $62,000. There were a few mules also taken, and those he estimates at $100 a piece. That is a kind of property of which I know little. He also claims, for damages done to the mules and wagons while in the charge of Colonel Doniphan, the round sum of $5,000. How many there were, and what the damage was, does not appear. The damage which he claims is stated to be seventy-five per cent. upon the whole value, and the whole value is at the rate of about $100 each; in other words, he claims for damages done these mules, $75 each.

Another item in this bill is, expenses for his men and animals while in the charge of Colonel Doniphan, $5,000 in round numbers, without going into details of what those expenses consisted. He has charged for thirteen months, $6000; or for six months extra, $4,000 more. Now, sir, take his own bills which he has made out, take the estimates he has put upon his own property, and take the interest upon it—it all amounts to only a little more than $87,000. And deduct from this $5,000, which is less duties—I do not understand what it means—it leaves the whole gross amount at $82,000.

Mr. PHELPS. In New Mexico and Chihuahua, they charged duties upon their goods by the wagon load. They charged the specific duty of $500 upon every wagon load of goods introduced into New Mexico, without regard to their value. This duty upon ten wagon loads would amount to $5,000, which Harmony did not have to pay.

Mr. HEBARD. The matter of duty did not disturb me at all. What I want to know now is, upon what ground, and by what reason, and upon what proof there should have been decreed by the court a judgment for $95,000—some $13,000 more than Harmony claimed of Congress? All that I know of this case is from an examination I made of it a few days ago when it came up for investigation. I feel no sort of interest in it, and have no feeling about it; but when sums as large as this are proposed to be drawn from the Treasury, I choose to know that there is, at least, no fraud and no fraudulent means made use of to swell up that amount. I hope, therefore, that before this amendment shall have been adopted, the bill will be sent back to some committee, or left in some shape by which there can be made a further investigation and report of the facts upon which this claim is based for our action.

Mr. PHELPS. I demand the previous question. The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put; which main question was first on the amendment.

The question was then taken upon adopting the amendment by way of a substitute for the bill; and it was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon ordering the amendment to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time; and it was agreed to.

The bill was then read the third time, and the question now being, "Shall the bill pass?"—

Mr. PHELPS demanded the previous question. Mr. MEACHAM. I wish to understand the form of the bill as it is now amended.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read for the information of the House.

The bill was then read through by the Clerk—being the substitute of Mr. MARSHALL, as published in a preceding column.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. GOODENOW demanded the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill; which were not ordered.

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. THOMPSON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That this day be appropriated, to the exclusion of all other business, to the call of States, beginning with the State of Maine, for resolutions and bills of which previous notice has been given, and upon which no debate shall be allowed.

Mr. ORR objected.

Mr. THOMPSON moved a suspension of the rules for the purpose of enabling him to introduce the resolution just indicated.

The question was then taken—there being upon a division—ayes 80, noes 42.

Mr. FOWLER called for tellers, which were ordered.

Mr. CARTTER. I wish to inquire whether the order proposed for calling the States in that resolution begins with the State last called, or goes back to the first?

The SPEAKER. It proposes to commence with the State of Maine.

Mr. DISNEY. I wish to be informed what State will be called, if we proceed to the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that South Carolina was last called.

Mr. DISNEY. How many States had been called up to that time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can count for himself.

Mr. BRENTON. I desire to say, in reference to this question—

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. BRENTON. I do not wish to, but merely to present a question of order, and it is this: Whether this resolution does not suspend the standing rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. Certainly, if adopted.

Mr. BRENTON. It is provided that no amendment to the rules shall be introduced without one day's previous notice being given.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that by a special rule of the body, it is in order to move to suspend the rules of the House for particular purposes on Mondays, and only then. The Chair thinks that there can be no question in regard to the legitimacy of the resolution proposed.

Mr. BRENTON. Another point is, that the resolution provides that the Speaker shall commence with the State of Maine, whereas the rule requires that he shall commence where he left off at the last call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, for the information of the House and the gentleman, that if this resolution be adopted, it will, in his opinion, exclude the motion to suspend the rules for this day, and this order of the House will be executed to the exclusion of all other business, which is the calling of the States for resolutions and for bills of which previous notice had been given, and upon which the House must decide without debate. That is the effect of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Then, as I understand, if this resolution is adopted, it commencing with Maine, allows every member to introduce his resolution and his bill without discussion or any further trouble. Thus States can get in their resolutions and bills.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I wish to make an inquiry, if the Chair will answer, and I can get it in no other way: Whether, since the commencement of this Congress, the States have ever been called through?

The SPEAKER. They have not been.

Mr. JOHNSON. Thus we go back always to the beginning, and some States never will be called. It is not right.

Mr. KING, of New York, demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. ORR. Is it in order to move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is not, while the motion is pending to suspend the rules—this being Monday, and that motion being in order. But the Chair further states that it would be in order to move to go into the Committee if there was not already pending a motion to suspend the rules for a different purpose.

The yeas and nays were then ordered.

Mr. FLORENCE. If this motion is voted down, will it not be in order to call the States for resolutions, beginning at where the Speaker left off on the last day?

The SPEAKER. That will be the effect.

The question was then taken upon the suspension of the rules, and decided in the negative—yeas 56, nays 121; as follow:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, John Appleton, William Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Beale, Bell, Bennett, Bissell, Breckinridge, Albert G. Brown, Busby, Chandler, Cobb, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dockery, Edmundson, Faulkner, Fitch, Florence, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gentry, Gorman, Hall, Hamilton, Hendricks, Houston, Howard, Thomas M. Stevens, Stratton, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Townshend, Wallace, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Wildrick, Woodward, and Yates—121.

So the rules were not suspended—two thirds not voting therefor.

SALES OF SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, authorizing the Legislature of the State of Mississippi to sell the lands heretofore appropriated for the use of schools in that State, and to ratify and approve the sales already made.

It was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he will not yield the floor until I can make a motion to postpone for a day or two, or indefinitely, the special order that is now up for discussion before the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up the deficiency bill?

Mr. HALL. I will not yield to any such proposition as that. I think this bill is a matter of more importance than the deficiency bill, a great deal.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

[A message was then received from the Senate at the hands of ASBURY DICKENS, Esq., their Secretary.]

HOMESTEADS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 7, for the encouragement of agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and other branches of industry, by granting to every man, &c., one hundred and sixty acres of land.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FITCH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FITCH said, that if, upon examining the bill under consideration, he should find it sufficiently guarded to prevent frauds, his vote would be cast in its favor.

He then proceeded to review the various subjects referred to in the President's message, and said that in so doing he should not attempt or wish to intimate any charge against the President, or anything against his character as a citizen or a man, neither would he charge him with corruption. He respected Mr. Fillmore as a man and an officer, but considered many of his acts and recommendations as the result of erroneous opinions and of a policy injurious to the public.

He then alluded to our foreign policy, as set forth in the message, and thought that the President correctly adhered to the doctrine of non-intervention. He, however, condemned the course pursued by the Administration in relation to the invasion of Cuba, and censured the President for his outlawry proclamation, which withdrew all protection in advance. There could be no doubt that had the President insisted that all of the citizens who were embarked in that enterprise who might be captured should have a fair trial, such as existing treaties entitled them to, and many lives and much suffering might have been avoided. Great Britain was never known to abandon her citizens, but always insisted upon the fulfillment of treaty stipulations, and it was because that country did protect the lives and rights of her citizens that her flag was so universally respected. He did not justify the invasion of Cuba, but desired to see it defeated.

He next reviewed that part of the message relating to our domestic policy, and said that to that portion of it which related to the compromise he took no exception. It breathed a spirit which offered every desirable assurance of domestic tranquillity and the perpetuity of our Government. The compromise having been passed, surely no right-minded citizen could desire to see reproduced all that excitement which accompanied its discussion and the questions connected with it. The Democrats of the North had everywhere, through their press, their conventions, their candidates, (State and Presidential,) with exceptions so few and far between as to be insignificant, not only evinced their willingness to abide by the compromise, but declared their intention to sustain it. But how was it with the Whigs? Some opposed the compromise, and others lent it but a lukewarm support.

Mr. F. then referred to that portion of the message which relates to the tariff and finances, and said that the President made no urgent appeal for a modification of the tariff, for he looked to little else than a change of duties from ad valorem to specific. When it was taken into consideration that this lukewarm recommendation came from a man who was the principal advocate of the tariff of 1842, it spoke volumes for the tariff of 1846. It might well be questioned whether the President's views had not undergone a change, for he evinced too much good sense in other matters still to hold the antiquated tariff opinions of that period.

In reference to the finances, they appeared to be in a very prosperous condition, and the predictions of the Whigs of deficiencies under the present tariff were classed among the predictions of the prophet Baal. He then referred to the estimates of deficiencies made by the Secretaries under the administration of General Taylor and Mr. Fillmore, and said that instead of deficiencies surpluses have always occurred. He contrasted the views of Mr. Corwin on the tariff, and spoke of the large expenditures of the present Administration, declaring that it sought to cast its own pecuniary malfiance upon the preceding Administration.

[See Appendix for Mr. Fitch's speech.]
Mr. WILCOX next obtained the floor.

Mr. NABERS. With the permission of my colleague, as it is growing late, I move that the committee rise.

Which motion was agreed to.

The committee rose accordingly, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 7, to encourage agriculture, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will ask the House to allow me to report the Army appropriation bill, which I have had in my desk for some two weeks, in order that it may be printed.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported "A bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1853;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

IOWA ON THE COMPROMISE MEASURES.

Mr. CLARK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to introduce joint resolutions from the Legislature of the State of Iowa respecting the compromise.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK. I believe, by the rules and custom of the House, it will be my privilege to submit a few remarks explanatory of the resolutions. I will ask the Chair whether it is not in order, by the rules, when a resolution is offered briefly to state its contents?

The SPEAKER. It is. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not wish to interfere with the remarks the gentleman from Iowa proposes to make at all; but for the sake of a precedent I would ask him if it would not be better to send up the resolutions and to discuss them upon the proposition to print? Until the proposition to print is made, the gentleman, I suppose, cannot be permitted to discuss the resolutions or their contents.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa is only entitled, as the question now stands, to a brief statement of the contents of the resolutions.

Mr. CLARK. I move that the resolutions be printed.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE called for the reading.

The resolutions were then read as follow:

Preamble and resolutions in reference to the compromise measures passed by the Congress of the United States:

Whereas, The Congress of the United States at its last session adopted a series of acts known as the compromise measures, and whereas there has been manifested throughout portions of the North and South a disposition to set a portion of said acts at defiance, and thereby declare an open resistance to the power of the Government and its laws: and whereas, in view of our duty to the Government and for the purpose of showing to all portions of the Union our firm and unyielding devotion to its cause and its institutions, we deem proper to make some public demonstration of our views and feelings: therefore

Resolved, That in the opinion of this General Assembly, "the Constitution of the United States is a compact, a fundamental treaty," and that in order to our continued prosperity and happiness, that the Constitution and the laws of the land must be respected and obeyed.

Resolved, That we will give no countenance or aid to those North, or South, who set up "their own rule of conduct" in opposition to, and as being higher than the Constitution; and while we would give the largest latitude to thought, speech, and action, yet such an avowal we regard as meriting unmixt condemnation; its inevitable tendency being hazardous to that union which we hereby declare ourselves bound to maintain by any and all means in our power.

Resolved, That whatever may be the opinions of individuals as to the policy or details of said compromise measures, yet it is the duty of every good citizen to conform to their requisitions and carry them out in good faith; seeking their modification or repeal, if such should be necessary, in the manner contemplated by the Constitution and laws.

Resolved, That the Constitution should be our guide, "and in questions of doubt we should look for its interpretation to the judicial decisions of the tribunal which was established to expound it, and to the usages of the Government sanctioned by the acquiescence of the country;" that all its provisions are equally binding; that it is the will of the people expressed in the most solemn form; that no pretense of utility, no honest conviction even of what might be expedient can justify "the assumption of any power not granted, or the violation of its provisions;" and that we deem it our first duty not to "invade its requirements or nullify its commands."

Resolved, That the Secretary of State is hereby directed to forward a copy of these resolutions to the Governors of each State and Territory, and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved, January 23, 1851.

Mr. CLARK. However reluctant I may be to detain the House with any remarks of my own, I think it due to the source whence these resolutions come to submit a few reflections respecting their character. I suppose that it can hardly fail to be matter of interest to know what the opinions of the people of a State are respecting great subjects which have agitated and divided the public mind. The language of these resolutions is, that it is the duty of every good citizen to conform to the requisitions of the acts of compromise, and to carry them out in good faith. Here is a principle—a moral principle worthy of the consideration of all, worthy to be enforced upon every American mind, until its force shall be felt by all, and none shall deny its truth. It is said that the acts which emanate from the National Legislature rest upon the Constitution as their foundation, and this is undoubtedly true; but another question arises of no small importance, and that is, upon what does the Constitution itself rest? It is a superstructure—it is but a created thing. What underlies its foundations and sustains it? It is that principle which is set forth in these resolutions, namely, good faith—that good faith which metes out to all their rights—the full measure of their legal, specific, and covenanted rights. It has been often said, that every system of laws rests upon something external for its support. This is unquestionably true, and we know what that foreign thing is. In almost all other Governments except this, it is the soldier's arm, and the bayonet wielded by the soldier, and both wielded by the will of a single mind. But it is different here. The very nature of this Government is such as to repel the principle of force in its support and execution. It is an emanation of the will of the people; and the very idea of force applied to the freedom of will is both unreasonable and contradictory. What are the enactments of law but the will of Government?—and what is the will of Government but the will of the people? And, if there be opposing interests—as there always will be in so great a country—the safety of the whole requires the sacred upholding of those laws which embrace and grant relative protection to them all—and this is to be found in the observance of good faith on the part of each section towards the other. And when this shall be obliterated and destroyed, there is no sure foundation upon which such a Government as this can rest. Force in a Government like this is to be employed only against its enemies, which are never supposed to be "of its own household." It is true that you may put down a rebellion like that of Shay's, in Massachusetts, by military force. You may quell an insurrection like that which existed in Pennsylvania, denominated the whisky insurrection, by military force. But whenever the military force of this Government shall be arrayed against the military force of a State Government, and a drop of blood shall be spilt or a blow struck, there will be wounds created so deep that no time can heal, resentments so flagrant that no grace can pardon, and ruin so wide-spread that no wisdom can reconstruct.

I believe there is such a thing as morality of law; not that morality alone which determines the character of law, but that which commands obedience to the provisions of law. It arises upon the enactment of law, it is coextensive with it, it subsists with it; and from its obligations there is no escape. It is true that the casuist and carper may conceive that they can ask hard questions as to what shall be done in case Congress shall enact laws that are flagitious and immoral in their character. I answer, that if the supposition were possible, it is the duty of every citizen to obey.

Mr. HEBARD, (interrupting.) I rise to inquire whether any question is before the House?

The SPEAKER. A motion to print.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. The resolutions have never been received.

Mr. HEBARD. I would inquire whether the resolutions had been received?

The SPEAKER. They had been received by unanimous consent.

Mr. CABELL. They were only read for information.

The SPEAKER. I am informed it was the understanding of my predecessor, who temporarily filled the chair, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] that they were received by the House.

Mr. CLARK, (resuming.) I was proceeding to say that there might be those who might ask questions which they would conceive hard to be answered. I know but one rule of action, and that is universal for every individual, for every mind. There is no such thing as rightful resistance to law, while law is law. To contend for any other doctrine would be to make war upon all law, and to reduce law to anarchy, and nothing else; for that is no law which some feel bound in conscience to obey, and others think they may rightfully disobey, and do disobey. It is easy enough to float smoothly on when no adverse interests are met, when no prejudices are stirred; but when, in the course of the rightful government of law, these obstacles are met, what is it that is to cleave them down and suffer you to progress? It is nothing short of that good faith which is set forth in these resolutions, and which guarantees to all their rights according to the letter and the spirit of the Constitution; and it is precisely this which has made this country stand out in unrivaled individuality before the world and upon the page of history; and it is precisely for the lack of this that so many nations, struggling for freedom, have fallen so far in arrear of the best hopes and expectations of those who would have cheered them on to the proud position which we occupy.

There was no good faith on the part of the Grecian States. A spirit of rivalry and selfishness overrode and destroyed their confederation. They first destroyed themselves, and were then destroyed by a common enemy. They lacked that good faith which, as the common bond of union, as the great fountain of preservation, might have saved them from the conquering Roman. Had Poland been united in her counsels and her leaders, I am not sure that it could have been proved to this day that she might not have successfully resisted the Russian and the Austrian together. And what has been the bane of poor Hungary? It has been more the want of devotion to one another; more the existence of intestine, than foreign foes. And what of poor, pitiable, unfortunate, despised France? The ambition of an unprincipled leader, and the magic of a mere name, have trampled under foot the good faith of the Constitution, and removed her at a greater distance from constitutional freedom than she ever was before. It is well nigh as impossible to uproot the institutions and destroy the nationality of a people who are bound to each other by the fellowship of good faith, as it is to tear asunder the everlasting hills. We have experienced scenes of excitement and trouble here. We have seen danger in the prospective, and we have shrunk from those scenes. Yet they have passed by, and not a stone has been removed from the foundation, nor scarcely a tile from the roof; and the result is to be found in one single fact, and that is—obedience to law.

But, perhaps, it may be inquired if the people of the State whence I come need the cold and imperious teachings of duty to cause them to submit to the enactments of law? I would answer, that is true only in limited circles. And gentlemen will be prepared to believe the truth of what I state, when they know that the people of Iowa have always been found in the course of public duty, and that no political heresy has stained her public councils, or marked her public course. She has trod in the same path in which the fathers trod. In those paths she delights to walk, and in them she will continue to walk. She has not taken for her guidance the "higher law" doctrine, falsely so called, "which leads to bewilder and dazzles to blind." But the higher law of truth she delights to honor, and this is that law:

"Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers, for there is no power but of God; the powers that be are ordained of God.

"Whoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation—for rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou, then, not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good, and thou shalt have praise of the same."

We all know that among the measures known as the compromise measures, that denominated the fugitive slave law presented the most difficulty. I would not here touch any string which could vibrate to discord, and I hope that I shall not do so; but perhaps I ought in candor to say, that our people are no admirers of the special institutions of the South, but they are willing that the people of the South should manage their own affairs in their own way. We do not seek to dictate to them; we do not seek to bring them under tutelage to us. Our people have learned obedience to law and social duty. In the midst of those great principles where they have learned to forbear to say to their neighbor, "Stand by thyself, for I am holier than thou"—where they have learned to forbear to make themselves "busy bodies in other men's matters"—where they have learned to reject "profane and old wives' fables," and where they have learned to yield assent to the great truth that "the powers that be are ordained of God."

Sir, it is upon the broad platform of the Constitution that we meet our brethren from the other side of a certain line, and we are willing to meet them upon that platform in all social duties, and in all duties which are required in our relations to the Constitution, to the law, and to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, with this feeling upon the part of our people, with this devotion to the Constitution and the Union as they exist, you will be prepared to believe that they were weighed down with feelings of anxiety and trouble, when but two years ago anarchy almost reigned in this high place of legislation; when cool, discriminating, far-seeing, patriotic Senators could not discover the soundings, or see even the twilight that comes before the morning.

But, sir, there was encouragement in the fact that these men stood as firm as the pillars which surround you—that they abated nothing of their energy, nothing of their hope, nothing of their faith, nothing of their works. And at last the morning did come, and brought light with it; and we are willing to rejoice in that light. It may be that these remarks will be regarded as of little value by some, and perhaps they may be so regarded with propriety; but I cannot forbear to say that it is the fate of human conditions to be attended with murmurings. The best were not exempt from them. They were found in the midst of that people of ancient days, who above all others were favored by an overruling Providence—who were led by more than land-marks of human wisdom, by the "pillar of cloud and the pillar of fire"—and when in their necessities they were bounteously fed by a hand above them, without care and without labor, while yet the flesh was between their teeth they murmured. And when the law was being given them for their protection, and to better their condition, they preferred a calf to their God. And if all the minutiae of their history could be known, I think it possible they might have murmured even at the passage of the Red sea—murmured because the walls of water were not removed a little further apart, or because the spray was permitted to invest them, or because the stones were not all removed from the bottom. But, sir, we would rather take up the spirit of the song which was then and there sung: "right hath triumphed gloriously; the horse and his rider are cast into the sea."

Mr. HEBARD. I would inquire if the question is on the motion to print?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HEBARD. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken, and the resolutions were ordered to be printed.

SCHOOL LANDS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. COBB. I have a set of resolutions from the Legislature of Alabama, relative to a grant of land for school purposes in lieu of valueless sixteenth sections in the said State, which I desire to present and have them referred to the appropriate committee. I will state that that committee has other similar resolutions under consideration, and I wish to have these presented now, and I wish the unanimous consent of the House for that purpose.

Mr. ORR. Does the gentleman want to make a speech upon them?

Mr. COBB. Certainly not. I only want to refer them.

There was no objection, and they were accordingly presented and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit certain resolutions passed by a meeting of soldiers of the war of 1812, in the city of Philadelphia, in regard to bounty land. I ask that they may be read.

Objection was made.

On motion of Mr. ORR, the House then adjourned to twelve o'clock to-morrow.

NOTICE OF BILLS.

By Mr. HEBARD: A bill entitled "An act to grant bounty land to Zachariah Bossett, for services and privations in the revolutionary war."

Also, a bill entitled "An act to place the name of Garner Rix on the list of revolutionary pensioners."

By Mr. PARKER, of Indiana: The petition of James Smith, William H. Vanneman, and 121 others, citizens of Wayne county, Indiana, praying that the Woodworth patent be not extended; that no act be passed legalizing the reissue of the patent upon the amended specification of 1845; and no general law for the relief of patentees, which shall enable a particular patentee to crush all others by a single suit.

By Mr. SCHERMERHORN: The remonstrance of Alfred Hoyt and others, of Monroe county, New York, against the further extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. McLANAHAN: The memorial of Mrs. Sarah M. Smead, of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, widow of Captain Raphael C. Smead, deceased, late of the fourth regiment of the United States artillery, praying for a continuation of her pension of $20 per month, for the services of her deceased husband.

IN SENATE.

Tuesday, March 9, 1842.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

A message was received from the President of the United States, transmitting to Congress a dispatch addressed to the Secretary of State by the Minister of the United States at Mexico, and the papers therein referred to, relative to the cemetery which has been constructed in the neighborhood of that city, as a place of sepulture for the remains of the officers and soldiers of the United States who died or were killed in that vicinity during the late war, and for such citizens of the United States as may hereafter die there. Also, a copy of the report of the agent who was sent for the purpose of superintending the work, from which it appears that $2,500 or $3,000 are required in addition to the amount already appropriated by act of Congress, to carry the object of that appropriation into full effect. The message was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A message was also received from the President of the United States, transmitting a letter from the Governor of the Territory of Minnesota, with the statements to which it refers, of the disbursements up to the 1st of January last, of the money appropriated by the act approved June 11, 1850, for the erection of public buildings in that Territory; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a copy of the revised statutes of the Territory of Minnesota, passed at the second session of the Legislative Assembly, commencing January 1, 1851; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Also, a report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, and accompanied by a copy of a report of a geological exploration of California, by Joseph Gritzner; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. DAVIS presented two memorials of ship-owners, merchants, and other citizens of Massachusetts, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steam-ships; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, the petition of a committee of the New England Historic Genealogical Society at Boston, praying that copies of the Journals and documents of Congress may be furnished for the use of that Association; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Also, the petition of Edward Everett and others, praying that the New England Historic Genealogical Society, at Boston, may be furnished with copies of the Journals and documents of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. JAMES presented three petition of citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which were referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. BRADBURY presented two memorials of citizens of Washington, in the District of Columbia, praying certain amendments to the charter of that city, and an extension of the right of suffrage; which were referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALKER presented two petitions of citizens of Huntingdon county, Pennsylvania, praying that the public lands may be sold to actual settlers only, and in limited quantities; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PRATT presented a petition of citizens of St. Mary's county, Maryland, praying a modification of the bounty land law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAVIS submitted a document in relation to increasing the compensation of certain deputy naval officers; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petition of Cornelius Macaulay, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported a joint resolution authorizing the appointment of an Assistant Postmaster General; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred several petitions of deputy marshals throughout the United States, asking additional compensation, submitted an adverse report, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOUGLAS, from the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the bill to amend an act entitled "An act proposing to the State of Texas the establishment of her northern and western boundaries, the relinquishment by said State of all territory claimed by her exterior to said boundaries, and of all her claims upon the United States; and to establish a territorial government for New Mexico," approved September 9, 1850, reported back the same with an amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the memorial and the several communications relating to the proceedings of the general court-martial for the trial of Brigadier General George Talcott, asked to be discharged from the consideration of the same; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Daniel Nippes, asking compensation for certain arms manufactured for the War Department, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Sylvester Churchill, asking arrears of pay, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Colonel James R. Creecy, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorials of L. M. Goldsborough, G. J. Van Brunt, and J. F. Blunt, praying to be allowed additional compensation, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Gustavus A. De Russy, late an acting purser in the Navy, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BORLAND, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the motion to print two thousand additional copies of the report of the Committee on Finance in relation to the coins of the United States, reported in favor thereof; which was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee of Claims, to which was recommitment the petition of Joseph Hill and Sons, submitted an adverse report.

Mr. MANGUM, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the petition of the legal representatives of William Bean, reported a bill for the relief of William K. Jennings and Aphia Jennings; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. BRADBURY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of the executors and heirs of Thomas Fletcher, deceased, reported it without amendment.

ELIZABETH PREWITT.

Mr. RUSK. I have been unanimously instructed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to report back and recommend the passage of a joint resolution, from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Elizabeth Prewitt, widow and administratrix of Robert C. Prewitt, deceased; and I would ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take it up and dispose of it now. It will not occupy more than five minutes, being a just claim in favor of a widow, requiring the payment of the sum of $124 only. The circumstances are these: Her husband, during his lifetime, at the lettings of mail contracts in 1846, bid off two small post routes. On one he bid $74 a year, and on the other $43 a year. The postmaster, who certified the bids to the Post Office Department, placed them both to the lowest number. When the bonds were presented to him for that amount, he refused to sign them; but the Postmaster General told him he had better enter into the bond to carry the mail at the price named, for it would cost more to obtain the balance by a suit than to carry the mail. The Department did not feel themselves authorized to correct the mistake after the bond was executed, and he performed the service, and died. His widow now asks the difference between the real bid of $74 and the sum received, of $43 per annum. I hope it may be considered now.

There being no objection the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to pay, for the relief of Elizabeth Prewitt, widow of Robert C. Prewitt, late of Missouri, the sum of $124, for services in transporting the mail from Auburn to Ashley, in the State of Missouri, from the 1st of July, 1846, to the 1st of July, 1850.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, was ordered to a third reading, and was read a third time and passed.

BOUNTY LAND TO SAILORS.

Mr. STOCKTON, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting to each commissioned officer of the Navy of the United States, who served in the war against Mexico, one quarter section of land; and to all petty officers, seamen, ordinary seamen, landsmen, and boys, and to all others who served on board of steamers, one quarter section of land each; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HUNTER, by unanimous consent, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the sale of certain portions of the public lands to the States within which they lie, for the purpose of constructing railroads and canals; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

REDUCTION OF OCEAN POSTAGE.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. SUMNER, the 8th instant, relative to ocean steamers and cheap postage, and having been amended, on motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to inquire whether the present charges for letters carried by the ocean steamers are not unnecessarily large and burdensome to foreign correspondence, and whether something may not be done, and, if so, what, to secure the great boon of cheap ocean postage.

DEPUTY NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the compensation of the deputy naval officers in some of the principal ports of the United States.

THE SCHOONER AMISTAD.

Mr. MASON submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the propriety and justice of providing by law, pursuant to the recommendation of former Presidents of the United States, and lastly by President Polk, in his message of the 7th of December, 1847, for the payment of the claim therein mentioned as arising to certain Spanish subjects, in the case of the schooner Amistad.

THE SEVENTH CENSUS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. BAYARD on the 8th instant, for the appointment of a select committee of five members, to consider and report what alterations should be made in the plan for the publication of the returns of the Seventh Census before the same is printed; which was agreed to.

On motion, it was ordered that the Committee be appointed by the President pro tempore.

And Mr. BAYARD, Mr. BORLAND, Mr. DAVIS, Mr. ATCHISON, and Mr. BELL, were appointed.

ELECTION OF JUDGES IN OREGON.

On the motion of Mr. ATCHISON, the following resolution, which he submitted on the 1st instant, was taken up, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be instructed to inquire into the expediency of so amending an act to establish the territorial government of Oregon, as to authorize the legally-qualified voters of said Territory to elect their Governor and Judges.

NON-INTERVENTION.

Mr. CLARKE. I move that all the previous orders be postponed, for the purpose of taking up the resolutions which I had the honor to offer to the Senate some time ago, on the subject of non-intervention. When this subject was last under consideration—some ten days ago—it was postponed until to-day, the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] having the floor, and being desirous to proceed. The bill proposing a grant of land to the State of Iowa, which was under discussion yesterday, was postponed until Wednesday with that view. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of these resolutions.

Mr. BADGER. I should like to be informed by my friend from Rhode Island, whether it is intended to proceed with the discussion of these resolutions and go through with them, or whether it is intended, after the discussion of to-day, to resume the bill of my friend from Iowa, [Mr. JONES:] If the last-mentioned course is to be the understanding, I shall offer no objection to the taking up of these resolutions; but if not, then I must object.

Mr. CLARKE. In answer to the Senator from North Carolina, I will state that that is the understanding. The Senator from New York desires to speak on the subject of these resolutions to-day, and then they will be under the order of the Senate, and the bill granting land to the State of Iowa will probably come up next.

Mr. GWIN. I commenced a speech on a subject of a great deal more importance than this some four weeks ago, and was cut off in the middle of it by this land bill. I should very much like to know whether I am ever to have an opportunity to finish it? The subject to which it relates is a practical one—to establish a navy-yard and dépôt in the bay of San Francisco. Some time ago I asked the Senator from Iowa to give me one day, and stated that with that day I would be satisfied, because this was an isolated question, and not one involving party disputes; but the Senator said no, that they should be through with that bill in a day or two, but that is a month since. I would very much like to know, therefore, whether the Senator from Iowa will give me a chance to-morrow to finish my speech?

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. In reply to the Senator from California, I must say, that with every inclination to favor him, I cannot consent to give to-morrow, or any other day hereafter, for the consideration of any other subject, till the Iowa land bill is disposed of. At the time I made the suggestion, that I thought we could have disposed of it in one day, I had good reason to suppose that we could do so, because similar bills had been taken up and disposed of in fifteen minutes. I had no idea at that time that the proposition of the honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] would have been introduced to embarrass the progress of my bill. If that proposition had not been introduced, it would have passed long ago; and I hope it will now pass as soon as Thursday. I desire to say, that day after to-morrow, I shall endeavor to induce the Senate to sit out the bill, or sit until Friday morning at all events, till the private bills come up.

Mr. CHASE. I am disposed to vote for taking up these resolutions in relation to intervention at this time, but I really hope that this will be the last time they will be allowed to interfere with the regular order of business. I am exceedingly anxious that the bill granting land to the State of Iowa shall be pressed to a speedy decision, and that then we may take up the bill relating to the navy-yard in California, which is next in order of business. I have a bill of much importance to the State which I have the honor to represent, which stands second on the Calendar, and has stood there from the commencement of the session, but has been delayed because we have taken up a bill on one day, and discussed it for a little time, and on another day another bill or resolution, and have discussed that awhile, and thus have debated almost everything in the world without finishing anything. I hope that mode of doing business will no longer be persisted in.

Mr. BRADBURY. I have been desirous for some time to get the Senate to consider a bill of practical importance, and I regret very much to hear the honorable Senator from Iowa say that, although he consents to-day to the interruption of the discussion on the Iowa land bill, he will not hereafter do so. I hope we are not to understand that consent is to be given to the interruption of the discussion upon that bill only for the purpose of discussing subjects of no practical importance whatever, while subjects of great importance, which demand the consideration of the Senate, are not to receive its attention. I hope we might take up and get a vote on the bill making indemnity to those who have suffered from French spoliation. I have no feeling of particular anxiety with reference to that bill, except that it has been intrusted to my charge as chairman of the committee. I desire to have a vote upon it, and should have insisted on having it taken up yesterday; but for the request of the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FELCH,] who was unable to leave his room, that it might be suspended. I hope he will be in his seat to-morrow; and if so, I shall ask to have that bill taken up. I do not wish, however, to consume any time myself in debating it.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I desire to correct my friend from Maine in relation to one remark he has just made. I have never consented to give up the discussion of my bill for any other subject. At the time that my friend from Rhode Island made his appeal to me on behalf of the Senator from New Jersey some ten days ago, I did not then consent, but was overpowered by my friends, who came and suggested that it would be good policy to give way, and permit the Senator from New Jersey to proceed; that there was the hope that if the Senator from New Jersey was permitted to go on, I should probably gain a vote for my bill. [A laugh.]

Mr. GWIN. Then I am very sorry that the Senator from Iowa did not conceive it good policy to give way to me; but I suppose his reason for not doing so was, that I had but one vote on my side. It was undoubtedly good policy to give way to the Senators from New Jersey and New York, for he will there undoubtedly get two votes for my one. [A laugh.] Very good policy, Mr. President. Now, sir, here was a bill of great importance to my State. It was discussed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD,] and I had in part replied, and I gave way to the understanding that my bill would come up on the following Monday. That is four weeks ago; and although I have made many efforts, I find I cannot obtain the floor, because my bill involves a question of practical importance to the country. Now, I know that there are a dozen speeches yet to be made on the subject of this Iowa bill. The Senator from New York is about to speak to-day on these non-intervention resolutions, and then he will probably occupy the Senate to-morrow with another speech, on the land bill.

Mr. SEWARD. No, sir.

Mr. GWIN. I am very glad to hear it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATCHISON. I think I can explain this matter of "policy" to the satisfaction of the Senator from California. California is in the category with my State, inasmuch as it has within it public lands, and the Senator agrees with us. That explains the matter of policy. We have nothing to ask from him—nothing to expect from him. He will be obliged to vote for the bill any way. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSK. I dislike to waste the time of the Senate, but I would much like to know when we are to have a vote upon this bill. When I first took my seat in this body, I found a practice existing which I think it would be well to revive—one depending upon the courtesy of the Senate, and I never knew an appeal made to the Senate in that respect in vain. The practice to which I allude was this: When a bill of this description was brought forward, and was debated at length, and when a majority of Senators seemed to think that as much time as was necessary in debating it had been consumed, it was customary to name some future day which should cover all the speeches which Senators were anxious to make, on which the Senate would agree, as a matter of courtesy, to take a vote on that bill. I trust, therefore, that something of this kind will be revived; and, as this is a good bill, I would suggest to the Senator from Iowa to name some day next week when we could take a vote upon it.

Mr. BADGER. Why not say next Thursday?

Mr. RUSK. I have no objection to Thursday. The PRESIDENT. The question is on postponing the prior orders to take up the resolutions offered by the Senator from Rhode Island. The whole of this discussion is irrelevant to the motion.

Mr. CLARKE. I hope the Senate will agree to take up my resolutions. There is no disposition to interfere with the bill of the Senator from Iowa, or with that proposed by the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN.] My object is simply to accommodate the Senator from New York, who is prepared to address the Senate upon these resolutions, and desires to be heard to-day. It will be recollected by the Senate, that a week or ten days since when the floor was occupied by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. MILLER,] in discussing these resolutions, the Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] took the floor, and that this day was assigned to him for the purpose of their discussion. There has been an understanding in this Chamber since that time, that he would be heard to-day. I can say, for myself, that I have no desire, personally, to urge these resolutions upon the attention of the Senate to the detriment of other business, and I shall not, for myself, ask for their consideration again.

Mr. CASS. I think that, as a matter of courtesy and comity, it is due to the Senator from New York, that he should be allowed to proceed with his remarks which he has come prepared to make to-day. I think there should be no objection.

Mr. BADGER. Nobody opposes it.

Mr. CASS. The time is occupied in offering objections. If the Senator had been allowed to proceed, he might have got half through by this time.

Mr. GWIN. I am not opposing it; though no such courtesy is extended to me. I came prepared to make my speech six or seven days, but I have not yet been able to do it.

Mr. DOWNS. I have seen so much time occupied in discussions about taking up bills out of their order, that I see no other way to get along but to refuse hereafter in all cases to postpone the consideration of one bill for the purpose of taking up another. That is the only way we can get along with business. The Senator from Maine has referred to the bill in relation to French spoliation, and desires to have some action upon it. I am in favor of that bill, and I give notice that when it comes up, I shall oppose any motion to postpone it so as to make it give way to any other bill. I trust, therefore, that when any such propositions are made in future, I shall not be considered as being illiberal if I oppose them all, and especially these abstract questions.

I am perfectly tired of this manner of proceeding. I do not object to-day because it is understood that the Senator from New York is to proceed, but I hope this will be the last time such a course will be taken, and that, hereafter, we shall take up the bill giving land to Iowa, and then those that come after it in their regular order on the Calendar. If there is any bill which will not lead to debate, there will be no objection to its being taken up; but what I mean is, that I will not consent to take up a bill out of its order which will lead to debate, and thus disturb the action of the Senate.

The question was then taken on the motion to postpone the prior orders, and it was agreed to.

Mr. SEWARD asked that his amendment be read.

Mr. MANGUM asked for the reading of the original resolution and all the amendments, and they were read accordingly.

Mr. SEWARD then spoke at length in favor of his amendment. His speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. SEWARD having concluded—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee said: Mr. President, in continuing the discussion of this question, I desire to conform, as far as I may, to what seems to be the wish of the Senate. I do not desire to trespass long upon the patience of the Senate at any time. I believe it will be accorded to me by all, that I have not done so thus far. I feel, however, an inclination to express to the Senate what I believe to be the feelings and the opinions of those whom I, in part, represent, touching this important subject. And all I ask of the Senate is, that they will give to me such an expression of their wishes as to the time they would desire, or be willing to hear me, in order that I may conform my conduct to their wishes. I have no particular choice as to the time. I should prefer, however, to go on at as early a day as might be consistent with the interests and wishes of other Senators. I beg gentlemen who have questions of interest before the Senate, to declare their views as to the time. I believe the honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. JONES] feels a deep concern for a measure that is to be before the Senate for consideration to-morrow. I therefore cannot ask or expect that his measure shall be superseded for my convenience. Other Senators have expressed a similar wish. I am willing to agree to any day, provided it is an early day. And I believe that one of the distinguished Senators from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] desires to be heard on this question, and would prefer to speak at an early day next week. If Senators are willing, I would fix some early day next week—say Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Say Wednesday week.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Senator from Iowa suggests to-morrow week. I am willing to accede to that.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I have consulted with my friends, who are anxious for this bill to pass, and so far as I can ascertain on the other side of the House, I believe I may safely say that we will certainly take a vote upon it on Tuesday.

Mr. SOULE. On Tuesday next?

Mr. JONES. On Tuesday next. Indeed, I hope it will be taken before that time, but I think it will certainly not be delayed beyond Tuesday next.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understand that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SOULE] would prefer an early day next week—say Tuesday—and, if agreeable to the Senate, I would fix Monday as the day, in order that the Senator from Louisiana may have an opportunity of addressing the Senate on Tuesday.

Mr. SOULE. If the Senator from Iowa [Mr. JONES] should be of opinion that the vote cannot be taken upon the bill, in which he feels some peculiar interest, before Tuesday, perhaps it were better to postpone this question till Wednesday next.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Yes, sir; if you please.

Mr. SOULE. Otherwise it might interfere with the debate on the bill in regard to granting land to the State of Iowa, to aid in the building of a railroad. So far as I am concerned, it is a matter of indifference whether this question is postponed until Tuesday or Wednesday. I shall probably be able to take the floor immediately after the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee move to postpone the further consideration of the subject till Wednesday next?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do, sir.

The question was then taken on the motion to postpone to Wednesday week, the 17th instant, and it was decided in the affirmative.

On motion by Mr. UNDERWOOD, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 9, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the bill granting to the State of Alabama the right of way, and a donation of public land, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Selma, in the State of Alabama, to the Tennessee river, at or near Gunter's Landing. The motion pending is to refer, and upon that question the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] is entitled to the floor.

PASSENGER VESSELS.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York. I would ask the gentleman from Alabama to yield for a moment, for the purpose of enabling me to get a bill from the Senate, in relation to the ventilation of passenger vessels, taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, so that speedy action may be had upon it.

There being no objection, Senate bill No. 250, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the carriage of passengers in merchant vessels,' approved February 22, 1847; also to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the ventilation of passenger vessels,' approved May 17, 1848," was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BOUNTY LAND LAW.

Mr. HASCALL asked the unanimous consent of the House to present a petition from the inhabitants of Wyoming county, in the State of New York, asking for an amendment of the bounty land bill, with the view that the same might be referred to a select committee, with instructions to report a bill in conformity with the prayer of the petitioners.

Mr. ORR. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the petition cannot be introduced.

On motion by Mr. DISNEY, it was Ordered, That the papers and petition in the case of Edmund Dexter be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

On motion by Mr. FLORENCE, by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the petition of the widow of Lieutenant James A. Deany, of Philadelphia, be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. OLDS. I call for the regular order of business.

GRANT OF LAND TO ALABAMA.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is called for, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] has the floor.

Mr. McMULLIN. With the permission of the gentleman from Alabama, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

Mr. OLDS. All this, I suppose, comes out of the morning hour, and I am anxious to get on with the business.

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. COBB. When we had this measure under consideration a few days past, a proposition was made to go into Committee of the Whole. I notified the House then that I had nearly concluded my remarks upon this measure, and that it was probable, if they suspended the proceedings then, I might accumulate a new head of steam, and conclude thereafter to detain the House somewhat longer than I at first intended. A sense of propriety upon my part prompts me—though I may have considerable steam aboard—to reserve my remarks for some future occasion, and to say now only what I intended to have said then, and be as brief as I possibly can. Before I proceed, however, allow me to call the attention of the report to a little error—and I am surprised that they do not make more, from the clamor that not unfrequently surrounds them—an error by which they have made me say that the road I was advocating had been completed about two hundred miles. I did not intend to say that. I intended to say that the road was completed for a considerable distance, and was under contract for about one hundred and sixty miles, leaving about forty-three miles of the entire work yet to be placed under contract—making two hundred and five miles as the entire length of the road.

I was about concluding my remarks when this question was up a few days since, by simply tracing the line of this road; and I will content myself on this occasion with doing so, and as briefly as I can. This road proposes to connect Mobile and the Alabama waters, as I formerly said, by a railroad connecting the Alabama river at Selma with Gunter's Landing, on the Tennessee river. If gentlemen will take the trouble to examine the map and see how these mighty waters wind themselves through fertile valleys to meet each other, they will conclude with me that a junction should be formed. I think the importance of the work, in a national point of view, is one which should commend itself to the consideration of every member of the House. It strikes me that, upon a survey of the map of the country through which the road is to pass, no gentleman will be found to deny the great nationality of this work. And to the members from Tennessee I would say, that if they will examine the route of this proposed road, they will see that it passes through an agricultural part of the State. Let them follow it to Nashville, thence to Louisville, thence through Ohio and Indiana, thus connecting the Mobile waters with the two great Lakes—Michigan and Erie. Is this a work, then, of small moment? Is it not a work which will be pronounced, by every one who gives it a moment's attention, to be of great national importance? The benefits that would result from such a work to the citizens of those States would be great, for this road, starting from Selma, in Alabama, runs through a mineral region—runs through a bed of marble not to be surpassed in the Union—runs through a coal region which cannot be surpassed in the Southern States—runs through an iron region. I do not want to say this, because I might scare some of my Pennsylvania friends from the support of this bill. I desire not to drive them from the support of the road. But, sir, this road runs through a country that is rich with mineral ore, with coal and iron ore lying almost together. I want the Representatives of the States to which I have alluded to call particularly to mind the importance of this work to the Eastern members, the Western members, and the Southern members. I may have occasion to call upon them to examine the merits of another work, which I intend to submit to their particular and special consideration. Now, sir, if this road is to be completed, what, in a national point of view, will be the benefits to our sea-board? Sir, you daily hear something said in relation to the Army, in relation to making appropriations for fortifications upon your sea-board. Give us this road, and we ask no fortifications upon our sea-board. This road will enable us to get down to the sea-board almost in a moment with an army. Tennessee, Kentucky, and Ohio can also send down troops to defend our sea-board, if necessity should require. Give us this road, and we want no standing army in that country. In the sixth Congressional district in Alabama we have a standing army—the right kind of an army—and give us this road, and it will be more efficient for defense than all the fortifications you can place upon the southern borders of Alabama. I am satisfied that the honorable gentlemen, through whose district this road runs, have a sufficient force always ready to turn promptly out—as they ever have done, at the first sound of danger—to the rescue of their country. I will not trespass upon the House, but I must express my gratification at the indication which manifested itself a few days ago—upon the coming up of a bill for that purpose, though of a limited nature—of a disposition to exempt railroad iron from duty for a period of years. I say, I was glad to witness, a few days since, in this House, indications of a returning sense of justice towards the railroads projected and in progress; and I am induced to change my opinion of this House. Prior to that, I thought it was a hopeless case to ask for favorable action upon this bill; but I have had some little reflection upon it; and inasmuch as my constituents expect me to do everything that is proper to forward this act to aid in the construction of that road, I will move, at the proper time, to put the bill upon its passage. I prefer that the bill should die here to-day, rather than it should be sent to a committee to slumber. My constituents hope for some relief. Kill the bill to-day, if you are going to kill it, and let us know what we can depend upon. If it is understood that I made a motion to refer this bill, I will withdraw that motion, and move to put the bill upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. I understand the gentleman made no motion to refer.

Mr. COBB. Then I move to put the bill upon its passage. I desire to vote upon it.

Mr. WHITE, of Alabama, obtained the floor.

EXEMPTION OF RAILROAD IRON.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to move an amendment to the bill. I do it to get the sense of the House upon the proposition contained in it, which is in order, as the bill is upon its engrossment.

The SPEAKER. It is upon its engrossment. There is already an amendment, in the shape of a substitute, pending.

Mr. WHITE yielded the floor to admit the amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to insert the proposition I send to the table, as an additional section to the bill.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

That the iron for the construction of this and all other railroads in the United States, or the Territories thereof, may be imported free of all duty: Provided, nevertheless, That in all cases hereafter, whenever it is proposed to claim this exemption from duty in case of the importation of iron for such purposes, it shall be the duty of the person or persons importing the same to give bond in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, conditioned to show that within three years from the time of said importation, the said iron has been laid down for permanent use on some railroad; or in the event of failure to make it so appear, then the person or persons importing said iron to be required to pay double the rates of duty now required by law: Provided, further, That in the event of its being made to appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury, that the omission to lay down said rails has not occurred by reason of any fraudulent purpose to evade the payment of the prescribed rate of duty on such iron, that then it shall be his duty to give further and reasonable time for the bona fide application of said iron to the purposes of railroads.

Sec. —. Be it further enacted, That all duties now due on account of the importation of iron for railroads be, and the same are hereby remitted: Provided, however, That in all such cases, the importation shall be in the name and for the use of some legally incorporated railroad company, or for a State or Territory of the United States.

Mr. HALL. Is that amendment in order?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to state that the bill under consideration is one encouraging the building of railroads by making a donation of lands. Well, very clearly, anything relating to the general subject, or providing that that road may import its iron free of duty, is unquestionably germane to the subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the original bill to provide for a right of way and a grant of land to a railroad in Alabama. The gentleman's proposition is to remit duties upon railroad iron. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am sorry to differ with the Chair, but if you will give them a right of way and a grant of land, why not let them import their iron free of duty?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman take an appeal?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will not take an appeal myself, but some of my friends desire it, and if any gentleman will take an appeal I will sustain it.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman does not appeal, I must object to the debate. We are consuming all the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor, but the gentleman from North Carolina has taken an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I did not appeal myself, although I understood that some of my friends would.

Mr. ORR. I will take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I think the Chair decided the other day, upon a bill granting lands to Iowa for railroad purposes, that it was in order to make a donation of lands to Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. That is very true; but the Chair never yet has decided that the granting of lands and the remission of duties upon imported railroad iron, were kindred subjects.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to let his appeal go over to some other time. My colleague, [Mr. WHITE,] whose district is deeply interested in this work, desires to occupy the morning hour in addressing the House. The appeal can be taken at another time.

NEW SERIES.....No. 45.

The SPEAKER. If gentlemen do not discuss the question of order, it can be determined very soon by a vote of the House. The Chair understands the purpose of the original bill to be, to grant the right of way and a certain quantity of public lands—alternate sections, perhaps—for the construction of a railroad in Alabama. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] submits an amendment for the remission of duties, generally, upon all railroad iron that may be imported into the country. The Chair decides that the amendment is not in order; from this decision an appeal has been taken by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

Mr. HALL. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. CLINGMAN and HOUSTON were appointed.

The question was then taken, and decided in the affirmative, the tellers having reported—ayes 86, noes 31.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. WHITE. I think it proper that I should make an explanation of the vote I have just given, on the proposition to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair upon the table, before I proceed with the remarks that I intend to make upon the subject, under consideration. I voted in favor of sustaining the appeal, because I thought that amendment did not belong properly to the subject matter of the bill. The bill proposes a specific grant of the public lands, to aid in the construction of certain railroads. The gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] as I understood his amendment as read from the Clerk's desk, proposes legislation generally upon the subject of the exemption of all railroad iron from duty. In this view, and not, sir, because I was unfavorable to the amendment of the gentleman, I voted to sustain the decision of the Speaker.

I shall now proceed—though under circumstances somewhat unfavorable, from the disposition manifested by the House a few days ago in reference to this subject—the appropriation of a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of railroads—to make a few remarks upon the subject generally; and then call the attention of the House to what I conceive to be the peculiar claims of this road upon the consideration of this body.

The close of the last and the beginning of the present century were distinguished by three events, either one of which would have rendered illustrious the age in which it transpired. The first of these was, the separation of the Colonies of North America from Great Britain, and the birth of a new and a free nation. The second was, the formation of our Government, and the framing of our Federal Constitution and our State governments. And the third was, the invention of the steam engine, or the discovery and application of steam power to the propulsion of machinery.

By our separation from Great Britain, we became the proprietors of an immense, and in a great part, uninhabited territory, combining richness of soil, salubrity of climate, and facilities for navigation, which would soon lead an enterprising people to a participation in its bounties and a development of its resources. This territory, embracing—as it did then, sufficient area for a mighty people—has since been extended, until our possessions have reached from the Lakes to the Gulf, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean. Our Government has gone into operation, and successful operation, for seventy years; and under it, we have seen State after State come up and take their places in the Confederacy, with a rapidity and quiet which seem more like the delusions of magic than the magnificent realities of risen empires emerging from the wilderness, and teeming with a happy population. Star after star has burst forth in this brilliant political constellation. Each has taken its place in our system; each shines with unborrowed lustre; each revolves in its own appropriate sphere; and perfect harmony and order illustrate the virtue and intelligence of a free people, and confirm the wisdom and foresight of that illustrious body of men who framed our Constitution. The character of our people would have manifested, to minds gifted with much less foresight than the framers of our Constitution, that the Anglo-Saxon race must one day become the proprietors of the North American Continent; and in view of this progress, they have given to us a Constitution which in practice has demonstrated what in theory it professed—a capacity for extension commensurate with the Continent itself. Our ancestors found a young, but a giant people, preparing to go forth to the subjugation of a boundless wilderness of territory, for the building up of a vast republic, and they prepared for them a Constitution, suited to their then comparatively small condition, and also to that mighty confederation of States which the future was seen to develop. The system has worked well; and while those great interests intrusted to the General Government, in which all the people of all the States are alike interested, have been cared for, preserved, and protected by that General Government, the State governments have secured individual rights, and given just and equal laws to all; while both governments have combined to protect and preserve the liberties of the people. Our growth and our prosperity have been without parallel; and this system has proved to be such as to make its continuance, in its pristine purity, a common object with the American people.

It has been said, and considerably if not wisely said, that a widely-extended territory and a free Government cannot subsist together; and history has been appealed to, to sustain the assertion. It has been said, that despotic Governments alone possess that energy and power which is necessary to send the vital fluid of healthful legislation to distant extremities, and to hold together the discordant elements of distant and diverse interests, which necessarily grow up in a widely extended territory. This, I am willing to admit, is the lesson of the past; but, sir, our people are not to be judged of by the past experience of mankind, nor our Government by the Governments which have preceded it. We are pioneers in more senses than one—pioneers of the wilderness, pioneers in society, and pioneers in Government. Our State governments provide against the very evil which is here deprecated; and with prudent, and just, and liberal legislative enactments by our General Government, in aid of our fundamental law, our country is capable of almost indefinite increase and boundless expansion.

Other agencies than our free institutions have, however, been brought to bear in the growth and prosperity of our nation, and no other has been so potent and so universal in its influence as the steam-engine. But I design not to speak of it as a means of wealth and prosperity. I rather wish to call the attention of the House to it, as an element of political power.

Commerce, and trade, and intercourse among nations have ever tended to diminish the number of wars, and inspire a love of peace. Among savage tribes, who have no trade or intercourse with each other, wars are perpetual; and among civilized nations, where commerce is extended and intercourse free, they only occur as the last resort.

What is true of nations foreign to each other, is still more emphatically true of different parts of the same nation; and that agency which is powerful to hold together, in amity and concord, the great family of nations, is still more potential in binding together, in bonds of brotherly affection, the members of the same nation. Distance, and the want of means of transportation, are the great impediments to trade and free intercourse in our country. These difficulties have been or can be overcome by steam; and in this way it enters into and becomes one of the most powerful elements of cohesion in our political system. New Orleans is now nearer, in practical effect, to New York, than New York was to Baltimore in 1781; and the intercourse between Boston and St. Louis is now freer, cheaper, and easier, than was the intercourse between Portland and Boston fifty years ago; and our country, before its recent acquisitions from Mexico—notwithstanding the acquisitions of Louisiana, Florida, and Texas—may have been justly regarded as more compact, more a unit in sentiment, and interest, and nationality, than at the close of the Revolutionary war. These mighty results, not properly conceived because of their magnitude, are attributable—more than to any other agency, and probably more than to all others combined—to the steam-engine. By its power, time and distance have been annihilated. By its subtle, invisible, but all-pervading influence, penetrating society in its remotest condition, the supports of our admirable Government have been planted deep in the hearts of the people; and national pride, national patriotism, and national unity, spring forth from the conviction, that interest has confirmed what the wisdom and foresight of our fathers had devised for us.

Our Government is not a government of force, but a government of free will; and no matter how much other influences may operate for a time, or may affect individuals, we must rely ultimately for its support upon the welfare of the people. If it is their interest to maintain and preserve the Government, it will be supported and maintained; and when it ceases to be their interest, it will fall, and it should fall.

Now, although steam has done much in bringing distant parts of our nation near to each other, and in weaving together our interests in such a manner, as to make that which is the interest of one part the interest of all, much yet remains to be done, which is necessary to the perpetuity of our Government. Our navigable streams pervade immense sections of our country, and furnish highways upon which is wafted the trade of millions. But there are large tracts of our country which are indented by no rivers; there are millions of our people who are cut off from the benefits of the agency of steam, and are growing more isolated every day, and more alienated from the other portions of the nation. These influences, sensibly felt among our people, even at this time, will continue to increase (unless some preventive is applied) as time evolves, until the Government, and our unity as a nation will dissolve before them. Separation, distance, diversity, and conflict of interests are the great dangers which we, as legislators, should avoid. Diversity of political opinion can never destroy this Government, unless that diversity shall be aggravated by a contrariety of interests, which shall make the legislation of the Government oppressive to some parts. Whenever this transpires, our Government is gone. It is not in the nature of the American people to bear oppression, and they will never do it. This is a truth to which we cannot give too much consideration. Our Government was made to promote the welfare and happiness of the people, and whenever it ceases to do this, to any considerable portion of the people, they will cast it off. Fear will have no influence in restraining them, for it has no place in the hearts of the American people; a reverence for established institutions will not prevent them, for these institutions will have lost that which constituted their excellence in the estimation of the people when they cease to promote the general happiness and subserve the public good. An antagonism of interests grows naturally out of wide-extended territories; and in a Government controlled by a majority, its tendencies result in legislation partial to the majority, and oppressive to the minority. The history of our Government, brief as it is, exemplifies these truths with unmistakable force. The hostile array of sectional interests which recently shook this Capitol, ay, which shook this nation to its very center, and which now burns with smothered but fierce heat in the bosoms of Northern and Southern men, should awaken us to energetic and earnest effort to do all in our power to bring our people nearer together; to heal these sectional strifes; to make the interest of all one common interest. These are the shocks which manifest the destructive elements in our political system; and unless provided against, they will prove the precursors of our common ruin. The sources of this danger are multiplying, and will, before many years, manifest themselves in new and still more formidable aspects.

The rapid increase of our population; the peopling of the Northwest, of California, of New Mexico, Utah, and of Texas, and the growth of the West, gratifying as they are in many respects, all present causes of intense anxiety to the considerate statesman and the true patriot. The seeds of discord are numerous and fearful; and, unless counteracted, will multiply and become more dangerous, till at length they will destroy the Republic.

Our Government is not destined to fall, as other Governments have fallen, beneath the blows of a conquering soldiery. From without, we need fear nothing. United we can defy the world in arms, and from within, the first attempt to coerce by arms any respectable portion of our Confederacy into submission to what they deemed an unjust and oppressive Government, would array the sentiment of the nation so strongly in favor of the disaffected party, that the Government would find itself powerless to force submission. Our Government lives and moves and has its being in the affections of the people, and when this is withdrawn, it will cease to exist. It will die as does the animate form when the breath of life has ceased to infuse itself into the system.

But how can these dangers be averted? I answer by pointing to the experience of the past, and to the present prosperous condition of our country. What has effected it? What has cheapened travel and transportation? What has multiplied intercourse and increased trade? The steam engine. By its agency the trade of the great West has emptied its treasures upon the Gulf and the Atlantic, and received in return the merchandise of our great cities. The cotton of the South found a market in the North, and the trade of the North an outlet in the South. North and South, East and West, our people have mingled with each other, visiting by thousands and tens of thousands yearly the most remote sections of our country—each feeling impressed hourly with the great practical truth that the thousands of miles which he traverses is but the domain of our country, and that the millions whom he meets are brothers of the same great family. The native of the South or of the far West visits the place among the hills of New England where his fathers dwelt, and as he surveys each spot sacred in the tradition of his family, or lingers with melancholy pleasure around the tomb which protects their mortal remains, he feels that there is a tie which binds that spot to his far-distant home. He is not a stranger there. It was the country of his forefathers. It is his country; and he congratulates himself that when his course is run, that he and they shall rest beneath the soil of a common country, and, though separated by thousands of miles, that the same banner shall fling its protecting folds over him and them, and that banner shall be the stars and the stripes of his native land. Thus morally, socially, politically does intercourse operate upon the minds of our people, dispelling prejudice, expanding thought and affection, and making individual and collective mind to identify itself with and to grasp our whole country in its conceptions and aims.

The greater this intercourse the greater will be our homogeneity as a nation, and the less that intercourse the greater will be the alienation of one section from another, and the more rapidly will be hastened that catastrophe which we have so much cause to apprehend, and against which we are called upon so imperiously to provide. As a Government we should provide against it, and as a Government we have the means of providing against it. That same Providence who has heretofore watched over our fortunes, and shielded us from past dangers, has furnished us with the means of providing against this; and those means are our public lands. With them we can build railroads through our whole country, which will bind us together, and preserve our institutions and form of Government for ages to come. I will not enter into a calculation to show that the General Government would be benefited in the matter of dollar and cents, by an increased value given to the lands reserved to the Government along the line of the roads, though I think it might be easily demonstrated. I will not undertake to prove that the development of the trade and resources of one section of the country is a benefit to all the rest, but I place my appeal, in behalf of grants of public lands, upon higher grounds—the preservation of our country and the perpetuity of the Republic. There is no mode in which we can effect such works, so free from constitutional objections, so easy of performance, so certain of success, and I may add, now so beneficial to the country in effects outside of the grand object—the building of the roads. The question for us to determine is not, as some are disposed to regard it, whether we shall give away so many millions of acres of land for the benefit of the States where the lands lie, but it is, whether we shall appropriate those lands in such a manner as to avert from our Government the most formidable dangers which threaten it, and convert them into means of support and defense; whether we shall hold on to our lands until our title to them shall be swept from us by the shock of internal convulsion, or the storm of revolution; or whether we shall wisely apply them in such a manner as to secure to ourselves, and those who are to come after us, the blessings of Peace, Liberty, and a written Constitution.

It is idle, it is worse, it is criminal in us to shut out from our view the dangers which are ahead of us. It is folly to disregard the experience of the past, or to overlook the natural operation of causes of alienation which exist in our social and political system. It is the part of wise men and faithful public servants to thoroughly investigate, and as near as may be, arrest or provide against all events which threaten the public weal. Let us, then, march up to the standard of our destiny, and as patriots and American statesmen, without regard to petty interests or sectional feeling, do our duty to our whole country.

Mr. Chairman, the men of the present Congress maintain a most responsible position to the country, to the world, and to posterity. The swelling magnitude of this nation demands enlarged views and liberal legislation. We live in an age of progress, and it depends upon us whether that progress be sound, judicious, healthful, or whether it shall be wild, reckless, ruinous. This progress will go on, we cannot arrest, but we may divert it. We are afloat upon the sea of destiny, but our fate is in our own hands. A wise policy leads us to unbounded prosperity and unequalled glory; an unwise policy to bitter calamity and enduring shame. We cannot fit the garments of a child to the limbs of a giant, nor can we adapt a narrow, sectional, and selfish policy to the condition and career of this great and growing country. Then I make an appeal to the House in behalf of the country, the whole country, its present interest, and the interests of those who are to come after us.

I do not ask this House to grant lands to this road for the sake of benefiting the people of Alabama alone. I place myself upon safer, and more enduring grounds. I ask you to give lands to the State of Alabama to secure a great national good. I ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments, while I call attention to the present condition of this road, and to some of its features in a national point of view. A glance at the map of the United States presents a remarkable continuation of valleys northeast and southwest, reaching from the State of Pennsylvania to the Gulf of Mexico. Along this line are no navigable rivers and no natural facilities for steam communication. Our great rivers all diverge either to the east or to the west; but along these extended and beautiful valleys nature points out to man the locality for building artificial means of transportation and travel, which shall excel even the capacious Mississippi. From Portland, in Maine, to Washington, the communication by railroads is now complete. From this city, through Western Virginia and East Tennessee, to Dalton, in Georgia, (with the exception of the distance from Charlotte to Lynchburg, Virginia—sixty-five miles,) railroads are chartered, and are either complete or under contract for the entire route. From Dalton to the Alabama and Tennessee river railroad, a distance of about ninety miles, there are several practicable routes. The Alabama and Tennessee railroad, in length about two hundred and ten miles, reaches from Selma, upon the Alabama river, to Gunter's Landing, and fills up by far the most formidable interval of roads from Maine to Louisiana. By the Alabama river, Selma is connected with Mobile and New Orleans, and thus by the building of this road, steam communication will be obtained over near six hundred and fifty miles of this great inland route from the north-eastern to the southwestern extremity of the country. The importance of such a route as this, from Portland to New Orleans, will be admitted by everyone. In war it would constitute our surest and readiest means of defense, and in peace the strongest ligament of our Union and nationality.

The company for building this road was organized a little more than two years since. The stock subscribed amounts to $1,180,000. The route has been surveyed. A part of the road is now finished, and by the first of August next sixty miles will have been completed. Eighty miles beyond this is under contract, and a large portion of it graded; and for the remainder, subscriptions have been had, and every effort is being made to complete the work. But the difficulties attending an undertaking of this kind among an agricultural people, are perhaps known only to those who have made the effort among such a people. We have the will to do all in our power for this great project, but if left to accomplish it by our unaided efforts, the work must be retarded for years. With the assistance provided in this bill, we can finish the road in a short time.

Then, since you, as well as ourselves, are to be the beneficiaries of the undertaking; since the whole country is to share in the good which will flow from it, I ask for this grant in the name of the people whom I represent, and in behalf of the people of the whole Union.

Mr. ORR demanded the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up the special order.

CONTESTED ELECTION FROM NEW MEXICO.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise to a question of privilege. I hold in my hand the petition of A. W. Reynolds, of New Mexico, contesting the right of Richard H. Weightman to a seat on this floor, as Delegate from the Territory of New Mexico.

The petitioner charges that in the election which took place in the month of September last, under the Governor's proclamation, no sufficient notice was given of the time of holding said election, and that in some portions of the Territory no notice was given at all.

The petitioner charges, also, that corrupt influences were exerted by Governor Calhoun in that election, and that gross frauds were perpetrated; that the election laws governing the Territory were disregarded, and that votes were cast upon another day than the day upon which the election was to be held, according to the proclamation of the Governor.

The petitioner further charges, that in casting up the votes for the purpose of deciding who was entitled to the certificate of election, the Governor entirely disregarded the law governing the case.

I do not propose to express any opinion upon the allegations contained in this memorial, or as to the right of the honorable gentleman from New Mexico to his seat upon this floor, but I will move that the petition be referred to the Committee of Elections, and be printed; and upon that motion I propose merely to advert briefly to the course pursued by the Governor of the Territory in this election. It must be recollected—

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of order. A gentleman rising to a question of privilege cannot interpolate upon it a motion to print, and on that motion have a right to speak.

The SPEAKER. It was competent for the gentleman from Missouri to present the petition, state briefly its contents, as he has done, and move that it be referred to the Committee of Elections and be printed. It is regularly before the House, and the Chair thinks that the question of printing is debatable.

Mr. MARSHALL. My proposition is, that a motion to print does not come within the range of privilege, and cannot, therefore, supersede the business before the House. The gentleman may make the motion to print, but it cannot take precedence of the bill which was pending when he interposed his question of privilege.

Mr. PHELPS. The subject-matter contained in the memorial is a proper subject of discussion.

Mr. STANLY. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, that he is entitled to the floor on the question of privilege, and that he postpone his remarks till the gentleman from New Mexico is in his seat, that that gentleman, who is not now in the House, may have a fair chance of putting the matter right before the House.

Mr. PHELPS. In response to the appeal made to me by the gentleman from North Carolina, I will remark that I do not propose to discuss the right of the gentleman claiming a seat on this floor as Delegate from New Mexico, or to express any opinion on that subject. But I desire merely to advert to the corrupt conduct of the Government in the late election held in the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. STANLY. That must affect the question unfavorably, and I, therefore, ask the gentleman from Missouri to wait until the gentleman from New Mexico is in his seat.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Do I understand the Chair to overrule my point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the motion to print is in order, and that being properly before the House upon a question of privilege, discussion is in order.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire now to ascertain whether, if this matter should be postponed till tomorrow—

Mr. JOHNSON, of Georgia, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me to ask him whether he has in his possession any evidence of corruption on the part of the Governor of New Mexico?

Mr. PHELPS. I do not understand the inquiry.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to hear the evidence of this corruption.

Mr. PHELPS. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLY] appeals to me to forego any discussion upon this subject, because of the absence of the Delegate from New Mexico, but the gentleman from Georgia desires me to enter upon the discussion now. I feel disposed to acquiesce in the suggestion made by the gentleman from North Carolina, provided I do not thereby lose my opportunity to submit the remarks which I design to make.

The SPEAKER. This being a question of privilege, in the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman can call it up hereafter, and at any time he chooses.

Mr. PHELPS. Very well, sir; then I will give way now.

[Here the subject was dropped.]

The question then recurred on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up the special order.

Mr. BROOKS. Before that motion is put, I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, when he intends to bring this debate to a close? My reason for making the inquiry is, that there lies behind the special order an appropriation bill without which the Government cannot be carried on much longer. If that bill is not speedily passed, the army will have to be withdrawn from California, New Mexico, and Oregon.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from New York, that, if I understand the temper of the House, there is a very considerable disposition to make some speeches upon the bill which is the special order, and to make some speeches upon matters and things in general—for Buncombe.

So far as I am concerned, individually, I should like the speeches to be confined to the subject-matter of the bill itself, and to have speedy action upon it. The argument seems to have some weight with many members on this floor, that the deficiency bill is behind this bill, and that it is important that that bill should be passed. Now, those who are familiar with the practice of this House know that we could at any time, by unanimous consent, pass by informally the bill which is now under consideration, and take up the deficiency bill; but then the same amount of time would be consumed in making political speeches on the presidential question on that bill as on this. The question then comes up, Had we not better go on regularly? The gas which has to be thrown off may, perhaps, as well be thrown off on this bill as on any other.

I am fully aware that the deficiency bill ought to pass; but, at the same time, I think it more important that a bill should pass providing homes for the thousands of homeless in the United States than all the deficiency bills that could be originated from this time to the close of the session. I look upon that as a highly important bill.

Permit me to say, in conclusion, that I have no disposition to consume the time of the House, and thereby delay the public business. I want to see Congress take speedy, efficient, and early action upon all those measures which pertain to the public good. So far as this deficiency bill is concerned, perhaps it ought to pass; but, at the same time, I think it would be one of the best things that could happen to this Government if many of these Departments could be put upon bread and water for a short time, and they would then, perhaps, suggest some means or plan by which the expenses of the Departments could be retrenched and the public expenditures diminished. I shall be willing, however, to agree that the debate shall be stopped at any reasonable time.

Mr. HOUSTON. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

Mr. BROOKS. I rise to a privileged question. I move the usual resolution for closing debate on the special order at two o'clock on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The question is not in order pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BROOKS. I understand the gentleman yields me the floor for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to the resolution being introduced, as indicated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Brooks,] if it is the wish of the House.

[Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported, as correctly enrolled, an act for the relief of Lieutenant Colonel Mitchell, of the State of Missouri; the act for the relief of Rufus Dwinel; and the act extending the time for selling the lands granted to the Kentucky Asylum for teaching the Deaf and Dumb; which bills severally received the signature of the Speaker.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I was going to appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] and the House to allow the special order to be passed by for the present, and take up the deficiency bill, which I have been pressing for several days.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to that most decidedly.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from North Carolina will have time enough to object when I have concluded my remarks.

With the permission of the House, I desire to have a communication read which I have received this morning, stating the fact that the Government drafts are now being protested for want of funds to redeem them; and it will involve an immense cost to the Government, if they do not either recall the army or grant means in some way or other to prevent these great losses.

The SPEAKER. The communication can only be read by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I have only this to say: The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILCOX] who is entitled to the floor in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, can get the floor and make his speech just as well upon the deficiency bill.

Mr. WILCOX. I did not object.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not understand the gentleman as objecting. I again appeal to the House to pass by the special order, and allow us to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the deficiency bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion is already pending.

Mr. BROOKS. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] yielded the floor for me to make the motion to close debate upon the special order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not intend to yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BROOKS. Very well, then; if I have not the floor, of course I cannot make the motion.

The question was then put upon the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and carried in the affirmative.

HOMESTEADS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 7, for the encouragement of agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and other branches of industry, by granting to every man, &c., one hundred and sixty acres of land.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILCOX] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to yield the floor, in order to enable me to offer an amendment.

Mr. WILCOX. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS. I then move to strike out all after the first section of the substitute of Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, for the bill, and insert the following:

Strike out all after the first section of the substitute, and insert:

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, &c., That all of the lands of the United States lying within any State of this Union, which were subject to entry on the first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, and have not since been sold, shall be subject to entry for actual settlement and cultivation, for any quantity not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, as follows, viz: all of such lands which, on that day, had been subject to entry ten years, and not exceeding twenty years, may be entered under the act, at the price of one dollar per acre; all of such lands which had been subject to entry twenty years, and not exceeding thirty years, may be entered at the price of seventy-five cents per acre; all of such lands which had been subject to entry thirty years, may be entered at the price of fifty cents per acre; all of such lands which had been subject to entry less than ten years on said first day of July, eighteen hundred and fifty-one, which shall not be sold under the existing laws within ten years thereafter, shall, after that time, be subject to entry as aforesaid at the price of one dollar per acre. And when any of the aforesaid lands shall have remained ten years subject to entry, at any of the reduced rates aforesaid, without being sold, the price thereof for entry under this act, during the next ten years, shall be reduced twenty-five cents per acre; and such reduction of twenty-five cents per acre continue to be made every ten years, until such lands shall be sold, or the price thereof reduced to twenty-five cents per acre. And on any day appointed, as aforesaid, for the reduction of the price of the said public lands, any other lands of the United States, lying within the said States, not subject to entry on the first day of July, 1851, which shall have been subject to entry ten years or upwards on any such future day for reducing the prices, as aforesaid, shall be subject to a like reduction of twenty-five cents per acre, which reduction shall be repeated every ten years, until the lands shall be sold, or the price reduced to twenty-five cents per acre: Provided, however, That no lands shall be considered as entered under this act unless the price at which it is entered is less than $1 25 per acre: And provided, further, That no alternate sections or mineral lands, which have been or may be reserved by the United States, shall be entered under this act.

Sec. 3. And he it further enacted, That the person making entry, or application for entry, under this act, at a price less than $1 25 per acre, shall first make an affidavit before the register or receiver of the land office where the entry is proposed to be made, that the said applicant enters, and proposes to enter, the same for his own use and benefit, for settlement and cultivation by and for himself or herself; and that the said applicant has made no entry under the provisions of this act, which, with the additional entry then proposed to be made, will make the whole quantity so entered, and proposed to be entered, exceed one hundred and sixty acres.

The amendment was read.

Mr. WILCOX addressed the committee during his hour. He remarked that he had nothing to say in regard to the bill pending before the committee, but had a far more important question, at least to him and to the people whom he represented, to speak of. He regretted the necessity which impelled him to refer to the compromise of the last Congress, but he would premise by saying that he was here as a Jackson, Union Democrat, as contradistinguished from a Secession, Disunion Democrat. He then proceeded to justify the admission of California, Utah, and New Mexico; referred to the efforts of the secessionists in the South to create a dissolution of the Union and build up a Southern Confederacy; and declared the Democratic party to be the constitutional Union party. He denied the constitutional right of any State to secede; and in conclusion, addressed a few remarks to gentlemen of the North. He said that if the time should ever come when the Union should be dissolved, and when the starry flag of our country should be torn asunder, this sin would lie at the door of gentlemen of the North. He hoped, then, that they would cease their fanatic interference with the institutions of the South, and, from this moment, that all would forget the ills which came well-nigh sinking the ship of State. The time was not far distant when we should see the peaceful triumphs of our example, and seeing we have so great a destiny to fulfill; let us be wise for the future.

[See Appendix for Mr. W.'s speech.]

Mr. RANTOUL, next obtained the floor, and addressed the committee during the hour.

He replied to his colleague, [Mr. DAVIS,] who addressed the House on Saturday. He denied some of that gentleman's positions and assertions, and vindicated his uniform consistency on political subjects for the last twenty years, challenging proof to the contrary. He had condemned the fugitive slave law in his own town, (Beverly,) and addressed a large audience upon the subject; and therefore it was not likely that a few days after he should, as was charged, express himself in favor of the law in Boston, about the time of the public meeting in that city to indorse the compromise measures. He justified the coalition between the Democrats and Free-Soilers; and said that for many years the Whigs, with the aid of the abolitionists, held the State; but the moment they found themselves out of office by the new arrangement, then it was horrible. He held that the combination was necessary; and in the course of his remarks referred to his views on the slavery question.

[Mr. R.'s speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. RICHARDSON obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBBINS. With the permission of the gentleman, I move that the committee rise.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee rose accordingly, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 7, to encourage agriculture, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. CARTTER moved that the House adjourn; which motion was agreed to.

The House then adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. BARRERE: The remonstrance of numerous citizens of Clermont county, Ohio, against the renewal of the Woodworth patent.

Also, the petition of sundry citizens of Brown county, Ohio, praying for the establishment of a tri-weekly mail route from Williamsburg, in Clermont county, via Sardinia and Fincastle, in Brown county, to Winchester, in Adams county, Ohio.

By Mr. CURTIS: The petition of citizens of Clarion county, Pennsylvania, praying for a modification of the tariff.

By Mr. KUINS: Eight petitions from citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to confirm the erection of the Wheeling bridge, and to prevent its destruction under the late decree of the Supreme Court of the United States.

By Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania: The memorial from citizens of the county of Philadelphia, asking for an extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. STEPHENS, of New York: The petition of Smith, Dunning and others, praying the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of H. M. Jones and 37 others, citizens of the county of Philadelphia, in favor of the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. SCHOOLCRAFT: The remonstrance of George W. Beardslee, of Albany, New York, against the extension of the Woodworth patent, or any act legalizing the re-issue of said patent.

By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of Simeon Stillwell, Adam Clery, Price Wetherall, and 44 other citizens of Philadelphia, praying for the extension of the Woodworth patent for planing boards, &c.

Also, the memorial of W. W. Long, Jackson Dick, Peter Hoist, and 33 others, citizens of Philadelphia, praying for the extension of the Woodworth patent for planing boards, &c.

By Mr. BRECKINRIDGE: The petition of L. V. Megowan, praying for a pension on account of disabilities incurred by exposure in the military service of the United States in the last war with Great Britain.

By Mr. BEHL: A petition from 127 citizens of Montgomery county, Ohio, asking Congress to establish the bridges of the Wheeling and Belmont Bridge Company as post roads, and that the same be permitted to remain at their present height.

By Mr. BURROWS: The petition of Benjamin Sheldon and others, citizens of Niagara county, New York, remonstrating against the further extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine.

By Mr. ASHE: The memorial of John McPherson and others, remonstrating against the extension of the Woodworth patent for a planing machine.

By Mr. CONGER: The petition of Herman B. Ely and others, in favor of the right of way and a donation of certain public lands to the State of Michigan, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Little Bay de Noquet to Lake Superior, in said State of Michigan.

Also, the memorial of George C. Nelson, assistant marshal for Kent county, Michigan, for additional compensation for taking the census; and the petition of sundry citizens in favor of the same object.

Also, the petition of A. Coburn and others, for relief in reference to land titles in the Lake Superior land district, in the State of Michigan.

By Mr. AIKEN: The petition of citizens of Charleston, South Carolina, asking aid to the Collins's line of steamers.

By Mr. DOTY: The petition of citizens of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in favor of the construction of a navy-yard, in connection with a dry-dock, in the valley of the Lakes.

By Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania: The memorial of twenty-two assistant marshals of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, asking additional compensation for taking the census.

By T. M. HOWE: The petition of James M. Cooper, Morris Jones, and many others, interested in the trade of Lake Superior, praying for the construction of a "beacon-light" on Round Island, near the entrance to the river Ste. Marie.

Also, the memorial of H. Miller and others, of Pennsylvania, representing the advantage of a speedy construction of a canal around the Falls of the river Ste. Marie, Michigan, and praying an appropriation therefor.

Also, the memorial of H. P. Cain and others, of Alleghany county, Pennsylvania, of like tenor.

By Mr. APPLETON of Massachusetts: The petition of Mary Baur, of Boston, Massachusetts, for relief.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 10, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. CLARKE presented a petition of merchants and citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steam-ships; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MASON presented the petition of Elizabeth Armistead, widow of General Walker K. Armistead, late of the Army, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of George W. Beardslee, remonstrating against an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a petition of citizens of the county of Westchester, New York, praying an extension of Woodworth's patent for a planing machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. GWIN presented the memorial of the legal representatives of Lemuel P. Montgomery, deceased, a soldier in the last war with Great Britain, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of D. M. Wilson & Co., praying the payment of their claim against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

PAPER WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. GEYER, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Thomas Allen, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee of Claims.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Andrew Smith, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the memorial of Elisha W. B. Moody, praying to be reimbursed moneys paid by him, as owner of the British barque "Sarah," in the rescue of the passengers and crew of the American ship "Caleb Grimshaw," submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee of Claims, to which were referred the several memorials praying Congress that expenses incurred by the exhibitors at the World's Fair may be paid, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the bills from the House of Representatives authorizing the issuing of registers to the brig "America" and the ship "Kossuth," reported them without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to create additional collection districts in the Territory of Oregon, and for other purposes," reported in lieu thereof a bill to authorize the President of the United States to designate the places for the ports of entry and delivery for the collection districts of Puget's Sound and Umpqua, in the Territory of Oregon; which was read and passed to the second reading.

As the memorial on this subject also prayed for the establishment of a mail route—

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of the citizens of the Territory of Oregon, presented the 19th January, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the message of the President of the United States communicating a report of the Secretary of the Interior in relation to the apportionment of Representatives among the several States in the Thirty-third Congress, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill supplementary to an act providing for the taking of the seventh and subsequent censuses of the United States, and to fix the number of members of the House of Representatives, and provide for their future apportionment among the several States, approved 23d May, 1850; which was read and passed to the second reading. The report, with the accompanying documents, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRADBURY submitted the views of the minority of the committee on the same subject; which were ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOWNS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the joint resolution of February 24, in relation to the number of electoral votes each State will be entitled to in the presidential election of 1852, reported the same with an amendment, and submitted a report on the subject; which was read.

The committee in their report, state that the Constitution provides that "Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress;" and that the act of Congress of March 1, 1792, passed before any election of President had been held under a new apportionment, gives a construction to this clause of the Constitution in the following words: "Which electors (of President and Vice President) shall be equal to the number of Senators and Representatives to which the several States may by law be entitled, at the time when the President and Vice President thus to be chosen should come into office." That the new apportionment under the first census took effect from and after March 3, 1793, (act of 14th April, 1792); and that accordingly in 1792, in 1812, and in 1832, the States gave a number of electoral votes for President and Vice President equal to the number of their Senators and Representatives, respectively, from and after March 3, 1793, March 3, 1813, and March 3, 1833; and that the act of 1850 having a similar proviso to that of 1792, so it must be in the next election next fall; that is, the States will vote under the new and not under the old apportionments; that therefore the committee are of opinion that no further legislation is necessary, and report back the resolution, with an amendment changing it from a joint to a simple resolution.

Mr. DOWNS. That report was unanimously concurred in by the committee; they considered the case so clear that there could be no doubt about it. If, therefore, there is no objection on the part of the Senate, I would ask that it may be acted upon and adopted at once. The only change which the committee have deemed it necessary to make in the resolution, is to strike out the word "Joint," so as to make it a simple resolution of the Senate, which the committee thought proper, in order to avoid the forms of legislation which would be necessary in the case of a joint resolution, and that they might adopt it in such a form as to express the opinion of the Senate only.

Mr. BORLAND. I desire simply to say, that as the introducer of that resolution, I am entirely satisfied with the report of the committee. The making it a joint resolution, was not a matter which was material in my mind at the time I introduced it. I knew that there was a great difference of opinion in the country in regard to this matter, and I desired that the question should be settled by some authority, so that the States might proceed at once to exercise their franchises; and I did not think they could do it understandingly or effectually, without some such indication on the part of Congress of the opinions they entertained. I think that such a resolution, adopted by the Senate, would be all-sufficient for the purpose; and it is not necessary to carry it through all the forms of legislation as if it were a joint resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. If I understand the report of the committee, it is that the States are severally to vote under the representation they will have according to the census which has just been taken—that is the census of 1850.

Mr. DOWNS. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. I will ask the honorable Senator who introduced this resolution whether he is aware that it will introduce one rule into the House of Representatives and another into the College of Electors? The House of Representatives is elected under the old census; and if the question of the presidential election should come into the House, as it may under the provisions of the Constitution, then according to this the College of Electors would elect under one census and the House of Representatives under another. The College of Electors would act under the census of 1850, and the House of Representatives would be elected under the census of 1840. I do not know that that is the true and proper construction of the Constitution, but probably the honorable Senator may be right when he says that such has been the usage. I do not know that the usages in this instance would bring us to that conclusion. When the House does elect, it elects under a representation apportioned under a different census.

Mr. DOWNS. The question suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Davis] was considered by the committee, but we did not think that it made any difference whatever. There is no provision in the Constitution, or in the act of 1792, providing that the House of Representatives under the old census should, in the event of the election devolving on them, vote for the President, but it arises from the very necessity of the case. It could not be otherwise, for this reason: Always when the votes are counted, the Constitution requires that Congress shall be in session. It must, therefore, necessarily be the old Congress under the old apportionment, for the new Congress under the new apportionment cannot meet until the 3d of March next. The old Congress will be in existence here when the votes are counted. As the Senator suggests, therefore, it makes not the least difference that the College of Electors may be under one apportionment and the House under another—for this reason: that when the election falls on the House of Representatives, the Electoral College does not vote according to the number of Senators and Representatives, but by States. This was a construction so obviously resulting from the nature of the case, that it was not thought necessary, either in the Convention or afterwards by Congress, to make any additional provision. It would be impossible to say that the next Congress should make the apportionment, for many of the members themselves would not be elected till months afterwards.

The question was then taken on the amendment reported by the committee, and it was agreed to.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire to say that when this subject was before the Committee on the Judiciary, they regarded the construction given by the act of 1792 to the Constitution as entitled to great consideration. Most that was urged before the committee, was that the expression in the Constitution in regard to this matter was not very clear; but it was so soon after the adoption of the Constitution that Congress gave this construction, by that act, that the committee were bound to respect that construction.

The question was then taken on the resolution as amended, and it was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the number of electoral votes to which each State shall be entitled in the election of President and Vice President of the United States in 1852, shall be equal to the number of Senators and Representatives to which each of said States will be found entitled by the apportionment under the enumeration of 1850, as provided by the act for "taking the Seventh and subsequent Censuses," approved May 23, 1850.

On the motion of Mr. DOWNS, the report was ordered to be printed.

RIVER SAN DIEGO.

* Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the resolution relative to building a levee across the mouth of the river San Diego, reported a bill to provide for building a levee across the mouth of the river San Diego to divert it into False bay; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also submitted a document on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GWIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider this bill now. One of the greatest objections to the passage of laws for California—the expenses attending public works in that State—does not apply to this bill. The expenditure is limited to $30,000, which is to be expended in turning the San Diego river into False bay, and thus prevent the filling up of San Diego bay by deposits from this river, which will in time destroy the greater portion of that beautiful harbor. The Secretary of the Navy is restricted in contracting for this work to the amount appropriated in the bill for the reason that it is sufficient to complete it. Responsible citizens of San Diego have pledged themselves to me to turn the river into False bay for this sum of money; and I know it can be completed for the amount named. I have a report from the Topographical Bureau that shows the importance of this work, and that it should be commenced without delay to prevent the destruction of the harbor. This is one of the most beautiful harbors in the world, and of incalculable importance to this country in time of war. It has already been greatly injured by the deposits from San Diego river; and two thirds of its navigable waters will in time be entirely cut off from the ocean if further deposits made by the river are not stopped. I take it for granted that this Government will never permit this important harbor to be thus closed, and hereafter hundreds of thousands of dollars may be required to dredge it out and remove the very deposit that this bill is intended to prevent entering it at all, by throwing the waters of the river into False bay, a sheet of water useless for naval or commercial purposes.

Mr. CLEMENS. I wish to know what is the object of the second reading at this time, whether it is for the purpose of reference?

Mr. GWIN. It is reported now from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT. The object is that the Senate may take action upon the bill.

Mr. CLEMENS. Then I object.

Mr. GWIN. This bill was reported unanimously by the committee, and I hope the Senate will proceed to its consideration now.

The PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Alabama objects; the bill cannot be taken up at this time.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. GEYER gave notice that he should ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the payment to the State of Missouri two per centum of the net proceeds of the sales of public lands therein, heretofore reserved under a compact with said State.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORTON, on behalf of Mr. MALLORY, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to establish a mail route from Key West, Florida, to New Orleans, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

THE ZUNI AND COLORADO RIVERS.

Mr. GWIN submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of War submit to the Senate, as soon as practicable, a copy of the report of the expedition under Captain Sitgreaves, of the Corps of Topographical Engineers, upon the Zuni and the Colorado rivers of California.

PORT OF ENTRY AT TUSCUMBIA.

Mr. CLEMENS submitted the following resolution for consideration; which was agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry at Tusculumbia, Alabama.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The PRESIDENT announced the first general order to be a bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, in aid of the construction of certain railroads in that State.

Mr. GWIN. I see that yesterday, when the honorable Senator from New York [Mr. SEWARD] closed his remarks, there was an understanding on the part of the Senate that this Iowa bill is to occupy the balance of this week, and until Tuesday of next week; and then we are to have taken up the intervention resolutions, which were debated yesterday, which will occupy an indefinite period of time. I appeal to the representatives of thirty of the States of this Union whether they are willing to let the Calendar, which has some two hundred bills upon it, be passed over from week to week for the purpose of discussing a subject in which only one State is interested, and then discuss general resolutions in which no State is interested? Now, I propose that we dispose of this bill to-day, and then let gentlemen who desire to speak upon land bills do so when another bill shall come up for consideration. This will give every member who wishes to speak upon the subject an opportunity to do so; and I will guaranty there will be land bills enough, for I have one of a different sort to propose. We have been discussing this matter for two months; and, as I have before remarked, there are upwards of two hundred bills upon our Calendar, which have scarcely been touched yet. We can do nothing till this bill is disposed of, and I appeal to the Senate to let us have a vote upon it to-day.

The PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. UNDERWOOD.]

Mr. BORLAND. When this bill was under discussion on Monday, I gave notice that I should express my views upon it to-day. I concur fully and entirely with the Senator from California that it is important to have a vote taken upon this bill at an early period—to-day, if it can be done; and, to show that I am in earnest in that concurrence, I now submit to the Senate that it would be better to take the vote this morning. I presume that all the members of the Senate are prepared to vote upon it rather than to hear what I have to say.

Mr. BRODHEAD. No, no; the question cannot be taken to-day.

Mr. BORLAND. If that can be done, I would prefer it. I would prefer it on account of the interests of the bill itself; I would prefer it, too, on my own account, because, since the notice which I gave of my intention to address the Senate, I have not had time to prepare myself in the way I would like; and would be glad, for both of these reasons, if the vote could now be taken, and my speech be dispensed with. But if it is the wish of other Senators to speak upon the subject, then I shall have to go on.

Mr. BELL. You cannot get a vote now; there is no Senate here.

Mr. GWIN. Senators are all in the neighborhood, and can soon be brought in.

Mr. BELL. I understand that there is a new proposition, which has been submitted by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER.] So I see by the papers this morning—a proposition, as I understand it, by way of an amendment. That proposition will deserve some consideration, whether it may not meet with the views of a majority of the Senate, and change the whole features of the principle of this bill.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. It is not at all meant as a substitute for this bill.

Mr. BELL. I understand it proposes a mode of getting clear of all the grounds on which arguments have been made in favor of this bill; and, if it is acceptable, it will relieve the Senate from further discussion. But as that bill has not yet been printed and laid upon our tables, I think we ought at least to have a little time for its consideration before a vote is taken upon the bill now under consideration.

Mr. GWIN. Then let it be understood that to-morrow we will take the vote upon this bill. Sorely, we ought to make some disposition of it immediately, for there are fifty other bills on the subject of granting public lands, upon which Senators can express their views.

Mr. BORLAND. Since there is objection to taking the vote upon this bill to-day, I suppose I must proceed with my remarks, however unprepared I may be.

He then proceeded, and addressed the Senate upwards of two hours in support of the bill. A report of his speech will be found in the Appendix.

Mr. CASS next obtained the floor; but gave way at the request of Senators, and the further consideration of the bill was postponed until tomorrow.

The Senate then proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after a short time so engaged, the doors were reopened,

And the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 10, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana, by unanimous consent, presented certain joint resolutions of the Legislature of Louisiana; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to print the amendment which I offered yesterday, as an amendment to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. BROWN,] for the bill of my colleague, [Mr. JOHNSON,] I will state to the House that my amendment proposes to graduate the price of public lands. I desire that it should be printed, that it may go before the Committee of the Whole, when they take up that measure for action upon it.

There being no objection, the motion was admitted and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent, introduced the following bills, of which previous notice had been given, which were read the first and second time by their titles, and referred as indicated below, viz:

A bill for the relief of George B. Abernethy. Referred to the Committee of Claims.

A bill for the relief of J. P. Gaines. Referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill for the relief of C. M. Walker. Referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to create the office of Surveyor General of the Public Lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey, and to make donations to the settlers of the said public lands. Referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill to amend the act entitled "An act establishing the territorial government of Oregon. Referred to the Committee on Territories.

Also, a joint resolution relative to the seat of government for the Territory of Oregon. Referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. LANE. I also beg leave to introduce a simple resolution asking information of the President.

The resolution was then read for information, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to lay before this House a copy of the correspondence with General J. P. Gaines, Governor of the Territory of Oregon, relative to the location and establishment of the seat of government for said Territory.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I do not object to the gentleman's resolution, but I wish to ask him—

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The introduction of the resolution is objected to. The regular business in order, is the call upon committees for reports.

THE EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have a right to move a suspension of the rules to go into Committee of the Whole upon the special order. I shall not do it unless gentlemen are willing upon all sides to take up those special orders made for to-day, being the bills for the continuation of the work on the Capitol, and in relation to the reconstruction of the Library. I am willing, if there be no objection, and if my friend from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] is willing that his land bill should go over, to take up those two bills, which will occupy but little time. We ought certainly to make an appropriation for the Library. We all feel the want of it, and we had better make an appropriation at once, and let the men go to work. We ought also to appropriate the necessary money to continue the work on the extension of the Capitol, if that work is to go on. Why not let it progress, and thus provide employment for the laborers who have been induced to come here under an implied assurance of continuous employment?

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] objected yesterday to taking up the deficiency bill, when the drafts of the Government are being protested and dishonored; and when the cost of the Government for the provisions necessary to supply the Army are in consequence greatly increased. I think it is of much more importance to transact that sort of legislation, than to take up the bill for the extension of the Capitol.

Mr. KING, of New York. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. This conversation is not in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Do I understand the gentleman from Alabama as objecting to my motion?

Mr. KING. It is no matter whether he does or not, the motion is in order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to suspend the rules, and go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

GENERAL JESUP.

Mr. MACE. I made a few remarks the other day upon the bill for the relief of the heirs of General Watson, growing out of an alleged claim he had against the Government, on account of the purchase which he made of certain slaves captured by the Cherokees in the Seminole war. During these remarks, I incidentally alluded to the capture of Osceola—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist that it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. MACE. I will let the gentleman know it is a question of privilege.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg pardon.

Mr. MACE. During these remarks I cast, by implication, a censure upon one of the most meritorious officers now, or who has been, in the Army of the United States. I allude to General Jesup. General Jesup was the commanding officer at—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I think it is clear that this is no privileged question—one that is acknowledged by the rules—and can only come in by general consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must enforce the rules, and say to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] that he does not regard the point he has made as involved in a question of privilege. The question pending is to suspend the rules.

Mr. MACE. Is there any objection to my proceeding?

Mr. CLINGMAN. There is. Let the gentleman reply through the papers.

Mr. MACE. I will simply say that I did not intend to do General Jesup, upon that occasion, any injustice whatever. I consider him a high-minded, liberal man—a man deserving the confidence of the whole country—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

THE EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] before he submits his motion to go into Committee of the Whole, that we can take a shorter method to facilitate the object and dispose of this matter.

Mr. KING, of New York. I rise to a question of order. I think this discussion in relation to priority of business is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Kentucky as discussing anything.

Mr. STANTON. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina to withdraw his proposition to go into committee, and permit me to introduce a resolution to this effect: that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the special order in reference to the repairs at the Capitol. It can then come before the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It can only come in by general consent. I will not object, if nobody else objects.

Mr. STANTON. It can be disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. FICKLIN. It is useless to do so, because I shall certainly object.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FICKLIN] did not probably understand the motion. I understand the motion to apply to the Library, and not to the extension.

Mr. CLINGMAN. To both.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the view of letting it be passed, I will not interpose the least objection.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will not interpose any objection.

Mr. STANTON. I move, then, that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of that part of the special order relating to the reconstruction of the Library, and that it be now considered by the House.

Mr. ORR. Do I understand the gentleman's motion as including the bill to provide for making appropriations for the Library?

The SPEAKER. That is the bill from the consideration of which the gentleman proposes to discharge the committee.

Mr. ORR. I object to the introduction of the resolution. I am willing that the other matter shall come up.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I renew my motion to suspend the rules of the House, and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, upon the special order.

The question was then taken, and it was agreed to accordingly.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HUBBARD in the Chair), and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 7, for the encouragement of agriculture, manufactures, and other branches of industry, by granting to every man, &c., one hundred and sixty acres of land.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. RICHARDSON said: During the brief period I have served as a member of Congress, I have never, upon any occasion, arisen to address the House with so much regret as I do upon the present occasion. I shall not allude to the question which is involved in the bill under consideration. The Democratic party of the State of Illinois demands of some of her representatives, when her favorite son has been assailed upon this floor, to repel the charges made against him, whether made directly or indirectly. That Democracy have some right to be heard. In all times past—in all the disasters that have beset the Democratic party—whether weal or woe has attended it—the Democracy of my State have ever stood forth, and have never given way in the darkest hour of battle. For fifteen years, no son of her's has contributed so much to produce these results as my distinguished friend, Judge DOUGLAS. In behalf of that Democracy—in behalf of that leader who has led them on in so many contests, and to victory—I appear here to-day.

Sir, it is not remarkable that the Democrats of Illinois should be attached to Judge DOUGLAS. Twenty years ago, he came among them a friendless and penniless young mechanic. Unaided by anything, except by his own talents, he has risen to the position he now so ably fills—at all times struggling, at all times battling for the doctrines which have been, and are, near and dear to Democrats. Is it, then, remarkable that that Democracy should be attached to him? Is it remarkable that they should expect his successor upon this floor, when by imputation his fair fame is sought to be sullied, to defend him?

Sir, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] in his allusions the other day, drew, in glowing and eloquent colors, pictures of the struggles of the Democracy of his own State. Sir, it is true that that Democracy have struggled and have fought, and the Democracy of this nation have not been unmindful of the exertions of her leaders. On more occasions than one, the Democracy of my State have aided her sons in their aspirations, both to secure nominations and then elections. That distinguished son of Kentucky, Colonel JOHNSON—distinguished for his long service here, and for his valor on the field—had nowhere more zealous or ardent friends than that Democracy which was led by the Senator from my own State. The gentleman who was defended the other day by the gentleman from Kentucky, General Butler, has found in that Democracy warm and reliable friends, both before and after his nomination for the Vice-Presidency. We have not been unmindful of them, while we have looked with hope and expectation that the clouds that lowered over them were soon to pass away. And when, in the recent struggle, her Democracy came out victorious, no son of hers anywhere rejoiced more than I did. I had hoped and trusted that the time was come when that Democracy were permanently in the ascendancy.

I am not here now, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of assailing anybody. It is not my habit to do so. I am not unwilling at any time to engage in contests and controversies with political opponents, but not with political friends. My object, my mission, as a representative in Congress, is peace; all of our missions should be peace among ourselves, if we believe that the doctrines we advocate will advance the great interests of our country, for unless we have peace, these doctrines cannot be in the ascendant. Sir, entertaining this belief, I was astonished the other day, when an assault was made by a Democrat from Kentucky upon a Democrat from Illinois. I am not here to follow the example then set me. I mean to confine myself to legitimate defense, and to defence only. I know that in these wars we might do some mischief to political friends. I do not choose to do so. It is not my purpose to do so. It is not in accordance with my feelings—with my views. While I say this, I must be permitted to make another remark. Whenever and whenever any gentleman wishes to make any assault upon the Senator from Illinois, I desire that he may do it openly and boldly, that it may be met, admitted, explained, or denied. If any gentleman has anything to say in relation to him, I want to hear it. His record is as clean, as clear, as defensible, as that of any man who has been so long and so conspicuously in public life. His political and personal character, from childhood up, is open to the investigation of every one. If charges are to be made, I ask that they may be made publicly and openly. I am ready to discuss with any gentleman, anywhere, the claims, the merits, the political integrity, the personal integrity, honor, and high bearing, of the distinguished Senator from my own State. I seek to shield him from nothing. I ask no concealment in his behalf.

The gentleman from Kentucky, in his remarks the other day, said:

"Now, let me give a brief history of this matter. There was a gentleman, able, full of talent, full of activity, a particular partisan and friend—as he had a right to be—of a particular gentleman mentioned in connection with the Presidency; that gentleman went to the State of Kentucky upon a political pilgrimage last fall, the object of which was, I suppose, to drive General Butler from his own soil—to dishonor him at home, by fastening upon him a corrupt political intrigue; but meeting there the same fate as befel those who went to drive the McGregor from his native heath, he came back and bought up the Democratic Review for a political partisan paper for the campaign, and with no names at the mast-head, that Review is now pursuing a course as fatal to the Democratic party, as it is false and unfair.

"Mr. Chairman, every man, whether he be a Whig or a Democrat, has a right to be a candidate for every office—that being one of the elements of freedom in this country—and no man ought to be blamed for the misconduct of his friends, unless he connives at it. The individuals assailed in this paper, either covertly or by name, are CASS, BUCHANAN, BUTLER, HOUSTON—in fact, all the candidates, except the distinguished Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] who seems to be a particular favorite."

Now, I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if he intends that it shall be inferred from his remarks, that this pilgrimage was had by the advice, procurement, or consent of Judge DOUGLAS?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not know whether the gentleman from Illinois proposes to ask me a series of questions in the course of his speech. If he does, I desire to say now that the gentleman may go on with his speech, draw whatever inferences he chooses from my remarks as here reported, and, as the matter will assume somewhat the form of a personal explanation, I will afterwards ask, what I believe is the ordinary courtesy of the House, the favor of making an explanation in reply. I will say, however, in direct reply to this question, that I did not intend to intimate that Judge DOUGLAS was cognizant of that movement or stimulated it. I spoke of it as a fact—a fact proceeding from a particular friend, and particular partisan of that distinguished Senator. I spoke of it in connection with other facts subsequently occurring; indeed, I would have to read my whole speech, and comment on every portion of it, in order to explain the connection. I gave the gentleman an opportunity, as he had requested me to do, to relieve Judge DOUGLAS. I told the gentleman, and others who came to converse with me on this subject, that I intended in my speech to notice the course of the Democratic Review, because I thought that there was a wide distinction between the ordinary partisan papers of the day, and a periodical of that kind professing to discuss only general principles, as it had done previously. The gentleman requested me, when I came to that part of my remarks, to afford him an opportunity to make an explanation that would entirely disconnect Judge DOUGLAS from the Review in every respect. I told him I would do so, and the reason I mentioned Judge DOUGLAS at all was this: the gentleman from Illinois was sitting beside me, and when I got to the end of the first paragraph which he has read, I turned to him in order that he might make the disclaimer, according to the understanding between us; he remarked, sotto voce, "you have said nothing yet which would authorize me to rise," and I then mentioned Judge DOUGLAS as the gentleman who seemed to be the particular favorite of the conductors of the Review.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not propose to catechise the gentleman from Kentucky. I have stated that my object is to vindicate, not to assail; and I intend to carry it out. I am glad to know that the gentleman from Kentucky acquits Judge DOUGLAS of all participation in that movement.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, (interrupting.) I have stated distinctly that I made no charge, either that Judge DOUGLAS was cognizant of, or stimulated the political pilgrimage to Kentucky, to which I referred. That was what I stated.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand the gentleman's acquittal of Judge DOUGLAS to be only in relation to that pilgrimage.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I make no charges and no acquittals. I make a statement of facts, that are facts; and I afforded the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] an opportunity to explain. He arose and explained. There is my speech; there is his explanation. He deems it unsatisfactory and rises now to explain still further. I make no charges, I acquit nobody, I charge nobody. It is in the hands of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. RICHARDSON. There is no desire upon my part to bring about any controversy between the gentleman from Kentucky and myself. I have stated distinctly what my object was, and I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky, in the utmost candor, and utmost frankness, that it is not at all times the most advantageous way to say I directly charge a thing. Now, I would rather they would say I charge you with such and such things, than to say by innuendo, by insinuation, what they are not willing to say directly. Now, sir, I want to say in reply to this matter—and I say it here by authority—that so far as this pilgrimage is concerned, of which the gentleman speaks, Judge DOUGLAS knew nothing about it, assented to it in no way, nor did he connive at it in any way. The gentleman says he acquits of nothing, because he charges nothing. The extract which I have read does subject Judge DOUGLAS to the imputation of aiding and procuring this pilgrimage to be made, and the purchase of the Review. This is a charge. When an opportunity is afforded the gentleman to relieve Judge DOUGLAS from those charges, if they were not intended to be made by him, his disavowal of them would have been sufficient. It was all I asked, all I wanted, all I desired.

Sir, has it come to this, that a gentleman, a native of Kentucky, cannot return to visit the land of his nativity—the scenes of his childhood—to visit his father, without subjecting the man he may prefer for President to the charge of sending him upon a political mission. I submit it to all fair and candid men, is it fair to put such a construction upon such an act? I am in the habit, sometimes, of going to Kentucky, the State that contains many objects near and dear to me. My mother resides there, and I go to see her. I am a friend of Judge DOUGLAS, and when I have been there I have talked about him; but I have talked more about Democracy than I have about men; and I regret to say that many of my friends and relatives there need a great deal of talking to, for they are not exactly right upon all these matters, and I should dislike to go to Kentucky if all my friends are to be responsible for any indiscretion I may commit when I am there.

The gentleman says, that after Sanders visited Kentucky, he returned to New York and purchased the Democratic Review, to carry out the objects he had failed to accomplish in this pilgrimage to Kentucky. I will repeat what I said the other day:

"I wish to say, in connection with the remarks which have been made by the gentleman from Kentucky, that, so far as Judge DOUGLAS is concerned, he has no interest in, and no control over, the Democratic Review. He is not responsible for anything that has appeared in its columns, or that may appear, unless it be over his own signature."

"I know that Judge DOUGLAS deprecates the assaults that are made by Democratic papers upon Democratic men. His object, his desire, his wish, is, that we may have harmony, peace, and good-will among the entire party. He believes, as I do, that the perpetuity of our institutions depends upon the success of the Democratic party. By division, we cannot promote that success."

And I will add, that Judge DOUGLAS had no knowledge or intimation that the Review was purchased by Mr. Sanders, until he saw it stated in the New York papers, and never knew or suspected that Mr. Sanders intended to purchase it until he saw the notice of the purchase.

I must be permitted, Mr. Chairman, in connection with this matter, to say, that no man regretted the appearance of the article in the January number, entitled "'52 and the Presidency," more than I did. Yet, sir, I do not know of any power in this country, that can control the press. I know of no power competent to do it. Wherever upon earth the liberty of the press has been overthrown, the liberty of its citizens has gone with it. An Executive decree in France muzzles the press, and there it could not be done till every vestige of liberty had been placed beneath the feet of Louis Napoleon. Does any man in this country want a censorship over the freedom of the press? Its excesses can only be restrained by an enlightened public opinion. They should be condemned. I am not here to apologize for the Democratic Review, or for its indiscretion. I am here to condemn them—do condemn them; but I know of no power to establish a censorship over the press by which you can control it. God forbid that the day shall ever come upon this country when the press is to be trampled under foot, or its liberty restrained. When it does come, that proud emblem of your liberties will plume her wing and take her flight forever.

When I have made the statement, Mr. Chairman, that Judge DOUGLAS had no interest in or control over the Democratic Review, I have said all that can be required by any just man—by anybody—to acquit him of all responsibility for anything that may have appeared, or may appear in its columns. It is most remarkable, most wonderful that such sensitiveness should be exhibited upon this point. Why, has it never occurred to the gentleman, that there is a paper in this city, an organ of our party, looked to as such, which has attacked Judge DOUGLAS, though not by name? No friend of his has made defense here or elsewhere, or complained that it was done; and no man would for a moment hold the gentleman that is favored by that paper responsible for the attack. Presses all over the country attack every candidate but their own favorite—attack them personally; it is all right and proper, but whenever a public press, friendly to Judge DOUGLAS, commits an error or a fault, they seek to fix it upon him, they hold him responsible for it, and let all the balance go scot-free. I submit if you are dealing fairly, if you are dealing manly by your own political friends? Is it the manner in which you and I would act towards one another?

But I will proceed in the line that I laid down for these remarks. After the appearance of the January number of the Democratic Review containing the article entitled "'52 and the Presidency," Judge DOUGLAS called upon a number of gentlemen, supposed to have influence with the editor of the Review, to get them to use their exertions to persuade him to desist in his course, which was calculated to injure the Democratic party. Among others, he called upon the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] if I am not mistaken, and if I am, I hope the gentleman will correct me—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, (interposing.) I had a conversation with Judge DOUGLAS, which I will speak of when the gentleman shall have done, if he desires it.

Mr. RICHARDSON, (continuing.) At all events, he called upon others, and thus did more than he was required to do. He did not stop here. He did not want quarrels among his friends. He sought to avoid them. I have said Judge DOUGLAS knew nothing of what the January number contained until he saw it in print. Before the issuing of the February number, he did learn, from a gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. Peck,] that it would contain an attack upon General Butler. Upon learning that fact, he immediately telegraphed to the editor to suppress it. The editor of the Review writes back the following letter, which I will read:

ASTOR HOUSE, NEW YORK, February 20, 1852.

Hon. S. A. DOUGLAS—SIR: I am happy to inform you that your telegraph came too late to save your friend, General Butler; and candor compels me to say, that had it come in time, it would not have changed a word of the article. We know the man; and the Review would be treacherous in its duties to the party if it failed, to expose his delinquencies.

The foggy atmosphere of Washington makes cowards of you all, and the sooner you understand that you cannot direct the columns of the Review, the better.

GEO. N. SANDERS.

The editor announces his purpose to conduct the Review in his own way. He has that right if he will exercise it, and I do not know how you will control it. My purpose is not to enter into his defense; he is fully competent for that task himself. My object is to repel the implication of Judge DOUGLAS's connection with the Review, which, without being directly charged, is covertly sought to be fixed upon him.

The facts which I have stated were known to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] before he made his speech. This should have been sufficient, of itself, to have protected Judge DOUGLAS from the unjust implication to which the gentleman's remarks most clearly rendered him obnoxious. I take it to be a fact, too well established to be doubted, that Judge DOUGLAS had no control over the paper in question, or influence with its editor. This fact being established, the whole matter is concluded; and what, I might ask, further can be said in defense of these assaults. This fact thus clearly established, is sought to be overthrown by an inference. It is said Judge DOUGLAS recommended the Review, and therefore he indorses and approves all that it contained. I might ask if this is true. That Judge DOUGLAS, in common with many members of the Senate and House—including, as it is believed, the friends of every Democratic aspirant for the Presidency—did sign a recommendation, as has been the custom for years past, is not denied. In order that this matter may be fully understood, I call upon gentlemen to publish that recommendation, with the names of Senators and Representatives in the order in which they were signed, that we may see the terms of the recommendation and the names of the persons attached. When we get that paper with the signers, I will submit the question to them, and each of them, how far they should be held responsible for each and every article that has appeared in the Review.

One word in relation to myself. When asked the other day by the gentleman from Kentucky, whether Judge DOUGLAS signed the recommendation for the Review before or after the issuing of the January No. of that paper, I said it was before. That statement was based upon this fact: Judge DOUGLAS had forgotten the time when he did so sign, but recollected that at the same time he signed the recommendation he paid his subscription, and took a receipt therefor. That receipt bears date January 6th, and that was before the January issue of that paper. Now, I want to talk perfectly free and frank upon this subject. That date may be erroneous, it may be wrong; if that date given by the agent is correct, the statement then made is correct—if a wrong date, the fault is with the agent; and now to free this matter of all doubt, while I cannot say whether the date is the true one or not, gentlemen are at perfect liberty to assume, if they wish, that it was after, and they can make the most of it. For by assuming that it was after, it places the friends of our candidates in the same category with Judge DOUGLAS. I am not here to quibble about a date, when the only object is to establish an inference, to overthrow an ascertained fact.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. One word before the gentleman goes on. I do not know what may be the custom of the House, as I am a new member; but there have been a number of direct personal allusions made by the gentleman to myself, which it is absolutely necessary that I should answer. I do not wish to take up the time of the gentleman. I do not want to deal unjustly, and I want to have an understanding now that I may be allowed to make an explanation when he has done.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!" "Agreed!"

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not know what allusions I have made to the gentleman. I have merely stated facts. The gentleman is perfectly at liberty, when I do him injustice, to reply, and set me right. I would not intentionally do him wrong for the world. I now make that disclaimer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. A gentleman has notified me that when the gentleman gets through with his remarks, he will object, I having spoken once upon this subject.

A MEMBER. Amendments have been offered since, and he can't object, if you get the floor.

Mr. R. But I must pass from that subject. I am not getting along as fast as I thought I would. I had no idea that I would be drawn into the remarks I have. This is a most unwelcome task to me. I have concluded my reply to the gentleman from Kentucky; but before I pass from this subject I would like to say that I want no strife in the Democratic party. I have not brought this subject here. It has been forced upon the House against my will—against my consent. Being here, we invite the fullest discussion—the fullest assaults, if they have any to make, upon Judge DOUGLAS; but, if any, make them directly. The remembrance of defeats ought to make us concede everything for measures and demand nothing for men. I am here in that spirit to-day. I ever have been here in that spirit. There are some other things, Mr. Chairman, to which I feel it my duty to make reference.

There is one subject upon which I have not spoken, upon which I deem it necessary to touch. I know that it is said—not here, but elsewhere—that Judge DOUGLAS is the steam candidate for the Presidency; but that whole question is brought in a shape that we cannot get hold of it. I want to meet it at once. I give it the flat denial. There is not one man owning an interest in any of the ocean steam lines, so far as I have been enabled to ascertain, favorable to Judge DOUGLAS as his first choice. There are three steam lines. Aspinwall & Co. are all Whigs, and not for DOUGLAS, but for the Whig candidate. Of the firm of Law, Crowell & Roberts—owners of the line from New York to Chagres—the first two are understood to be for General CASS, and the latter (Mr. Roberts) for the Whig candidate. Mr. Collins—owner of the line from New York to Liverpool—is understood to be for General CASS or Governor MARCY. Not one of the proprietors of the various lines is for Judge DOUGLAS, so far as I know or have been able to ascertain. If there is, will any gentleman name him? Is there any gentleman here who would do it? I do not say that these gentlemen are hostile, but that they prefer other gentlemen.

Mr. OLDS. Perhaps it was meant that DOUGLAS will go by steam when he is nominated. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have no doubt about it. The Whigs will see sights when he is nominated. There is an element of popularity about him from the fact that, by his own unaided exertion, he has come up from poverty to eminence, till he occupies, at forty years of age, as proud a position as any man in America.

There is another charge. Now, I hear it said here sometimes that DOUGLAS has sold out and transferred his interest to this man, that man, and the other man. To each and every statement of this kind, separately and distinctly, I give a flat denial. Judge DOUGLAS is a candidate, and he has a right to be.

It is said that he has stirred up strife in different States. I am here to repel any such charge. I make the declaration without any qualification, that in no instance has he sanctioned opposition to any Democratic candidate in his own State. I make the broad declaration, that he has sought to avoid those things which would lead to a contest, and having done so he is not liable to these charges that have been preferred. What is there that has drawn upon him all this assault?

I will not go into these controversies. I have nothing to do with them between this and that man and the other man. I am here for a specific purpose, and I have endeavored to perform it without making any assaults. I make assaults upon none. Judge DOUGLAS has made assaults upon none, and he has retired from the contest wherever a candidate has been presented in a State. He has made no fight with anybody, and has desired his friends should make none. Of one thing I can speak, and that with pride: Whatever division there may be among the different States upon local candidates, in Illinois there is but one sentiment, one view, and one wish among the Democracy. Illinois can give for Judge DOUGLAS such a majority as no State in this Union has ever given before. But wherever the nomination may fall, you may look to that Democracy, you may expect to find them as firm, steadfast, and reliable as her own regiments have been upon the field of battle when fighting the enemies of their country. She will give a vote to your candidate, be he who he may; and her Democracy will present an undivided front when the trial comes.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN obtained the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will ask the gentleman to yield me fifteen or twenty minutes of his time, to make a personal explanation.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will yield the floor, if it is understood that it is not to come out of my time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will say to my friend from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN,] that I may not occupy more than fifteen minutes. I have never asked a favor of the House. I am not used to its customs. It is necessary for me to make a personal explanation, springing out of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] and I hope the House will allow me this explanation, and that it shall not come out of the time of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. WASHBURN.]

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!" "That's right!"

Mr. WASHBURN. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Kentucky for the purpose of a personal explanation, understanding he will not occupy more than fifteen minutes, retaining my right to the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Conscious of the purity of my own motives, and of my own course, I have heard with surprise, but with composure, the speech of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON.] I made a speech in this House some days ago, in which, after a discussion involving general politics, in answer to the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. CABELL,] I turned to notice the course which had been pursued by the Democratic Review, in reference, not to one only, but all the Democratic candidates for the Presidency, except one. I noticed that Review, because it was not an ordinary partisan sheet. Any newspaper through the country might have uttered what it pleased, and I should have paid no attention to it. It was because this Review occupied a peculiar position of dignity and importance in the party, and had been purchased and diverted from its original purpose, and turned into a campaign paper, striking right and left at all the best names of the Democratic party, that I introduced this matter upon the floor of the House. I introduced it not to make an assault upon anybody, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] supposes and charges. I introduced it—it might have been presumption in me—for the purpose of giving the Democratic party warning of the dissensions springing up in their midst. I noticed it for the purpose of repelling the assault made by this Review upon the well known principles of the party, and upon the tried and reliable men of the party. I have since heard many gentlemen express their opinions in reference to the tone of this speech, and I believe that a vast majority of the members upon this floor do not consider that it contains anything to which any Democrat ought to object.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] considers it, and persists in considering it, a direct attack upon Judge DOUGLAS. He came to me before I rose to speak, perhaps the day before, and asked if I intended to notice the course of the Review? I said I did. He requested to have an opportunity of relieving Judge DOUGLAS from all connection with it, which I promised to afford him, and did afford him. I mentioned the name of Judge DOUGLAS, in order to give him the opportunity. The gentleman implores harmony in the party; but the way to produce harmony, is to stop at the beginning these fatal attacks, and this diversion of important and influential periodicals of the party from their proper purposes.

The gentleman makes his point upon a statement in my speech, that a gentleman—a countryman and a friend of mine—having gone to Kentucky last summer, attempted to stir up strife there, and break down General Butler at home; but having failed, came back and purchased the Democratic Review. That is true; that is a fact which I stated. The Review was used for purposes which led to unpleasant feelings and conjectures, and it was proper that the matter should be explained. My apology for that statement—and it will be a sufficient answer to the gentleman's charge of assault—is to be found simply in one or two extracts, which I will read from the January number of the Democratic Review. My remarks on "Progress," in the speech I made the other day, were entirely incidental, and intended as an answer to that sort of progress which that number of the Review inculcated.

These extracts will give you some idea of the character of the progress that is wanted. It is from an article headed, "1852 and the Presidency:"

"In every land of Europe, from the Atlantic shore to the Turkish confines, the United States have a more numerous, more chivalrous, and more powerful army, than the monarchic and absolutist tyrants of the people—it is the people—it is the two hundred and fifty millions of suffering humanity, to whose ideas the United States is a heaven beyond the setting sun, who dream in gladness ecstasy of the day when our flag shall be unfurled, or even our nod, earth-shaking as the nod of Jove, shall be given for the liberation of nations."

"But we have reached times when Quaker policy will not do for the Republic. The time has come for strong, sturdy, clear-headed, and honest men to act; and the Republic must have them, should it be compelled, as the Colonies were in 1776, to drag the hero of the time out of a hole in a wild forest, whether in Virginia or the illimitable West."

"We must transfer the field of war to the soil of Europe, and change the issue, from a contest whether monarchs shall be heard us here, to a contest whether they and their impious practices shall for an hour longer be tolerated there."

My time will not allow me to quote further on this point. The rest is in the same tone. I wish all it proposes would immediately come to pass; but I do not wish to involve my country in war to bring it about.

But, sir, to carry out this new dispensation, it was necessary to remove all who might be supposed to stand in the way; and accordingly the article proceeds:

"But such a result can only be expected from a Democratic Administration, and one more progressive than we have hitherto been content with. To wield such a power with such enormous results, the presidential chair must be filled by a man not of the last generation, but of this, of the very time in which we live."

"The statesmen of a previous generation, with their personal antipathies, and their personal claims, with personal greatness or personal inefficiency, must get out of the way." "Age is to be honored, but senility is pitiable, especially when it leads its possessor to practices at variance with his former life—especially when it leads a Democrat of formerly commendable repute to expect the friendship of the South, and at the same time hope to conceal his delinquencies with the Van Burenites. And if there be some others of the gentlemen of the past age who can show clean hands on this subject, they will be found to be men incapable of grasping the difficulties of the present time, of fathoming its ideas, or controlling its policy. At all events they have been in office, and have had the control of the destinies of the country and of the party. It was in their power to do good. But by lack of statesmanship, lack of temper, lack of discretion, and, most of all, by lack of progress, they brought into our ranks discord and dissension, and the party they received united, strong, and far in advance, they left a wreck, a mutinous wreck, struggling in the slough of questions settled by the Federal compact of the United States."

"Many young statesmen there are in the Democratic ranks, eloquent, judicious, manly, personally unexceptionable in every respect, and endowed with the necessary qualifications we have above indicated, upon whom their personal friends and admirers might have pitched their hopes for the Presidency. Wily wire-pullers and local politicians are endeavoring to make it appear that each State of the Union is working with tremendous vigor for some imaginary 'favorite son,' to whom, by thus exciting State pride, that State may be induced to fix itself, and thus increase the influence for evil and the purchasable value of the local politician aforesaid."

This disposes of all the military characters:

"Against the Democratic candidate, the Whigs will place General Scott, and if military renown were of any avail, General Scott is certain of the Presidency. But we trust the republics everywhere have learned sufficient lessons as to the selection of military Presidents." "Certainly, the Democratic ranks can show no equal to General Scott in managing armies and writing letters, and on that account alone, if the examples of what is obtained by an avidity for military Presidents were not too strikingly before us, it would be madness in the Democratic party to put forward any candidate against whom the jealousy and unpopularity due to a military politician can lie."

After announcing a plot on the part of Mr. SEWARD (which I do not deny) to elect General Scott on the strength of buttons and plume, the article proceeds:

"To crush this plot before its birth, the convention must nominate the proper man, and rival Scott with a tried civilian, not with a second or third-rate general, subject to the same weaknesses as his antagonist."

"To recapitulate: the Democratic nominee for '52 must, therefore, not be trammelled with ideas belonging to an anterior era, or a man of merely local fame and local affections, but a statesman who can bring young blood, young ideas, and young hearts to the councils of the Republic. Your mere general, whether he can write on his card the battle-fields of Mexico, or more heroically boast of his prowess in a militia review; your mere lawyer, trained in the quiddities of the court, but without a political idea beyond a local election; your mere wire-puller and 'judicious bottle-holder,' who claims preeminence now, on the sole ground that he once played second fiddle to better men, and who cozens himself in his corner with the idea that he can split votes with the Abolition and sectional factions he has intrigued with; and, above all, your beaten horse, whether he ran for a previous presidential cup as first or second, or nowhere at all on the ticket—none of these will do. The Democratic party expects from the Baltimore Convention a new man, a statesman of sound Democratic pluck, and world-wide ideas to use it on;" "a bold man, who can stand the brunt of foreign war, and maintain, by the vigor and reach of his councils, the honor of our flag, whether on the land or the sea; and yet, a man astute and wise as Cato, who can, by the use of foreign material, save our shores from attack, and crush the despots of the world in their very dens." "Let the Baltimore Convention give to this, the young generation of America, a candidate, and we are content."

Now, sir, this is a sample of the January number of the Democratic Review. I did not believe in the principles of progress there advocated. At least, I did not believe that the Federal Government, under our theory of a limited constitutional compact, for certain purposes, was authorized to carry out that system of progress; and in the next place, I thought the article fatal to the harmony of the Democratic party, and unjust to many of the ablest men in our ranks. Indeed, that seems to be conceded by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] and I have not heard any Democrat express a different opinion.

In the course of my speech, I asked the gentleman from Illinois, not for the purpose of making any charge, but to enable him, as he had requested me to do, to relieve Judge DOUGLAS, he being well understood to be the favorite of the conductors of the Review, and it having been purchased for the purpose of promoting his prospects for the Presidency—I asked him this question, (referring to a recommendation of the Review, which had been given by certain members of Congress): "I ask the gentleman from Illinois if he is able to state 'whether it was signed by Judge DOUGLAS before or after the leading article of the January number 'was printed and circulated?'" The leading article in the January number was printed and circulated about the 1st of January—a day or two before or after. A copy was sent to me, to Mr. ROBINSON, a member of this House from Indiana, and to other gentlemen on this floor. It was printed separately.

Mr. RICHARDSON. About that, I know nothing.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I did not say the gentleman knew anything about it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman will please allow me to go on. I have made no charge against him, and it does not affect him at all. About the third week in January, the whole Review for that month appeared. About the 6th of February—a day or two before, or a day or two after—an agent for the Democratic Review by the name of Foster, came to this city from the city of New York. He had with him samples of the Review, and a paper to which he obtained the signatures of some members of this House, and some members of the Senate, cordially recommending that Review (which the paper announced had changed hands) to the Democracy of the country, and particularly to the South, as it was thought it would suit that meridian. The agent started for Richmond, with that paper and with an immense pile of that number of the Review. A gentleman now in this Capitol (Mr. Parker, of the Library) met him on board the boat, heard his statement, saw the paper, and went on to Richmond with him. After he got to Richmond, the agent of the Review met with Mr. Parker in the office of Mr. Ritchie, the editor of the Richmond Enquirer, and he showed the paper, with those names and the Review, to Mr. Ritchie and other gentlemen. I have made this statement for the purpose of inviting any explanation that may be offered hereafter.

I asked the gentleman from Illinois "if he was able to state whether Judge DOUGLAS signed that paper before or after the leading article in the January number was printed and circulated?" The gentleman replied that "it was signed previous to the appearance of the January number, and not after it." As the gentleman rose on behalf of Judge DOUGLAS, and as his particular friend, I took it for granted that he was speaking by authority, and was very happy to hear his statement. This is a simple matter, and ought to be cleared up without difficulty. There is no use in fogging it by enlarging on the fidelity of the Illinois Democracy. I never questioned their fidelity. There is no use in fogging it by saying that I made assaults. I have made no assault. But if the gentleman considered his explanation unsatisfactory, I will reduce the affair to a single point that ought settle the whole matter. I have never seen that paper of recommendation. The gentleman asks why we do not produce and publish it? I answer, that when last seen, it was in the possession of the agent of the Review, and is now probably in the hands of the conductors, the agent, or some one connected with the establishment. I neither saw the paper nor read it, but I have been told what it contained. There were signed to it, long after the assault appeared in the January number, the names of certain members of Congress. I do not know whether there were "any candidates for the Presidency" among them or not. Judge DOUGLAS signed that paper and his name, with a separate line, cordially recommending the Review, is below the other names upon the list, which names were signed in the month of February, when the agent of that Review was in this city on his way to Richmond. Now, I ask the gentleman from Illinois, if he is prepared to repeat his statement, made the other day, that Judge DOUGLAS "signed that paper before and not after the January number appeared?" And I ask him if Judge DOUGLAS did not sign it when the agent was here, and when other members of Congress signed it?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will answer that question most cheerfully, for I have no motive to conceal anything. Judge DOUGLAS has no means of telling when he signed that paper, except, as I said, by the receipt. The receipt was given for two years' subscription, at the same time that he put his signature to the paper, and that was on the 6th of January. If the receipt is rightly dated, that was the day on which Judge DOUGLAS signed the paper. While I cannot say whether the date is the true one or not, the gentleman is at liberty to assume it was after the January number was issued, and make the most of it.

Mr. HART. When he did sign it, he had not read that article. That I can state by authority.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think it is probable the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] was right when he conjectured in his remarks, there might be a mistake in the date of that receipt, as he says it is dated the 6th of January, because by substituting the 6th of February we strike the exact time at which the agent was here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not intend any such inference to be drawn. Judge DOUGLAS cannot fix the date unless the receipt fixes it. I stated distinctly, and I repeat it now, that there may be no misunderstanding, that if the receipt is right, the statement I made is correct; if the receipt is wrong, it may be otherwise. But, be that as it may, one fact is established, and that is that Judge

DOUGLAS condemned and did all he could to prevent the course pursued by the Review.

The gentleman says that the agent had the paper and that it may be in the possession of the editors of the Democratic Review. The present editors of the Democratic Review, as I understand, repudiate this agent altogether. He was the agent of the old concern. I have signed papers for him several years ago, and paid him subscriptions. But the present editors repudiated him altogether, and he was not their agent at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Whether he was their agent or not, he had in his possession a great many copies of the January number of the Review.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I had supposed the gentleman had the paper.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I never saw either the man or the paper in my life.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The paper can certainly be had, and now let us have it, and let it be published.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I sincerely hope the paper may be published. But I call the attention of the committee to the fact, that I have not got it and cannot be supposed to have it, but it ought to be in the possession of some one connected with the Democratic Review, because, when last seen, it was in the possession of the agent of the Review, who had a large number of copies of the periodical with him, and was acting for the promotion of its interests.

Mr. WASHBURN. The time I yielded to the gentleman has expired and I must claim the floor. [Cries of "Oh no, let him go on!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine longer yield the floor to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WASHBURN. I cannot.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I hope the gentleman from Maine will give me an opportunity to make a single statement in reference to the conversation with Judge DOUGLAS, to which the gentleman from Illinois has alluded. I will be very brief.

Mr. WASHBURN. Well, I will yield for a few moments longer.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I have now said all I desire to say in reference to the January number of the Democratic Review, and I hope have put myself on proper ground. The February number has been referred to by the gentleman from Illinois. That number, it will be recollected, contains a sort of continuation of the article in the January number; but in addition to the general assault, covertly, upon the other candidates, it contains a violent assault on General Butler, by name. The gentleman produces a letter, dated some time in February, and said to have been sent from the city of New York by Mr. Sanders, the conductor of the Review, in answer to a telegraphic dispatch which he received from Judge DOUGLAS, informing the Judge that he could not control the columns of that paper, and that the editor would publish what he pleased. The gentleman also states that I had had a conversation with Judge DOUGLAS, and well knew, before I made my speech, that he had attempted to prevent the appearance of the article in the February number. If I have the consent of the gentleman, as he has alluded to it, I will repeat the substance of the conversation between Judge DOUGLAS and myself. I presume, from his having referred to it, that he wishes me to do so. I will first remark, that most of my comments and criticisms were intended for the January number of that Review, and my remarks were intended as a defense of all the members of the Democratic party who were assailed in that article. I will not repeat that conversation, because it was a private one; and it is suggested to me that I had better not give it.

[Loud cries of "Give it!" and "Oh, no!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I do not think it material that I should do so. The gentleman wishes to know why I made any allusion at all to the February number of the Review, after I had been informed that Judge DOUGLAS had tried to stop the publication of that number.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; that is not it. The point that I make, is this: not that the gentleman alluded to it, for I expected he would allude to it, but that with this knowledge that Judge DOUGLAS had no power to control the Democratic Review, he yet did not acquit him of it—as Democrats ought to do, when they are satisfied that he had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman complains, then, because, after I was informed that Judge DOUGLAS tried to stop the publication of that number, I did not, in my speech, expressly acquit him of the power to control the Review. I answer, that, in the first place, I never charged him with having any such power. The gentleman has seen "Gorgons, hydras, and chimeras dire," that I do not see in my speech, and that the Democracy on this floor do not see in it.

Mr. HART and Mr. POLK here requested that the conversation with Judge DOUGLAS should be stated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. At the request of his friends, I will give the substance of it. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. SACKETT,] my colleagues, [Messrs. EWING and MARSHALL,] and myself, happened to be in the refectory, not far from the Senate Chamber, where Judge DOUGLAS also happened to be. We had some general conversation there, and soon afterwards Judge DOUGLAS took me aside and told me that the Democratic Review for February would contain a violent assault upon General Butler. I replied, that if it did, I should denounce it. He expressed his regrets, and I intimated to him that he ought to stop it. He said he could not; that it was too late; that he feared it was already out. He stated that if there was time, he would send the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] to New York to break up the types, but he feared the Review was already issued. I think he also told me that he had telegraphed to the conductor of the Review not to publish the attack on General Butler. A day or two after this, the conductor of the Review came on to this city, and brought with him a sort of proof number of the February issue, which he, with great frankness, showed to me, and I, with equal frankness, told him I should denounce. Some days, perhaps a week after this, the February number came out. Now, sir, I mentioned that February number first, because I conceived I had a right to mention an article in a periodical of this sort, attacking distinguished men of the party, without imputing blame to any particular gentleman who had been named in connection with the Presidency; and secondly, because I thought that if I had a friend who, in working for me, chose to denounce and abuse the most eminent and distinguished men of my party, he should stop it, or should cease to be my friend.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will make only one or two remarks in conclusion of this explanation, and I pass over many points which I might touch in vindication of myself, but I feel that it would be unjust to the gentleman from Maine to trench further on his time. I state that I made no assault upon anybody in that speech. I assert that there is not a word in that speech to which any Democrat ought to object. The general sentiments contained in it are correct; and the denunciation of the course of the Review, the gentleman from Illinois has himself indorsed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. The gentleman says "certainly;" he himself denounces the course of the Democratic Review. I warned him beforehand that I should denounce it, and he requested that I would afford him an opportunity to make an explanation which would entirely disconnect Judge DOUGLAS from that periodical. I did so; and he made such explanations as he thought proper. Not satisfied with them, however, he takes the floor to-day for further explanations; but instead of clearing up the matter, flies off, and charges me with making a disturbance in the Democratic ranks. I deny it, and say that I have been upon the defensive from the beginning. I have made a statement of facts. It is not for me to say what their effect will be. If there is any other explanation which the gentleman from Illinois desires to make, the country will be glad to hear it. I repudiate, in the most distinct language, having been influenced by the slightest malice or ill-feeling towards any member of the Democratic party, in the speech I made the other day. My main object was to put a stop to these attacks, which I considered fatal to the integrity and harmony of the party. I did not begin them, nor was I connected, remotely or directly, with any person who did begin them. I do not remember anything else in the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois to which I ought to reply; and I now resign the floor to the gentleman from Maine, with my grateful acknowledgments for his kindness.*

NORTH AMERICAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. WASHBURN addressed the House, to the expiration of the hour allotted him under the rule, in favor of a grant of land to the North American Railroad Company. His remarks [which he had not concluded when the hammer fell] will be published hereafter.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California, obtained the floor.

Several MEMBERS. He has not yet spoken an hour.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am willing that the House shall determine that the gentleman from Maine may continue his speech, preserving, however, when he has concluded, my right to the floor.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the Chair will ask the general consent of the House as to whether the gentleman [Mr. WASHBURN] shall have his full time—the gentleman from California still retaining his right to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of the gentleman has expired. That is fixed by the rule. It is the opinion of the Chair that it is not competent for the committee to vary or disregard the rule of the House under which it is acting. It has been so decided heretofore, substantially and correctly, as the Chair thinks, and acquiesced in by the committee.

Mr. MARSHALL. Allow me, upon that question of order, to say a word. In order to give the House an opportunity, if they choose, to let the gentleman from Maine continue to speak his full hour, I will appeal from the decision of the Chair, protesting at the same time that I believe the decision of the Chair is a correct one. [Laughter.] It will give the committee a chance to do what they wish.

The CHAIRMAN. It is competent for the committee to overrule the decision of the Chair.

Mr. FLORENCE. Will not the unanimous

*Since the adjournment of the House, the following correspondence has occurred. It is clear enough now, that these receipts were all dated at the same time; that the date relates back merely to the commencement of a new series, or to the period when the concern changed owners; and that the paper in controversy was signed by all whose names are attached to it in February last, and not in January, or at any previous time.

J. C. BRECKINRIDGE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WASHINGTON, March 10, 1852.

DEAR SIR: In the debate to-day, the Hon. WILLIAM H. RICHARDSON, for the purpose of fixing the period when Judge DOUGLAS signed a paper recommending the "Democratic Review" to the Democracy of the country, referred to a receipt, given at the same time to the Judge, for his subscription to that periodical. The receipt, which he produced in the House, bears date the 6th of January, 1852, but Mr. RICHARDSON stated it was possible there might be a mistake in the date. I understand that you, and perhaps other members, have receipts for your subscriptions bearing date the 6th of January, 1852, but given in February last. Will you be so kind as to answer the following interrogatories?

1st. What is the date of your own receipt, and those of others you have seen?

2d. When was the money paid on the subscription for which the receipt was given to you?

3d. Was it paid before or after you read the leading article in the January number of the Democratic Review, entitled "52 and the Presidency?"

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE.

Hon. GRAHAM N. FITCH, Washington.

WASHINGTON, 7 p. m., March 10, 1852.

SIR: Your note of to-day is before me. I will answer your interrogatories in the order in which they occur.

I know nothing of any other receipts for subscriptions to the Democratic Review than those of two other members of the House and my own, all of which are dated January 6th, 1852. Mine was first presented for payment, and paid in the honorable Speaker BOYD's room and presence on the same day on which his was presented, and to the same man (Mr. Foster, the agent) to whom his was paid—the day being, to the best of my recollection, within the first week of February; I think the 7th of that month. It was paid a number of days after I had read the article in the Democratic Review to which you refer, and after it had been a subject of discussion among several members outside of the House.

Respectfully yours,

GRAHAM N. FITCH.

Hon. JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE.

WASHINGTON, March 10, 1852.

SIR: By your authority, I made a statement in the House this day in reference to certain matters occurring between you and Mr. Foster, agent for the Democratic Review, on a steam-boat between this city and Richmond, Virginia; and consent of the committee allow the gentleman to proceed?

The CHAIRMAN. Not in the opinion of the Chair. The hour of the gentleman having expired, it was moved that he have leave to proceed by unanimous consent. The Chair decides that, as a matter of order, it is not competent for the committee to vary the rule in that respect; and in connection with that decision he would repeat the remark, that some time since a like ruling was made by the gentleman then occupying the Chair, and was acquiesced in by the committee. From this decision an appeal is taken.

Mr. ORR. In that case, the hour for closing the debate had terminated.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, that does not alter the case. In the first instance, the time was fixed by an order of the House. In this case, it is limited by a standing rule of the House which is imperative upon the committee.

Mr. ORR. By unanimous consent we can do anything.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, "Shall the opinion of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not competent for the committee to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. EWING. If the Chair will allow me. If the gentleman from Maine is allowed to proceed to occupy his full hour, does the decision of the committee deprive the gentleman from California of the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be competent for the gentleman from California to yield the floor to allow the gentleman to proceed, but it will be deducted from his time.

Mr. MARSHALL. If the committee give that also at the latter place, in the office of Mr. Ritchie, editor of the Enquirer. You heard my remarks, and I now request you to say whether they were correct, so far as your name was involved; or rather, to give me a brief statement covering the subject-matter.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE.

J. A. PARKER, Esq.

WASHINGTON, March 10, 9 o'clock, p. m.

SIR: In answer to your note, this moment received, I have to say, that I heard your speech this day in the House, and so far as my name was connected with the subject under discussion, your statement was entirely correct as far as it went. In justice to myself and all others, I beg leave to add, that on the 10th day of February last, I started from this city to Richmond on business of very great importance to myself and others, (which had been several days delayed in consequence of my inability to leave this city,) and in no manner or form connected with politics. As soon as I went on board the steam-boat, I saw a very large number of copies of the January number of the "Democratic Review," and the agent, a Mr. Foster, exhibiting a recommendation of said work signed by some members of Congress; which signatures, he said, he obtained on the Friday and Saturday before, (viz., the 6th and 7th of February.) Judge DOUGLAS's name was signed at the bottom of the paper, and differed from the others in this: "I most cordially concur in the above recommendation. S. A. DOUGLAS." The agent was then asked if the persons signing the recommendation knew the contents, and he replied, "that he presumed they did, and especially Judge DOUGLAS, who had said to him on the 9th of February, 'he feared the article would do him more harm than good.' A large number of gentlemen were present and saw the recommendation, and heard Mr. Foster's statement. Mr. Chamberlain (late of the Virginia Convention) and myself purchased copies. Mr. C. soon called my attention to the 'leader,' headed, the 'Presidency, 1852.' On the 12th, while sitting in the office of Mr. W. F. Ritchie, of the Enquirer, Mr. Foster came in and exhibited the same paper, and made the same statement he had made on the steam-boat. (He also stated other things which I do not wish now to repeat.) I at once saw the evil which was about to be inflicted on the Democratic party, and drew from my pocket a short appeal, signed 'An Eye Witness,' which I had prepared, (after consulting several prominent Democrats, among them I will name General R. Muse, and W. O. Goode, Esq., of the House of Delegates,) and read it to Mr. Ritchie, in the presence of the agent, Mr. Foster, and sent it immediately to the printing office. Mr. Ritchie was here on the 5th instant, and distinctly recollects the facts and circumstances above given. It is due to the Democratic party, and due to myself, to declare, as I do now most solemnly, that in making the appeal signed 'An Eye Witness,' published in the 'Enquirer,' I had not the most remote idea of making an attack on any one. Nor can that article be so construed by any impartial or disinterested person. My sole object was to give those who had signed the recommendation information of the use and abuse of their names, and an opportunity of publicly repudiating the contents of the January number. I regret the length of this note; less I could not say—more I do not wish to say, and hope I shall have no occasion to say.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JOHN A. PARKER.

Hon. JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE, Washington.

privilege, I certainly do not forfeit my right to the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I understand that the gentleman from Maine does not wish to proceed, but that he will write out his remarks.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw my appeal.

Mr. ORR. I renew it.

The question was then put, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee," and upon a division there were—ayes 40, noes 68. No quorum.

Mr. ORR demanded tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER and FOWLER were appointed.

Mr. POLK. I would ask the gentleman from Maine if he desires to proceed with his remarks?

Mr. SMART. He does, certainly. He desires to go on, if permitted by the courtesy of the House.

The question was again put, and the decision of the Chair was overruled, the tellers having reported—ayes 52, noes 70.

The CHAIRMAN. Is unanimous consent given to the gentleman's proceeding?

Mr. EWING. I do not wish to interpose any objection, unless the effect of granting unanimous consent will be to deprive the gentleman from California of the floor.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am anxious to ask the Chairman one question, which I desire to have settled at this stage of the proceedings, it being of some consequence to myself. Do I lose the floor, in the opinion of the Chair, if unanimous consent is given to the gentleman from Maine to proceed with his remarks for the balance of his hour? I yielded the floor that the committee might take action upon the question submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman having yielded the floor, as one having given the unanimous consent, would stand like other members with regard to the floor, at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It was my proposition that was adopted, and I must remind the Chair that the proposition I made, and the one upon which the committee voted, was, that the gentleman should be allowed to speak out his time without the member from California losing his right to the floor.

Mr. MARSHALL. I understood both propositions to be embraced, and the committee have agreed to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to recollect the precise language used by the gentleman in his motion. The Chair ruled that it was not competent for the committee, by their action, to change the rule of the House limiting the time of speaking to one hour. This was all the question then before the committee. That decision was reversed. The Chair entertains the opinion, that the gentleman from California, by yielding the floor to the gentleman from Maine, will have forfeited his claim to it as a matter of right. When, however, the gentleman from Maine has concluded his remarks, this question will properly come up to be decided, in case the floor is awarded to any other member and the gentleman from California claims it as a matter of right.

Mr. WASHBURN. I will not occupy any more of the time of the committee. Upon the whole, I have decided that I will yield the floor to the gentleman from California.

Mr. APPLETON, of Maine. With the permission of the gentleman from California, who prefers speaking to-morrow, I will move the committee rise.

Mr. MARSHALL. I would ask the indulgence of the committee thus far, to rise for the present, and give me an opportunity to speak to-morrow morning. I have not consumed much of the time of the House, and do not propose to do so.

A MEMBER. Let some one else make a speech.

Mr. MARSHALL. I have been endeavoring for the last few hours to try to get some one to speak.

A VOICE. GIDDINGS will speak. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARSHALL. I would suggest, if the House would be kind enough to listen to me, that there is abundant business to occupy our attention.

Mr. ROBBINS demanded tellers; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, (Messrs. BEALE and MEACHAM acting as tellers,) and resulted—ayes 69, noes 40.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee rose accordingly, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 7, to encourage agriculture and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

REPAIR OF THE LIBRARY—EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I desire to submit a motion to the House, if it be in order now, to postpone the further consideration of the special order, which has just been under consideration by the Committee of the Whole, for a week, with a view of taking up two bills which have been set as special orders for to-day—one for repairing the Capitol, and the other for its extension. I am satisfied these bills can be disposed of in a short time, if the House will consent to it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The gentleman can attain his object just as well by moving to reconsider the votes referring these bills to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with the view to bring them before the House, and thereby not disturb the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider can be submitted to the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON. The House can bring these bills back by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Kentucky had better change his motion, and let it take that form.

Mr. GENTRY. Try that.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. It seems to be the wish of the House I should submit that motion. I desire both bills set as the special orders of the day, shall be considered.

Several MEMBERS. Discharge the committee from the Library bill only.

Mr. STANTON. Both these bills are of equal importance. I move, then, to reconsider the vote by which the Library bill was committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with the view of having it taken up in the House.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent the motion will be entertained.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the vote was reconsidered.

Mr. STANTON. I move that the bill be put upon its passage, and I call for the previous question.

REPAIR OF THE LIBRARY.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union has been discharged, by the unanimous consent of the House, from the further consideration of the Senate bill to provide for the repair of the Congressional Library, lately destroyed by fire, and the bill is regularly before the House.

Mr. COBB. When was it done?

The SPEAKER. About five minutes ago.

Mr. COBB. The motion was to reconsider the vote by which the bill was sent to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The committee was discharged, by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. COBB. I have no objection to it.

Mr. STANTON. I have called the previous question upon my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think, that the rule which requires a bill to be considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, would have to be suspended. The vote by which the committee was discharged does not work a suspension of that rule.

Mr. GENTRY. That rule assumes that it has been discussed and considered in Committee of the Whole to the satisfaction of that committee and the House. The House always determine when they will terminate the consideration of a bill in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the rule be recinded for the purpose of acting upon this bill? The Chair hears no objection, and the question will be upon ordering the bill to be read a third time, and upon this, the previous question has been demanded.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; which main question was on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The bill, according to order, was then read the third time.

Mr. CLINGMAN demanded the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. DAWSON demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken and the bill was passed.

Mr. CLINGMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, which latter motion was agreed to.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. If it is in order, I now move to postpone the special orders, which are under discussion, until next Wednesday.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I will say to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. HOUSTON,] as he seems to be urgent about this deficiency bill, and I suppose there is some little pretext for it, for the sake of accommodation, I propose that, by general consent, the homestead bill occupy its place as a special order, and that it go over informally until next Wednesday. But really these departments deserve very little favor at the hands of the House, when they will go on and expend money—and that, too, when the House has withheld the appropriations, and struck them out of the bill—and then come here in the shape of a deficiency bill, and ask us to appropriate the money.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I shall be compelled to object to it. It is the first time I have made an objection of the kind since I have been a member of Congress. I think if the members of the House will turn their attention to the galleries, they will see abundant reasons, why the special orders ought not to be continued. There are workmen in those galleries, who have been brought from distant cities of the Union to assist in constructing the edifice which we are now about adding to the building. I have been trying, from the beginning of the session to the present moment, to get permission of this Congress to permit that work to be finished. If it is to be completed, it is wise economy and good policy that it should be continued and completed speedily. Why this delay? Why is it necessary? There is no good reason why it should be suspended. These men are here without the means of support. They have been invited here by your action—the action of the last Congress. They have their families to support. They have crowded your galleries to-day, to witness the effect of your action. I hope that the special orders will not be postponed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to state, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] and also my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] that I am not at this moment pressing that the House shall pass this deficiency bill, unless it shall see fit to do so. I think, even if it determine to negative the deficiency bill, it is the highest duty we owe to the country, the Administration, and the Government, that we should act upon it. I want action. If the House shall see fit to vote down the bill, the responsibility is with them, and then we know where we stand. So much by way of suggestion to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON.]

Now, sir, I put it to the gentleman from Kentucky, is it more important that we should prepare a job for workmen who have come here even under circumstances that might excite our sympathy in their behalf—is it more important to do that, than to buy horses to mount our army to protect emigrants on the road to Oregon and California? Is it more important to do it, than to legislate in a way that would save the honor of the country by providing means to prevent our bills being dishonored and protested—thereby involving the Government in heavy damages, and increasing the price of every article sold to the army in California and that region of country, because of the fact that it is known the bills cannot be paid?

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say in reply to that, that the same power that has expended money over and above what was appropriated by Congress, can, in any emergency of this kind, spend more money for the protection of these emigrants.

Mr. HOUSTON. That may be. But I have a letter from the Department which I propose to have read, which shows that the credit of the Government has already been used, and that it has become bad, that the bills have to be shaved, and the persons who sell supplies to the Army are increasing the prices of those supplies, for the purpose of meeting the deficiency from the losses they have to sustain on Government bills.

There are gentlemen all around me who are interested in this matter, and are pressing it. The members from Texas are interested, and the Committee of Ways and Means were drawn up before this House some time ago because that deficiency bill had not been reported. The bill is there printed, and ready for action. I have pressed in season and out of season to get action upon it, but the House has universally voted me down. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JOHNSON] is kind enough now, to agree to waive the position which he has acquired by the special order, and I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will agree to do the same thing.

Mr. WALSH. In connection with what was so well said by the gentleman from Kentucky, I want to present to the House, by their unanimous consent, the memorial of these workmen, and I hope it may be read. I want them to tell their own story to this House.

[CRIES OF "Object."]

Mr. WALSH. Well, I am entitled to the floor, I believe.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not felt disposed to arrest this discussion, but it is very clearly out of order.

Mr. WALSH. Well, but I hope the Chair will allow something to be said in reply to what has been said by the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. There is no such case of suffering as that of these men. They have come here, supposing the work would be continued.

Mr. FICKLIN. I object to this discussion, unless it is to go on on both sides.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I will only say that this whole matter can be settled in fifteen minutes. These people have had actually to sell their beds to get bread; and to talk of the sufferings of other people in view of such sufferings as these, is really an insult to humanity.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Alabama is to postpone the further consideration of the special order. That measure is not now in the possession of the House, and it can be reached only by unanimous consent. That consent is not given, and there is, therefore, an end of the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. If the House will hear me for one moment, I wish to make a single suggestion, which, it seems to me, would relieve the difficulty that gentlemen complain of so loudly.

No objection being made,

Mr. J. continued. I was going to suggest to those gentlemen who seem to be so urgent for the relief of these workmen—and there are none more so than myself, for I do not yield to any gentleman on this floor in sympathy for those who have to toil and labor for their support, but I do object to making speeches to the lobbies, and pointing round to men sitting here and there, either as laborers or as any other description of persons—but what I was going to say is, that we have just had an example set of the way in which this bill can be passed speedily. This bill, if it is so meritorious, and if these men are so deserving of relief at the hands of this Congress, can be brought out of the committee, placed before the House, and put upon its passage. If this bill is so meritorious and deserving, and if these men are exposed to such suffering—and I will go as far as he who goes furthest to relieve them—by unanimous consent the committee can be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, it can be brought before the House, and put upon its passage. If there be no objection, I will now move to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. DUNHAM objected.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I raise a point of order, and it is this: That the motion is perfectly in order under rules 136 and 137, which are as follow:

"The House may, at any time, by a vote of a majority of the members present, suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and also for providing for the discharge of the Committee of the Whole House, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—January 25, 1848—from the further consideration of any bill referred to it, after acting without debate on all amendments pending, and that may be offered.—March 11, 1814."

"Except during the last ten days of the session, the Speaker shall not entertain a motion to suspend the rules of the House at any time, except on Monday of every week: provided nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter so much of the 136th rule as provided as follows: 'The House may at any time, by a vote of a majority of the members present, suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and also for providing for the discharge of the committee from the further consideration of any bill referred to it, after acting without debate on all amendments pending, and that may be offered.'—December 18, 1847."

There is no amendment now pending to the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Those rules do not fit the case at all. The only way in which it can be done is by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER overruled the point of order made by Mr. STANTON.

Mr. NABERS moved that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and it was decided in the negative—ayes 44, noes not counted; so the House refused to adjourn.

CLOSE OF DEBATE ON HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. STANLY. Is it in order to offer a resolution to terminate debate on the homestead bill?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. STANLY then offered the usual resolution to close the debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the bill to encourage agriculture, and for other purposes, at three o'clock to-morrow, (Thursday.)

Mr. S. said, on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays, that the country may see who is responsible for the delay of the public business.

Mr. FICKLIN moved to amend the resolution by striking out "to-morrow," and inserting in lieu thereof "Thursday next."

Mr. HOUSTON. I think if the gentleman from North Carolina will not press his motion, there is a disposition in the House to agree to postpone the special order until Wednesday next, and give the deficiency bill the intermediate time. I think the gentleman from Kentucky, if he cannot get his bill before the House, will agree to it. And it seems that he is about to fail of getting the committee discharged from the consideration of that bill.

I would be willing that his bill should come forward, and be voted on now; but as he cannot obtain that, I hope he will not object to the postponement of the special order, for the purpose of acting on the deficiency bill. I therefore trust the gentleman from North Carolina will withdraw his resolution to close the debate.

The SPEAKER. Is the resolution withdrawn?

Mr. STANLY. No, sir. If the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means yields in this way, he will not get the bill through this session.

Mr. HOUSTON. If my motion does not prevail, I shall then vote for the resolution to stop debate at the earliest possible time. I ask that a vote may be taken upon my motion to postpone the special orders.

The SPEAKER. That motion could only be submitted by unanimous consent, and there was objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understood there was no objection to it.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I object.

The question was then taken upon Mr. FICKLIN's amendment to the resolution closing debate, and it was decided in the negative.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. STANLY. I ask for the yeas and nays, that we may see who is responsible for the delay of the public business, and the consequences which must result from it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

On motion by Mr. ORR,

The House then adjourned until to-morrow morning.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Also, a memorial of the same, affidavits of John Hattlinger and E. L. Matthes, and memorial of citizens of said county inclosed.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 11, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. McRAE presented the credentials of the Hon. WALKER BROOKE, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. HENRY S. FOOTE; which were read, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. BROOKE, he took his seat in the Senate.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. GWIN presented the memorial of Franklin C. Gray, praying the establishment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Mr. MASON presented the petition of citizens of Frederick county, Virginia, praying that the patent granted to W. W. Woodworth for a planing machine may be extended; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of Doctor A. S. Wright, praying indemnity for losses sustained in consequence of his expulsion from Mexico by the agents of that Government; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Also, the petition of William D. Jones, praying the appointment of a tribunal to review the decisions of the late Board of Commissioners for the settlement of claims of American citizens against Mexico; which was referred to the select committee appointed on the subject.

Also, two petitions of merchants and other citizens of Buffalo, New York, praying that further aid may be extended to Collins's line of steamships; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WADE presented the memorial of assistant marshals for taking the Seventh Census in Ohio, praying additional compensation; which was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying the establishment of a mail route from the village of West Bend to Monches; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying the establishment of a mail route from Madison to Wanhoea Falls; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of the heirs-at-law and legal representatives of Francis Gillemast, an officer in the revolutionary war, praying an allowance for the depreciation on commutation certificates; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. DAVIS presented the memorial of F. A. Chenoweth and others, praying the title to certain land settled and improved by them in the Territory of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SOULE presented a resolution of the Legislature of Louisiana, praying the establishment of a weekly mail between Thibodeaux and Lockport; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. CHASE, it was Ordered, That the memorial of John A. Bryan, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. DOWNS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the original papers which accompanied the petition of Valerian Allain.

AMERICAN CEMETERY IN MEXICO.

Mr. MASON. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the message of the President of the United States recommending a further appropriation for completing the cemetery purchased by order of Congress, near the city of Mexico, for the interment of officers and soldiers of the American army who were killed in the late war, or who died while in that country, have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to report a bill for the purpose of carrying out the recommendation. It appears that, in the year 1850, a sum of money was appropriated for the construction of this cemetery and the removal of the remains of the dead, and that that sum has been exhausted without effecting the object of the appropriation. There have been removed to this cemetery the remains of some five hundred officers and soldiers, who died from disease or were killed in battle; but there are probably as many more remaining, and it is the desire of those connected with the cemetery—and it is certainly that of the committee—that this object should be carried into effect. The appropriation asked for is only a small one, not exceeding $3,000, and I ask that the bill reported from the committee for this purpose may now be considered by the Senate, and receive its favorable action.

The bill was read a first and second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that the sum of $3,000 be appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be applied under the direction of the President of the United States, to carry into effect the act approved September 28, 1850, for the purchase of a cemetery near the city of Mexico, and for the interment of the officers and soldiers of the army of the United States, who fell in battle, or otherwise died, in or near the city of Mexico; and that the interment of citizens of the United States who have heretofore died in Mexico may be had in said cemetery, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the President of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the bill from the Senate to provide for the repair of the Congressional Library room, lately destroyed by fire.

ENTERTAINMENT OF KOSSUTH.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the expenses incurred in the reception and entertainment of Louis Kossuth and suite during their late visit to the capital, by invitation of Congress, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, when approved by the committee of reception, to an amount not exceeding $5,000."

Mr. MASON. I do not think that resolution correctly recites the facts connected with that gentleman's presence at the seat of Government. It recites that the expenses were incurred in the reception and entertainment of Louis Kossuth in Washington, at the invitation of Congress. Now, I am not aware that that gentleman was at Washington by the invitation of Congress; on the contrary, so far as I know the history of the case, he came to Washington, as he had a perfect right to do, with the declaration of his purpose, which doubtless was correct, of paying his respects to the Government at Washington. It is not a very important matter, but I do not choose, so far as I am concerned, that it shall go upon the records of the country that he came to Washington at the invitation of Congress.

But I have another objection. I have not the slightest objection to paying these expenses; none whatever. He came here, and was received by both Houses of Congress, and that being the fact, I am perfectly willing to pay any expenses which may have been incurred by his presence here; but I contend that it must be done by a direct appropriation, and not from the contingent fund. I therefore submit to the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] the mover of this resolution, that it will be better to put it in the form of a joint resolution. If he will do so, it shall have my concurrence.

Mr. SEWARD. I have no tenacity, in the first place, as to the form of the resolution, or the recital contained in it. If it would obtain for the resolution one vote more, or commend it the more to the favor of the Senate, I would consent that the recital should be struck out, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia.

I am somewhat embarrassed by the other suggestion of the Senator—which I take kindly, and for which I return my acknowledgments—to make this a joint resolution. There was an informal consultation between the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] who was the chairman of the committee to receive Governor Kossuth, and myself; and the result of the opinions we collected from members of the Senate was, that it would be better to put the resolution in its present shape. I would ask Senators who are favorable to the object of the resolution in some shape, to signify their wishes with regard to the form. I will receive their suggestions very kindly. What, sir, do you say? (addressing Mr. Davis.)

Mr. DAVIS. I would prefer a joint resolution.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the honorable Senator from Michigan be good enough to give me his opinion?

Mr. CASS. I will answer distinctly. I cannot vote for the resolution in its present shape.

Mr. SEWARD. Will the Senator from Michigan say whether he will vote for it in the form of a joint resolution?

Mr. CASS. I think I should; but I do not wish the Senator from New York to take that as a definite answer. I must say, however, that I cannot vote for this resolution.

Mr. SEWARD. Then, Mr. President, without further inquiry, I move to insert the word "joint" in the resolution.

Mr. BADGER. Oh, no; you will never get it through the Senate.

THE PRESIDENT. That will change the whole character of the resolution.

Mr. SEWARD. Very well, sir; then I will let it stand as it is, and take the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. BADGER. I desire to say a word before the question is taken. It is pretty well known to every member of the Senate, and perhaps to many persons out of it, that I was totally opposed to the proceedings in reference to Kossuth, which ended in the presentation of the resolution now before the Senate. But, sir, I do hope that there will not be a moment's difficulty with any member of this body; after Louis Kossuth has been at Washington, after a committee has been appointed by our own body to receive and present him to the Senate, and after those expenses have been incurred in his entertainment here—I say, that after all this, I hope there will not be a gentleman of this body who will hesitate to vote promptly to have these expenses defrayed.

Mr. MASON, (in his seat.) Yes; in a proper manner.

Mr. BADGER. I think we owe it to ourselves to pay these expenses. With regard to the form of the resolution, I think it is proper that these expenses should be paid upon a resolution of the Senate, and not upon a joint resolution. When that gentleman came to this city, he came here without any committee having been appointed by the House of Representatives to receive him, or take charge of him, or present him to that body. A committee had been appointed by the Senate for that purpose; and he was in the city something like a week before the resolution was passed in the House of Representatives authorizing his reception in that body. In the meantime, he was received by our committee, placed in suitable quarters in the city, and the expenses, now sought to be defrayed, had been incurred. It seems to me, therefore, that this matter properly belongs to the Senate, and it is our business to see that these expenses are paid. I hope that the proposition of the Senator from New York will be adopted—that the Secretary will audit these accounts, and ascertain what is just; and what is just, ought to be paid.

Mr. BORLAND. I rise simply to suggest that the consideration of this resolution be postponed; not for the reason that I intend to discuss the subject to which it relates, but there is a member of the Senate [Mr. CLEMENS] who has given notice that he intended to offer his views upon it when it should come up. He is not now in his seat, and as this is not a pressing matter, and there are subjects which are of that character, I move that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope that motion will not prevail. A large portion of this money will be payable, if it is paid at all, to the keeper of one of the public hotels in this city, who stands in need of the money, and who has earnestly pressed upon me to bring up this resolution as early as possible. I have not called it out of its order; but I do not feel at liberty to consent to its being deferred when it comes up in its regular course.

Mr. CASS. The honorable Senator from New York had better accept the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Mason.] If it were put in the form of a joint resolution, it would probably receive a more unanimous consideration by the Senate. I must observe, however, that it seems to me that you defeat the object and intent of appropriation bills if you are to pay such a sum as this, for such an object, out of the contingent fund of the Senate. It does not properly apply to the matters to which the contingent fund of the Senate should apply—the business of the nation as connected with its own operations. It seems to me to be one of those objects which call for the joint action of Congress, and I repeat, that if the resolution is put in the shape suggested by the Senator from Virginia, I shall feel strongly inclined to vote for it. I am clearly of opinion, however, that in its present shape it will meet with much stronger objection than in the other. Both Houses of Congress have had questions in relation to this gentleman and his reception here before them; and to have an appropriation made by both Houses is, in my opinion, vastly more proper than to say, "Pay it out of that contingent fund which was set apart for carrying out your own operations."

Mr. BADGER. I do not agree with the Senator from Michigan. There is no propriety whatever in giving this proceeding the shape of a joint resolution. On the contrary, I regard it as entirely inappropriate. These expenses were incurred under no joint proceeding of the two Houses; by no joint committee of the two Houses, nor by any concurrent resolution; for the resolution which was passed by the Senate, and under which that gentleman was received here, and placed in quarters and entertained, was a resolution adopted by the Senate, which had been in force for a week after his arrival in the city before any resolution was adopted in the House of Representatives. It was a movement of our own; and now, sir, I should be glad to know for what expenses the contingent fund is designed, if it be not for expenses of this kind. They are not the regular and ordinary expenses of the Senate. It is clearly a contingency—an expense incurred in consequence of a resolution of the Senate, not relating to the ordinary expenses of the body—and if this is not a contingent expenditure, I do not know what is. I, for one, am for meeting this matter in the form in which it is proposed. If we give it the form of a joint resolution, it is as much as to infer that the expense was not incurred by us separately. But it was incurred by us, and we should not now attempt to give it a form which it did not originally wear. It seems to me that the resolution is right as it stands.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope the motion to postpone the consideration of this resolution will not prevail. I would much rather, so far as I am individually concerned—and I know that the gentleman who incurred this expense so generously upon a contingency, would rather have the question decided one way or the other now. So he has informed me. When Kossuth was made the guest of the nation; and was on his way to Washington by the invitation of Congress, the question with us was, what were we to do? We tried to get the Executive to make some provision for his entertainment, but it was declined. What was to be done? Were we to invite the man and make him the guest of the nation, and bring him to Washington—a man whom we knew had come out of a prison, and was poor—and then permit him to remain in the streets? Sir, most unhesitatingly we determined to run the risk at once and made some provision for his entertainment. We considered that the nation was already under obligation to receive him in accordance with the dignity of the nation. Now, I take it for granted that in this case there was one of two things to be done: either to do nothing, or to do all that ought to be done—either to stop before you begin, or not to stop until you end. [Laughter, in which the Senator from Illinois himself heartily joined.]

My honorable and distinguished friend from Michigan, as I understand, says this cannot be paid out of the contingent fund, because that fund is appropriated especially for national objects. If this is not a national object, it ought not to be paid out of any fund at all.

Mr. CASS. Because that fund is appropriated to the expenses of the Senate as such.

Mr. SHIELDS. But I find there are precedents for this. In the case of the unfortunate disaster which occurred on board the Princeton, which had no direct connection with the Senate or with Congress, all the expenses were paid, as I understand, out of the contingent fund of the Senate. Yet it had no connection whatsoever with the Senate, and no direct connection with the Treasury, even. This is one precedent. But in my humble opinion, we ought unhesitatingly to pay this out of the contingent fund of the Senate, as has been suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. Badger.] My opinion is, that unless we pay it out of that fund, it will not be paid at all. I do not think a joint resolution will pass; then we shall be in the position of having invited Kossuth here as the guest of the nation, and of refusing to pay his expenses. I have already said this is a Senatorial act; it was performed by a committee of the Senate, and there was no option left us. We had been appointed by this body, and there was no preparation made for receiving him. The Executive had refused to make any provision for him, and the only question was what we were to do.

Mr. SEWARD. If the Senator from Illinois will allow me to interrupt him, I ought perhaps to state that the Executive was consulted, and that he recommended the course which the committee afterwards took.

Mr. SHIELDS. Yes; that fact may be stated, if it will give any force to the view I was presenting. Mr. Brown, the keeper of the hotel, has been waiting a long time for his pay, and my impression is, that unless it is paid out of the contingent fund, it will not be paid at all.

Mr. PRATT. I do not exactly understand the phrase used by the honorable Senator from Illinois. But perhaps there is a meaning in it which is apparent to his mind, which does not suggest itself to mine. I mean the phrase in which he says it is best to stop before you begin, or not to stop until you end. Now, I think I can put a meaning upon it which would be sound policy to follow, although it may not be precisely the mode in which he would interpret it. I think we should have stopped to make the appropriation before we began to receive the man. If the committee, in the unpleasant situation in which they were placed, had applied to the Senate for authority to make the appropriation, the Senate would not have been in the position in which they now are of having the money expended before any act was passed to provide for its payment.

This man was carried to one of the public hotels in this city, where he was entertained. If the committee had asked Congress or the Senate to make an appropriation, and to put the money into their hands for this specific purpose, it would have been all right and proper. But they pursued no such course. They entertained the man, and the bill having been made out, they now come and ask for its payment.

The question in the first place is, whether the bill ought to be paid; and in the next place, whether it should be done by a joint resolution or out of the contingent fund of the Senate. I can have no earthly doubt if this bill is to be paid, that it ought not to be covered up and paid out of the secret and contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. The contingent fund is not a secret fund.

Mr. PRATT. He comes here, the guest of the nation, according to their theory, and he was entertained as the guest of the nation. If this is so, the expenses should be paid out of the national fund. The first question is, whether the object is proper; and the next is, what is the amount necessary for the accomplishment of that object. Here is a proposition to pay some $5,000. If the appropriation were of a larger amount, the principle would be the same. Are we not to ascertain by the report of a committee, or from some other source, that this sum has been properly appropriated to that object? Is there a bill ever presented to the Senate asking for an appropriation of money when there is no report of a committee, nor any explanation, going to show that the amount asked for is necessary for the purpose for which it is asked? It will be a matter of some curiosity to the people of the country at large, to see the items of this bill. I am sure the people of the country would like to see how $5,000 were spent in ten days in a public hotel by this man.

Mr. SHIELDS. In thirteen days.

Mr. PRATT. Well, if there were thirteen days, I think it would be a matter of public curiosity to know how the money was spent. I admit that I should be very much pleased myself to know in what way this sum could be properly appropriated for the entertainment of one individual for thirteen days.

Mr. SHIELDS. The gentleman says that he does not understand my meaning, and insinuates, in a measure, that I do not understand it myself, when I say that we ought to have stopped before we began, or not to stop at all till we got to the end. Sir, I will tell that gentleman what my meaning is. If that gentleman invites a guest to come and sit down at his table, surely he ought not to ask him to bring his provisions with him! [Laughter.] He ought to ascertain whether he is able to entertain him before he invites him.

Mr. PRATT. When I ask a guest to partake of my hospitalities, I know beforehand that I shall be able to provide something for him to eat. Now, this gentleman was not invited under such circumstances; and I think it would have been well had the committee ascertained that they had legitimately the means of providing for him before they undertook to entertain him.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator from Maryland forgets that this gentleman was invited by the nation and not by me, and that he, as a member of that nation, is as much bound by its acts as I am. Then, sir, as for reading over and examining the items, I would just as soon invite a guest to my table and, after I had treated him as well as I was able, take all the items of which he had partaken and publish them, in order to disgrace him. I do not care what opinions gentlemen individually entertain on this subject. None can deny that his being invited was the act of the nation. They have invited him and made him their guest, and the committee of the Senate, as the servants of that nation, placed him in that hotel and made arrangements for his reception; and I consider it would not be a very proper way of treating the matter now to call for the items of this account and publish them to the world, with the view of disgracing the man whom you have made your guest. Sir, in doing so you stultify yourselves; and everything you do to belittle that man after having made him your guest will only result in belittling yourselves. That is my opinion. After having gone so far, it seems to me that we ought not to stop here. We ought to pay these expenses.

Mr. BORLAND: I moved the postponement of this resolution for the reason, as I stated, that there was a Senator who gave notice some time ago, that it was his intention to speak at some length on the subject. That Senator is not in his seat—I presume in consequence of indisposition. For that reason I was desirous that the question should be postponed until he might be present, in order that he may be able to present those views to the Senate of which he has given notice. I think that there is great force and propriety in the remarks made by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PRATT,] that we ought to have provided the means of entertainment before we proceeded to entertain that guest; and it will be recollected that when the resolution was before the Senate inviting Kossuth here, and calling him the guest of the nation, I offered a substitute for it, in which I made a direct proposition to make the appropriation then, and to determine what it should be. But how was that proposition received by the friends of Kossuth—his especial friends—and particularly the Senator from Mississippi, not now here, (I mean Mr. Foote?) My proposition was declared to be an insult to Kossuth. It was said to be an insult to him to connect money with his name. Money was not to be thought of. Oh, no! We were to have which was to cost nothing but the wind which provided it. [Laughter.] No money was to be mentioned. It was considered an insult to connect money with his name. I foresaw the consequences as everybody might have seen them, namely, that he would come here at considerable expense, and that when the bill came in we should be required to pay it, and that there would be no telling what it would be.

"A feast of reason and a flow of soul,"

The Senator from Illinois objects to bringing the items here. He says that it would be dishonoring Kossuth. That has nothing to do with Kossuth at all. It is merely to see whether the account brought in by the hotel-keeper, who has furnished the means of his entertainment, is a correct account or not. Sir, it is said to be $5,000 for the thirteen days which he was here. That cannot be for the entertainment of Kossuth. I presume it must have been for the gentlemen who were with him. Now, this the Senate positively refused to do. The proposition was to include his suite, and the Senate would have nothing to do with it. It was to be Kossuth alone, that was to be entertained; and now, when the bill comes in, we are to pay for the entertainment of men whom we positively refused to entertain at all.

Mr. UPHAM. I am very much surprised at the remarks made by the Senator from Illinois. He thinks that, to ask for the items, would be belittling Kossuth. It seems to me that he is under a very great mistake; but, on the other hand, if there is an attempt to shroud the matter in darkness and conceal it from the country, the people will infer that there is something wrong. I disagree with that Senator on another ground. He says we invited Kossuth here; that he was our invited guest. According to my recollection, when the committee was appointed, the question arose whether they should go to New York and receive him, or whether he should be received here. It was said that he was to be received when he reached the city of Washington. He came here, and the committee did receive him, and went with him, I presume, to the hotel; and I have no objection to pay a reasonable compensation for his entertainment. But, for one, I shall never vote for a proposition of this kind until I see the items composing this $5,000, or have an assurance that it will be examined by a committee of this body. As the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BORLAND] has stated, we refused to invite his associates. We invited him, if there was any invitation at all. We invited him to the country and to the capital. We next appointed a committee to receive him, and now we are called upon in a public manner, not by a joint resolution, but by a resolution of the Senate, to pay this expense out of the contingent fund, by which means we conceal it from the people of the country. The inference will be, that this gentleman, for thirteen days' residence at a public hotel, expended $5,000. I think it is just to him to show these items, that we may know what composes the amount of $5,000. It may be that this is an extravagant account; it may be one that the Senate will say we are unwilling to pay. All I ask is, that the whole subject may be laid open to public light, that everybody may see and understand what these items are.

Mr. SHIELDS. According to the resolution the matter is to be submitted to the committee, and they will investigate it.

Mr. SEWARD. The Secretary of the Senate is to audit the account.

Mr. SHIELDS. It is to be investigated, and if the committee choose to pay, it will be very well. I do not see why we should publish the items.

Mr. MASON. I wish to state to the Senate that I was under some misapprehension when I addressed the Senate a short time since, and I ought to correct my remark. I stated that according to my recollection, this gentleman had not been invited to Washington. I have since sent for the joint resolution which was passed, and I find that the invitation was to the country and to the capital. I am free to admit that that is an invitation to Kossuth to visit the city of Washington, and although I opposed it here, as is known, in every form, I submit to the action of Congress. But if I vote for any appropriation, I cannot do it in any other form than that of a direct appropriation.

Mr. CLARKE. The honorable Senator from Virginia has anticipated much of what I intended to say, corresponding with my recollection with regard to the reception of Kossuth. In the first place, I shall vote for the postponement of this resolution; not because I desire that there should be any delay with regard to the payment for the entertainment of Kossuth and suite, but because I consider it a matter of courtesy to the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLEMENS.] I think that it is due to him that he should have an opportunity of presenting his views upon this subject when the resolution is considered. He has already given notice of his desire to do so; and we all know that it came up quite unexpectedly this morning while that Senator is not present, and for that reason, and that alone, I shall vote for the postponement. But if that postponement is not made, I then desire to state why I shall vote against the resolution in its present form. If my recollection serves me, the invitation was made by a joint resolution of both Houses of Congress. That joint resolution was approved by the President of the United States; and if I recollect aright, it was sent by the private secretary of the President to New York, and there presented to Kossuth.

Now, it has been suggested by some gentleman that that invitation was to Kossuth and not to his suite. I beg leave to say, that as you invite Kossuth as the former Governor of Hungary, and make him welcome, you are bound to entertain those who come with him as his suite as well as the individual himself. And if his suite, instead of being composed of eighteen or twenty, had extended to a hundred, your invitation would have precluded you from failing to entertain the whole number, however much your confidence might have been abused. I have no desire to see the items of this bill. I have no doubt that it will be properly audited by the Secretary. Whether it is extravagant or otherwise, it is not for me to say. Whatever it is rightfully, it must be paid. The faith of the nation, the honor of the country, is committed to it, and it must be paid. But I do most sincerely object to its being paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate. The joint resolution was passed by both Houses of the Congress of the United States, and it was approved by the President; and upon that resolution, Kossuth and his companions were invited to the capital of the country. The Committee appointed was for the reception of Kossuth, not particularly his reception in Washington, but his reception in the Senate. The House of Representatives also appointed a committee at their own good pleasure, and in their own good time—certainly we have no right to inquire whether that was early or late, or not; the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate acted conjointly in everything that related to the distinguished stranger.

Mr. SHIELDS. The committee of the House of Representatives did not act with the committee of the Senate at all.

Mr. CLARKE. I know they were there. I have no doubt the committee of the Senate first received him, but the committee of the House were there, and received him as well as the committee of the Senate. We see that he was the invited guest of the nation, and why, then, should not this expense be paid as well as any other claim against the Government of the United States? I think it should be paid by a joint resolution; in that form it shall have my support, without a murmur or complaint, and without asking to see the items on which this claim is founded. I have no desire to see them. I object to the impropriety of introducing this resolution here—as if the Senate of the United States were the only body that received Kossuth at Washington—to be paid out of the contingent fund, appropriated particularly and explicitly for the uses of the Senate. If he had been received by the Senate only, it would have been a different thing; but it was by a joint resolution that he was invited, and the appropriation should be made by a joint resolution. For that reason alone I beg to state explicitly that I shall vote against this resolution, because it will appropriate money which was not designed for such a purpose. A joint resolution shall have my cordial support.

Mr. MANGUM. In all matters of this sort, the gracefulness with which the act is done constitutes more than half its merit. I have never had any of this Kossuth fever. If I had been here, I should have voted for none of these initiative proceedings. They were all consummated before I came here. I have seen many developments since that period, which would still more indispose me towards these proceedings than I was in the first instance. But, sir, he was invited here, and I think very improperly invited, to a seat in both Houses of Congress, with a view of bestowing those honors upon him which were bestowed upon La Fayette. I had no sympathy then with that movement, and I have none now. I look back to it with little respect, although we all participated in it. I think we were all in error; but the money having been expended, I think there can be but one opinion throughout the country with regard to what is now proper to be done—that, without any higgling policy, the claim ought to be met.

This bill strikes me as enormous in its magnitude, but I am not going to weigh it as I would fine gold, in very delicate scales. This matter was committed to a committee of this body who have done their duty, as I have no doubt; and I hope the discussion which has grown out of this matter, will not at all diminish the respect due to the committee.

I think this resolution should not be postponed. I think it is not necessary, even for the presence of the Senator from Alabama, for I have as little respect for these proceedings as that Senator; but I feel that it is a point of honor, and even a more delicate one, a point of hospitality, and that we should pay this claim without raising difficulties upon the subject. As to the difference between a joint resolution, and a resolution to pay from the contingent fund, I see no particular difference. The money is money furnished by the United States, and that contingent fund is raised by the joint action of the two Houses of Congress; and I should be unwilling to see a running discussion of three or four days in either branch of Congress upon this subject. It has been compared to a case of private hospitality. I think it is even of a more delicate character; it touches that which ought to be dearer to every American, it touches the national honor. I hope we shall never send another national ship for any person who does not hold as high a position as that of La Fayette. I do not hold this to be a parallel case at all.

I have no sympathy with the proceeding. It was a snap judgment taken upon us, without due consideration; but having done it, we must go through with it; and, in the emphatic language of the Senator from Illinois, "Let us not stop till we get to the end." I hope that we will vote for this appropriation. At all events, let the honor of the Senate be clear of any imputation of inhospitality.

Mr. PRATT. For my life, Mr. President, I cannot see what the honor of the Senate has to do with the question under consideration. I hope I have as nice a sense of honor as the gentleman from North Carolina, who has just taken his seat, or as the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANGUM. I do not question that at all, sir.

Mr. PRATT. Now, what is the question? This individual, as they say, has been invited as the guest of the nation. Sir, has he not been entertained? He has been entertained, and has now departed from among us. Everything has been done by the committee, according to their own showing, necessary to be done in regard to the treatment of this individual, as the guest of the nation. Therefore, the honor of the nation, so far as this individual is concerned, has been complied with and satisfied, by the committee entertaining him according to their own views. Now, what is the question? It is not the application of Kossuth to have this bill paid. He has nothing to do with it. No credit was given to him by the party who brings this bill to the Senate for payment, but it is an application on the part of the committee for payment to the individual. And now the honorable Senator says that it is dishonorable to the Senate and the country to direct any inquiry to be made in regard to the correctness of the bill for articles ordered by the Senate—that it is dishonorable to inquire whether these articles have been furnished or not. That is the proposition. Kossuth has been introduced, and Kossuth has awakened your sympathies, I have no doubt. He has departed from among us; a bill is presented by one of our own citizens, who, at the instance of the committee, supplied the articles necessary for his entertainment, and asking payment for these articles, and we are not even to inquire what those articles were. Sir, cannot we as well inquire into the propriety of paying that bill as we could inquire into the propriety of paying any other bill for articles ordered by the Senate?

Why is there such a degree of sensitiveness on the part of gentlemen in regard to this matter? What is there which is dishonorable in this inquiry? If the Senate had ordered these articles to be supplied for ourselves, or for anybody else, is it not always useful to inquire into the propriety of paying a bill? Are not the items examined by somebody, to ascertain that they are reasonable?

The honorable Senator from Rhode Island says that he is for paying this bill, so far as it is reasonable. Sir, who is against paying it, so far as it is reasonable? But how are you to ascertain whether it is reasonable or not, unless we or somebody else is to see the items?

Mr. CLARKE. If the honorable Senator from Maryland will allow me, I would beg to say, that he misunderstands me. I was for paying the bill when audited by the committee or the Secretary. All I meant to say was, that I had no idea of caviling about the amount, whether it was $4,000 or $5,000. The committee will determine that as provided by the resolution.

Mr. MANGUM. Let the resolution be read.

Mr. PRATT. One moment, sir. The Senator from Rhode Island expressly said that if the bill was reasonable it should be paid; and he will not say, nor will any man say, that if it should be unreasonable it ought to be paid. How is it that when these articles have been furnished to this individual no inquiry is to be made about it? What impropriety is there in making such an inquiry? That is the ordinary course. The individual himself has nothing on earth to do with it. The resolution does not direct that the committee shall examine the account, which I think it ought to do.

Mr. BADGER. Let the resolution be read again.

Mr. PRATT. I have no objection to have it read.

Mr. BADGER. It directs that an inquiry of this kind be made.

The resolution was read accordingly.

Mr. BADGER. My friend will notice that nothing is to be paid unless under the approval of the committee, and certainly he will not say that the items of the bill should be examined in open Senate. Such a duty has always been performed by a committee.

Mr. PRATT. Certainly not. But, Mr. President, it will have been noticed by you, and by others of the Senate, that I spoke in the commencement of this discussion in good humor, and that, therefore, the remarks which have been directed to myself were uncalled for. But it is said that the examination of these items will be caviling at them, and that to examine them will be to disgrace the individual; that it will be "belittling" him, and "belittling" ourselves, and "stultifying" ourselves; and I do not know how many other epithets were applied by the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. SMELLS] to what I said with good humor, rather with a view of producing a pleasant feeling on the part of the Senate, than any other. Sir, I assert that there is no man in the Senate who will say with more sincerity than I do, that so far as this bill is right it ought to be paid. But it ought to be examined by somebody or other fully authorized by the Senate to examine it, and then so far as it is right it ought to be paid. I never doubted that proposition. I am for paying it, but I can see no objection to examining it.

The original resolution has been handed to me since I commenced speaking. It is in these words:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Congress of the United States, in the name and behalf of the people of the United States, give to Louis Kossuth a cordial welcome to the capital and to the country."

As has already been said, a proposition to amend was made to include Kossuth's suite with him, but it was rejected—rejected by the peculiar friends of Kossuth himself. I have said this much, deeming it necessary because of the remarks made by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. ATCHISON. Mr. President, from the very beginning of this Kossuth matter up to the present hour I have been peculiarly situated—situated somewhat as poor Hungary is situated, with Russia on the one hand and Austria on the other. [The honorable Senator is seated between Mr. CLEMENS and Mr. PRATT.] But, sir, I have been rather neutral; I have been afraid to "intervene," either on the one side or on the other. [Laughter.] But as it is admitted on all hands that this bill must be paid, that it must be footed, and that the money must come from the Treasury of the United States, whether it be by appropriation under a joint resolution, or whether it be out of the contingent fund of the Senate, I take it, to use a cant phrase, that it is "the people's money"—come from whatever quarter it may.

I have heard no constitutional objection to paying it out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and, for a wonder, the Constitution has not been interposed from any quarter. I shall vote against postponing this matter. I shall vote for paying the bill now as a matter of economy, that it may be ended once for all. Whether it be from the influence of my friend on my right, or the Senator on my left, I have looked upon this whole matter rather suspiciously. I had an indistinct idea that there was something of humbuggery mixed up with it. Now let us end it. I think when we foot this bill and pay it off, it will be the end of Kossuth, and perhaps the end of the doctrine of intervention.

Mr. CASS. I will not go that. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATCHISON. I trust so, at all events. Then, as a matter of economy, and as a matter of justice to the hotel keeper, the man who is interested in this resolution, I am for paying the bill now. It is not now a question between Kossuth and the Senate, or between the Congress of the United States and Kossuth; but it is a question between the hotel keeper, and the Senate, or the House of Representatives, or both. If we pass a joint resolution—as all agree it must be paid—it goes to the House of Representatives; it makes an appropriation; and I am told that, under the rules of that House, every bill or resolution which makes an appropriation goes to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and God knows how many presidential speeches would there be hung upon this simple resolution. We do not know how many days, how many weeks, or how many months might be consumed in the discussion of this great question. Then, as a matter of economy, the sooner we get rid of it, the better for the Treasury of the United States. We have already spent about an hour in the discussion of this question. I trust it will not be postponed; and I trust, further, that if we are compelled to foot the bill, we will do it now, and pay it out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. CASS. I desire to take the question first on making that a joint resolution, and move an amendment to that effect.

The PRESIDENT. It is moved to amend the resolution by changing its form, so as to make it read as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the expenses incurred," &c.

Mr. CASS. I wish to say a word or two only on that question. As to the bill, I have nothing to say upon it. I am perfectly willing to leave it to the committee. As to Kossuth's suite, I think it is altogether proper that they should be supported at the public expense while they were here with him. We could not expect him to come here alone. It seems to me that is rather a small matter; but the other is the difficulty with me. The resolution recites the joint action of Congress in asking Mr. Kossuth to come here as the guest of the nation. It recites that it was done by the Congress of the United States; and now, to meet the necessary expenses, we propose to pay them out of the contingent fund of the Senate. I repeat, there is no propriety in that. The contingent fund of the Senate was meant to meet the expenses of the Senate as such. Why, sir, what is the value of specific appropriations, which the Democratic party have advocated since the days of Mr. Jefferson? The object is to decrease the amount of contingent payments, and make everything as specific as we can. The smallest claim in the Union, unless there is a preëxisting appropriation for it, has to come to Congress to be allowed and get a specific appropriation. It is a great principle which is involved in this question. I repeat, it is not to the bill that I object; I am willing to leave that to the committee. I am perfectly willing to extend to the suite the necessary support. I think that is all right. But because the House of Representatives may not act upon the joint resolution, is that any reason why we should not pass it? Is it the proper course for us to pursue, not to do our duty, presupposing that they will not do theirs, or that they will waste their time in useless and idle discussions? Nothing is more important than that specific appropriations should be made, as far as it is possible to make them. It was a great doctrine taught by Mr. Jefferson; and there is no man who knows the course of Mr. Randolph, but knows that it was one of the first things he urged in Congress. Our object is to give as little discretion to the accounting officers as possible; to make the appropriations specific, and let the officers act upon them under the operation of the law. I repeat it is no objection to this course, this legal constitutional course, that the House of Representatives will not do their duty. I presuppose no such thing.

Mr. MANGUM. I should like to know very much, sir, how a specific appropriation can be made in this case? One dozen of champagne, four and twenty or fifty dollars, as the case may be; half a dozen bottles of cologne, and various other matters! Sir, Mr. Jefferson's doctrine never touched such a case as this. The thing is impracticable in the nature of the case. I know something about the doctrine of specific appropriations. When I was a very young man and a member of the other House, we undertook to carry it out. With that view, on the naval appropriations, a committee of conference was got up from the other House, and one from the Senate; and Mr. Rufus King and the late Mr. Lloyd, then a representative of Massachusetts, made a report, and the result of the endeavor was to show as little foresight as could be shown. The effect of it was a crippling of the whole operation of the public service. Sir, as to this Kossuth movement, I view it with contempt; and so view, though with a much more energetic feeling, the doctrine which he has broached since he left the city of Washington. I have no sympathy with it; but if we have contracted an obligation, let us get out of it, and, as I said before, to do it gracefully constitutes more than half its worth. When General Lafayette was here, I remember, under the recommendation of President Monroe, we reported a bill to give him $200,000 and a township of land. There was a minority opposed to it. They were against exceeding $100,000. The question came up for consideration, the General having been invited here, and tendered a passage in a national ship; and, sir, I think the other branch of the Legislature almost unanimously felt that we should lower ourselves very much in the public judgment, if in making a gratuity, we should weigh it as fine gold. That was the first occasion upon which I ever addressed that House in my life, to repudiate that idea. The appropriation was voted to General Lafayette, with only seven or eight opposed to it. You, Mr. President, were then a member of this branch of the Legislature, and it passed here with an overwhelming majority. There were about ten or fifteen, or perhaps not so many, opposed to it.

Sir, I can see no merit in our Government having tendered a national ship to a mere revolutionary mover in the Old World—I allude to Mr. Kossuth; one who had never rendered any service to this country; and one who, so far as we know, has rendered none to the cause of liberty. We were brought into that without due reflection. I hope we shall never do so again; but having incurred these expenses, I think we ought to meet them without counting the cost. The committee is to examine the bill. That committee consists of three of the most eminent members of this body—the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] and the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD.] If they have not learned arithmetic enough to settle the account of this hotel-keeper, I think we never shall. It strikes me as an extravagant bill. However, I shall leave it to those gentlemen to say what is right, and I shall not quibble about it. I hope the subject will not be postponed, and that we will consume no more time upon it; but take a vote, and dispose of it finally.

Mr. CASS. I desire to say one word, in answer to the remarks of the Senator from North Carolina. He speaks about champagne. I do not know whether there is any in the bill. He probably understands it better than I do. He asks whether every bottle of champagne—and I suppose every mouthful—is to be put in the specific appropriation? Nobody ever thought of such a thing. The honorable Senator did not ask the question seriously. In a specific appropriation, we leave the accounting officers to carry the details into effect. I am for making a specific appropriation in this case of $5,000, or $4,000, or $3,000, or whatever may be necessary for the support of Kossuth, and leave the investigation to the committee to determine whether the items are proper. What they determine will be satisfactory to me. No man dreams of going over every item in the bill.

Mr. SEWARD. If the Senator will permit me, I will ask him a question. If this is not a specific appropriation now, will it be made more so by changing it from a resolution of the Senate to a joint resolution of both Houses?

Mr. CASS. That has nothing to do with it. Specific appropriations are not made by the action of the Senate, but by the joint action of the Senate, House of Representatives, and President of the United States. Allow me to say, that at the commencement of the Government, I believe, in asking appropriations for the Army, it was customary to say so many millions for the Army. Who would venture to ask such an appropriation for the Army now? They would ask so much for the pay of officers; so much for subsistence; so much for clothing; so much for the pay of the soldiers; so much for the medical department; so much for each particular. Specific appropriations should be made to check abuses. That is their object. No man pretends that you can, beforehand, set down every item. But, as is done in every constitutional government, you can make your appropriation for the object to which it is to be applied, and then you can hold your executive officers responsible for the proper application of the money, and the proper, legal adjustment of the accounts rendered under it. The honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MANGUM] says, that he formerly made a speech to show that specific appropriations were useless.

Mr. MANGUM. Oh, no.

Mr. CASS. I thought that was the amount of the remark.

Mr. MANGUM. My remark was, that when you attempt to tie them up to the line of precision, it very often cripples the public service.

Mr. CASS. That crippling has come down to us for half a century, and will go on, I trust, as long as we are a Government. Suppose you should undertake to say that $52,000,000 should be appropriated for the expenses of the Government, and leave the Executive to apply it; is there a man in either House of Congress who would advocate such a plan? It would be hooted, or the public voice would hoot us out. Well, then, the nearer you get to a specific appropriation in every case, the nearer you get to a compliance with the true rule.

As to the question of the Senator from New York, I would say that he mistakes the whole question in dispute between us. It is simply a question of the proper application to be made of the contingent fund. It is no question of a specific appropriation, or of a latitudinarian appropriation. It is no question of appropriation at all, but a question of application. You appropriate so much for the pay of members, so much for this contingent expense and the other; now, what are they, fairly, honestly and purely? They are the expenses necessary to enable you to get along in your legislative capacity—payment of officers, and things of that description. But now you come to us with a resolution passed by both Houses of Congress, and signed by the President, inviting the guest of the nation to come here, and you wish to appropriate the amount of his expenses out of the contingent fund of this body. I repeat it is not proper. You say that Lafayette was paid. But was he paid the $200,000 out of the contingent fund of the Senate? Did any man dream that it was so? Would there have been found one man in either House who would advocate such a course, or have even proposed to give to Lafayette $200,000 out of the contingent fund of the Senate? No, sir; it was a regular act of Congress. I shall vote for this appropriation with pleasure, if it is put in the form of an appropriation to be made by Congress, so that it may take the accustomed course in passing the two Houses.

Mr. RUSK. I desire to say but a few words. All seem to admit that we have incurred a liability to pay these expenses. How has that liability been incurred? By a law of Congress, or by a direct joint resolution, which has the same force as a law, which was passed by both Houses of Congress. This proposition is to pay the expenses out of the contingent fund of the Senate, which is given for a particular object—the payment of the necessary expenses of the Senate, as a body, by itself. Now, this is either a debt owing to the tavern-keeper, or an obligation of politeness we are under to Mr. Kossuth. It seems to be treated in both capacities. Take it in either. Sir, the proper mode of doing it, unless you sanction an abuse in legislation, is by a regular, legal appropriation by the two Houses of Congress, and passing all the departments which hold a check on our expenditures.

This is a matter in which gentlemen say, our courtesy is concerned, in which our obligations also are concerned. Well, there are other cases in which there are just as strong obligations, and as much courtesy due from this body towards claimants, as in this instance are due towards the hotel-keeper. I know there are bills lying upon the table, providing for the payment to widows and orphans of just debts which they have against the United States, which have been reported upon frequently by committees of both Houses of Congress, but because they have been discussed in one House, or time did not permit them to be passed, have failed; and they are still here.

The reason which the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. ARCHERSON] furnishes, that they will discuss presidential questions in the House of Representatives on this resolution, might apply to every bill. Then, according to that doctrine, we should have to change our whole proceedings. Would it not be just as legal, and proper, and appropriate, to take up one of these meritorious bills for the payment of $1,000 or $5,000 in favor of some individual who has a just claim upon the Government, and pay it out of the contingent fund of the Senate, because there would not be time to pass it in the House of Representatives? That would be just as legitimate a reason for us to take such a course to take money out of the Treasury, as it would be in this case. But it is altogether an assumption that it will be discussed in the House and not passed. We do not know anything about that. My plan is to act, and take our share of the responsibility, and trust to the House of Representatives. I believe they will be as just and as dignified as we; and, therefore, I shall vote for the amendment to constitute this a joint resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. The honorable Senator from New York, when the discussion was commenced, inquired of me in which form I would give the resolution a preference? I replied, as a joint resolution. As that topic is under discussion, I wish to state my reason for giving that opinion. It is now proposed, by this resolution, to take money from what is called the contingent fund of the Senate, in order to make these payments. That contingent fund is money already appropriated—appropriated by the two Houses of Congress for the use of the Senate, in payment of its contingent expenses. If this is a contingent expense of the Senate, then it is proper to make this application of the money. I thought that it was a little doubtful whether it would fall among that description of expenditure that we ordinarily consider the contingent expenses of the Senate; and therefore it was that I answered that I would prefer a joint resolution. I cannot perceive that the House could have within its contemplation, when it agreed to give this contingent fund, an expenditure of this description; though perhaps in some instances we adopt, as contingent, payments that are of as doubtful a character as this. I shall, however, find no insuperable difficulty in supporting it as a contingent expense, or as a joint resolution; for that this bill ought to be paid admits of no doubt; it can admit of no doubt. Why, sir, if any man of spirit and honor, for whose benefit a bill of this sort was incurred, could have listened to this debate, he would have put his hand in his pocket and paid the hotel-keeper himself. Why has it not been done? It has not been done, because a committee of this body and a committee of the other House, having the matter in charge, gave this gentleman to understand that he would be welcome to his lodgings; that no compensation, and no equivalent was to be expected from him.

Now, whatever might be my views of the character of this individual, or of the course of life which he has pursued, I should deem this the most improper motive for me to withdraw myself from this transaction. I would meet the bill and pay it fairly, be it what it may. Nor would I inquire into the particulars of such a bill. I hardly think it is compatible with the character and dignity of the two Houses to go into the items of the expenditure. It is enough that you appoint a committee to look into the business, to take care of your rights, and see that what to them is satisfactory is done. That is enough for me. I would not stop to inquire whether the amount was reasonable or unreasonable.

The Government paid this gentleman a great compliment—one that is almost unparalleled in the history of the country, there being but one precedent for a similar course of procedure. They gave him a welcome to the capital and to the country. And the committee, in my judgment, did right, when they thought that the spirit of hospitality in the Government should be carried out by making further provision for his entertainment. I, for one, approve of the course they have pursued. And now I would meet this obligation—meet it manfully, and pay it, as it becomes us to do.

Mr. PRATT. I do not know to what portion of this debate the remarks of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts are intended as a reply. I would ask him to state, who upon this floor has said that this bill is not to be paid? I have heard no one say so. Every one has said that the bill is to be paid. All this declamation about honor is to mean something or nothing. What does it mean? Every one admits the bill is to be paid; but is it incompatible with honor that there should be some party to inquire whether it is reasonable or not? It is simply the bill of a hotel keeper.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator alludes to me, I will beg to make one remark. I spoke of my own individual feelings, and of those of no other person.

Mr. PRATT. I do not know what was the use of saying it would be dishonorable to do this; and that, if the gentleman had been present and heard this debate, he would have put his hands into his pocket, and paid the bill himself. No man has made the question whether the nation is not to pay the bill—to pay what is right; but still, the question is made, whether there cannot be an inquiry instituted as to the amount of the bill. A hotel keeper has presented a bill to a committee of the Senate, and they say that that bill is to be paid without examination. That is the proposition on one side; and the proposition upon the other side is, that it is not incompatible with honor that we should inquire into the items of that bill—that somebody should inquire—some accounting officer—whether the bill is right or wrong.

Mr. BADGER. My friend from Maryland has fallen into a singular error. The resolution expressly requires that what is to be paid, is to be paid upon the approval of the committee. I believe that is the usual course of the Senate.

Mr. PRATT. We do not differ at all. If this committee is to inquire first into the items of the bill, if they are to be invested with the power of ascertaining the correctness of the bill, I shall be satisfied. But I am not speaking of what that Senator says; I am replying to the argument made on the other side, which is based on the hypothesis that it is dishonorable to inquire whether the bill is right or wrong, and that it must be paid now.

Mr. SHIELDS. I had not the intention of charging anything like dishonor upon the Senator from Maryland. I only felt that it would be a little wanting in dignity to go into an investigation, in the Senate, of the little items of this bill. I believe he would be the last man to do it. I do not at all mean to impute any wrong motive to the Senator.

Mr. BORLAND. I have not, from the beginning of this discussion, objected to the payment of this bill; nor have I heard any one, as the Senator from Maryland remarked, object to it. I proposed, for the single reason I stated, that the further consideration of the resolution should be postponed; not that I was not prepared to vote upon it, and for the payment of it, now. The Senate having decided that they will not postpone it, I am prepared to vote now. But, sir, I wish to say, in regard to a remark which fell from the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] that I do not understand how it can be considered a small affair, or a very small matter, unworthy to be introduced here. The Senate did positively refuse, upon a substantial proposition, to include any one in the invitation extended to Louis Kossuth but himself, after full discussion on the subject. The proposition having been brought forward to provide for the entertainment of those who were to accompany Kossuth, and it having been rejected, I do not see how the Senator can think it an immaterial, small, or irrelevant matter, to be considered in this connection. It will be recollected, also, that this very proposition was not only made, but carried without opposition, to the objection then made to this business of receiving and entertaining Mr. Kossuth, without the concurrent action of the other House. It was expressly stated by a late Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Foote,] when I made a proposition to include an appropriation for the purpose of paying these expenses, as an objection to that, that its going to the other House as a joint resolution would defeat it. The same apprehension seems to be entertained now. Gentlemen are afraid to trust the other House. They are afraid to send the matter there, as the House might investigate it. I conceive it can be for no other reason. Putting the two circumstances together, it seems to me to make out a case which leaves us ground for the suspicion, at least, that the object of making this appropriation out of the contingent fund of the Senate is to avoid the discussion which it will undergo in the other House, and the chances of being there defeated. In appropriating money out of the Treasury of the United States for any purpose whatever, I am not for avoiding the investigation of the other House. I think it is right that, not only in a case of this sort, but in every case, such a proposition should undergo the scrutiny of both Houses. The Constitution requires it; former legislation requires it; and, I think, the experience of the country justifies it; and everything adds to the force and propriety of the requirement; and for these reasons I wish to adhere to it.

Mr. BADGER. I wish to say one word to my friend from Arkansas. If the whole House of Representatives were, to a man, opposed to the payment of this bill, it would furnish no reason why it should not be paid, and would not relieve this Senate from their responsibility to pay it. Mr. Kossuth came here, and was received by our committee, acting under our joint resolution; he was by them placed in the quarters which he occupied. He was placed there upon their authority and their responsibility as our representatives; and he had been there, I believe, some ten days before any committee was appointed for the purpose of receiving him by the House. No committee of the House ever joined in the action (by which he was put in those quarters, or assumed any responsibility) on the part of the House for making the compensation. Therefore, I say it would be wrong for us to submit this question to the House. What our committee has done, we are bound to see respected and carried through by the power which we possess of doing it. That is the view I take of the question.

Mr. BORLAND. I think the Senator from North Carolina is mistaken. It has been clearly shown by the Senators from Rhode Island [Mr. Clarke] and Virginia, [Mr. Mason,] that Mr. Kossuth was not invited here, and not received here, and not entertained here upon the invitation of the Senate alone; but by a joint resolution of the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. BADGER. There is no sort of inconsistency in that. I know there was a joint resolution, somewhat in the French style—"The American people give to Louis Kossuth a cordial welcome to the capital and the country." I know that that was so. It was a flourish. But this Senate, before he arrived here, appointed a committee to receive him, without any action of the House; and they placed him in the lodgings where he remained until he left the city.

Mr. SEWARD. That is exactly the fact. No committee had been appointed by the other House when Mr. Kossuth arrived in this city. He was met by us, and taken by us, to the hotel, and received by its keeper upon the contingency of provision being made for the payment of his expenses. And before Kossuth left the city, he offered to pay the expense himself, but was instructed by the committee not to do so.

Mr. BORLAND. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the question of so amending the resolution as to make it a joint resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SOULE. I wish to ascertain distinctly the fact, whether these expenses were incurred under the responsibility of the committee appointed by this body?

Mr. SHIELDS. They were solely and wholly incurred under the responsibility of the committee appointed by the Senate. The committee of the other House had nothing to do with it; in fact, they were not, at the time, appointed.

Mr. SOULE. That being the case, I submit to the Senate, whether, under any circumstances, we can exonerate ourselves from the responsibility accruing out of that fact? As the Senator from North Carolina just now has properly remarked, let us suppose, for a moment, that there be a difficulty in the House about appropriating a sufficient sum of money to satisfy this bill, how would the Senate stand? I cannot hesitate, myself, in the solution of this question. We are bound to pay it; and, being bound to pay it, I shall vote for the resolution as it stands.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, on the adoption of the amendment, resulted—yeas 16, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Bayard, Borland, Bradbury, Brodhead, Cass, Clarke, Davis, Downs, Geyer, King, McRae, Mason, Morton, Pratt, Rusk, and Upham—16.

NAYS.—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bell, Brooke, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mangum, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Stockton, Sumner, Underwood, and Wade—21.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORTON called for the yeas and nays on the resolution; and they were ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to say that I was opposed to this whole proceeding from the beginning. I was opposed to the reception of Louis Kossuth by the Senate. But the Senate having thought proper to treat him as they have done, and to incur the expense, as my friend from Massachusetts has observed, I regard it as a duty on the part of the Senate to pay the bill—just as much so as if a war should be declared by both Houses of Congress, against which I voted, and then a proposition were made to defray all the expenses that might have been incurred by its prosecution.

Mr. BORLAND. Before the vote is taken, I desire to say one word. I shall vote against this resolution. Not that I am opposed to paying the bill, but because I do not think this is the proper way of paying it. I vote against the mode, and not against the amount or the proposition to pay.

The yeas and nays being taken on the adoption of the resolution, resulted—yeas 31, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Bradbury, Brodhead, Brooke, Chase, Davis, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Downs, Fish, Geyer, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, King, McRae, Mangum, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Smith, Soule, Stockton, Sumner, Underwood, Upham, and Wade—31.

NAYS.—Messrs. Borland, Cass, Clarke, Mason, Morton, and Pratt—6.

So the resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I hope the Senate will not agree to the motion of the Senator from Virginia. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] has the floor to-day on the Iowa land bill. I understand he does not wish to occupy it more than half an hour; after which time there will be abundant opportunity to go into Executive session and do what business may be brought before the Senate. I hope the motion will not be agreed to. I am confident that the Senator from Michigan will not speak more than half an hour, and then there will be more time left than is usually occupied in Executive session.

Mr. CASS. It is a matter of the most perfect indifference to me. I have not much to say, and I have no wish, one way or the other, whether I shall go on now, or at some other time.

Mr. BORLAND. I hope the motion will not be adopted. The Senator from Michigan is willing and prepared to go on to-day, although he says he is indifferent, and would as soon speak some other day. But the interests of this Iowa bill, which has been a long time postponed, call upon the Senate with a great deal of force, for consideration, and, if possible, for a vote upon it at this time. I hope, therefore, that as the Senate is now full, and will probably be so for an hour or two to come, and, as the Senator from Michigan does not propose to occupy the Senate a very long while, his remarks may be heard now; and that, afterwards, we may bring the bill to a vote.

Mr. MASON. There is an urgent consideration why the business to be done in Executive session should be transacted at once. Senators who were present yesterday when we went into Executive session, know the propriety of doing so. I would not ask the Senate to go into Executive session, if the Senator from Michigan wished to-day to occupy the floor. But I understand that it is indifferent to him whether or not he goes on to-day. Only a remnant of the day is left, and I think we cannot employ it better than in Executive session.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. It has been heretofore agreed in this body, that we are to come here on Tuesday next prepared on that day to take the vote upon the Iowa land bill. I know there are about four or five Senators who desire to be heard on the bill before the vote is taken. That will necessarily consume the whole of Monday and of Tuesday, and therefore we shall not be able to take the vote on Tuesday at the usual hour of adjournment; and I fear we shall have to sit until late in the evening.

Mr. BADGER. Postpone the taking of the vote until Wednesday next.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. If the Senator from Michigan be permitted to occupy the residue of this day—and he will not speak longer than until ten or fifteen minutes after three o'clock—I am certain we shall then have more time than the Senate usually bestows upon Executive business in any one day. I hope, therefore, that the Iowa land bill will not be laid aside.

The PRESIDENT. It is not under consideration. The motion is not to lay it aside, but to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

And, after some time spent in Executive session, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 11, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. FICKLIN. I desire the unanimous consent of the House, to make the necessary motion in order to get at the bill providing for prosecuting the work on the extension of the Capitol. I think the better mode of effecting that object is, with the consent of my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] to move to postpone the further consideration of the special order in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union till this day week, or this day two weeks. Then we can not only dispose of the bill providing for the prosecution of the work on the Capitol, but proceed to consider the deficiency bill, about which the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means seems so anxious. If it meet with the approbation of the House, therefore, I will move that the further consideration of the special order in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, be postponed till this day week.

The SPEAKER. That can only be reached regularly, by discharging the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

A VOICE. It can be passed over by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I will acquiesce in the proposition of the gentleman, if it meet the universal approbation of the House. As far as the homestead bill is concerned, I am satisfied that everything is to be gained by delay. At the same time I do not want to press the discussion of this matter upon the House. If it is the wish of the House that this bill shall go over till next Tuesday week, I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. FICKLIN. I will then vary my motion as to time, so that the further consideration of this special order shall be postponed till next Tuesday week.

Mr. AVERETT. I hope the opponents of the measure, which is now the special order, (the homestead bill,) will be allowed to take part in its discussion. Hitherto, nearly all of the speaking has been on one side—in favor of the measure. The motion to cut short the discussion yesterday, was coupled with the threat that those who should vote against that motion, were to be held responsible for delaying the public business. Now, the truth is, that most of our time in committee has been consumed in speeches to unmake and make Presidents—and in other matters wholly irrelevant to the special order.

The SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House the bill can be made to take the direction proposed.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California. I object to the postponement.

Mr. CARTTER. I would inquire whether the gentleman from California [Mr. MARSHALL] will not still retain the floor in committee, if the postponement should be agreed upon.

The SPEAKER. Not necessarily. He will be entitled to it when the committee shall recur to the measure upon which he obtained the floor. His right to the floor will go over with the bill.

A MEMBER. The floor will be given the gentleman from California as a matter of courtesy.

Mr. MARSHALL. If it is the understanding that I shall have the floor after the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CARTTER. I renew it.

Mr. FICKLIN. With the consent of gentlemen, I will modify my motion, so that it shall not apply until after to-day. It will then provide that after to-day the further consideration of the special order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall be postponed until a week from next Tuesday. It will then take its place as the special order again.

Mr. CARTTER. I have no objection to that. All I desire is, that the gentleman from California shall be allowed to make his speech to-day.

Mr. STANTON, of Ohio. I renew the objection.

Mr. OLDS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House, to allow me to introduce a resolution calling for information from one of the Departments.

Mr. STANTON. At the suggestion of several gentlemen around me, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. MEACHAM. I renew it.

CLOSE OF DEBATE ON HOMESTEAD BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state what is the regular order of business. The following resolution was offered yesterday by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. STANLEY:]

"Resolved, That all debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the bill of the House No. 7, to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and other branches of industry, by granting to every man who is the head of a family and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land, out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period herein specified, shall cease at three o'clock on Thursday, the 11th instant; and if the committee shall not come to a conclusion sooner upon the same, it shall then proceed to vote upon such amendments as shall be pending or offered to the same, and shall then report it to the House, with such amendments as may have been agreed upon by the committee."

The question immediately pending is the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] to lay the resolution upon the table, and upon that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. It will be seen from the various motions which have been made, that the friends of that measure propose to do anything reasonable in relation to this matter. I trust, therefore, that the House will vote down this resolution to close debate.

Mr. McMULLIN. I beg leave to say one word upon this question.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

It was objected to.

The question was then taken on the motion to lay on the table, and the result was—yeas 121, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Ashe, Averett, Babcock, Thomas H. Bayly, Bartlett, Bell, Bragg, Breckinridge, Brenton, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Buell, Burrows, Busby, Joseph Cable, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chandler, Chapman, Chastain, Churchill, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colecock, Conger, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Disney, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Floyd, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Gamble, Gaylord, Giddings, Gilmore, Gorman, Green, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Henn, Hibbard, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ives, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Preston King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Letcher, Edward C. Marshall, Mason, McCorkle, McDonald, McLanahan, McMullin, McNair, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Murray, Nabers, Newton, Olds, Orr, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Penn, Pennington, Polk, Porter, Price, Richardson, Schoonmaker, Scudder, Scurry, Origen S. Seymour, Skelton, Smart, Smith, Snow, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abram P. Stevens, Alexander H. Stephens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Thurston, Townshend, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welsh, Addison White, Alexander White, Wilcox, Wildrick, Williams, and Woodward—121.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Barrere, Bibbighaus, John H. Boyd, Briggs, Brooks, E. Carrington Cabell, Cleveland, Dockery, Doty, Evans, Faulkner, Gentry, Hall, Haws, Haven, Hendricks, Howard, Jackson, James Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, George G. King, Lockhart, Meacham, John Moore, Morehead, Outlaw, Peaslee, Perkins, Ross, Schenmerhorn, Schoolcraft, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Wallace, Walsh, and Wells—39.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. FICKLIN. I understand my friend from Vermont [Mr. MEACHAM] will now withdraw his objection to postpone the special order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I therefore renew the motion.

Mr. MEACHAM. Gentlemen tell me that if I will withdraw my objection to the resolution, there is some prospect we shall get to the public business, and for a time put a stop to these political speeches. I will withdraw my objection.

Accordingly, by general consent, the further consideration of the order was postponed, after to day, until Tuesday week.

Mr. CARTTER. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HIBBARD in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being House bill No. 7, for the encouragement of agriculture, manufactures, and other branches of industry, by granting to every man, &c., one hundred and sixty acres of land.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. MARSHALL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MARSHALL, of California, addressed the House an hour (in remarks which have been withheld for revision, and which will be published in the Appendix) in reply to the remarks made yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] upon the subject of American progress, and the Presidency, and in defense of Judge DOUGLAS.

Mr. M. having concluded—

Mr. BELL next obtained the floor, and addressed the House his allotted hour in regard to the disposition of the public domain, the rights of all the States therein, the expansion of American commerce, and the tariff.

[His remarks, withheld for revision, will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio, obtaining the floor—

Mr. McMULLIN. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] will give way, I will move that the committee now rise.

Mr. CABLE. I will yield to that motion alone, still retaining my right to the floor.

Mr. WALSH. We can get at the bill in regard to the Capitol, if the committee rise, and at once, by unanimous consent, pass it. I ask for tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. CHANDLER, and HARRIS of Alabama, were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—aye 39; noes not counted.

So the committee refused to rise.

Mr. COBB. I desire to make an announcement, if the gentleman from Ohio will allow me; I never wish to take the House by surprise. I have but one report to make, and that is a bill to graduate and reduce the price of public lands. That question I consider to be twin sister with the one we have now under discussion. I give notice that I shall move to put that bill upon its passage, and I shall resist everything like a reference, so the matter may be discussed in connection with the other.

Mr. CABLE, of Ohio, followed, and spoke an hour in favor of the bill under consideration. He thought that its adoption would do more for the interest and welfare of this Government, more for the happiness and prosperity of the people, than any bill that had ever passed the House.

[See Appendix for Mr. C's speech.]

Mr. FULLER, of Maine, obtained the floor.

Mr. FOWLER. I move, with the permission of the gentleman, that the committee rise; which motion was agreed to.

The committee rose accordingly, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the special order, being House bill No. 7, to encourage agriculture, and for other purposes, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move the House adjourn.

Mr. WALSH. I would request of the gentleman a withdrawal of his motion, that we may pass the bill for the renewal of the work upon the extension of the Capitol. We can withdraw the bill from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union by unanimous consent.

Mr. MARSHALL refused to withdraw the motion.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to, and The House adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:
By Mr. FLORENCE: The memorial of R. G. Simpson, Thomas H. Waram, Samuel G. Hamilton, Samuel Laferty, Oliver S. Comman, and 65 others, citizens of the county of Philadelphia, praying for the extension of the Woodworth patent for planing boards, &c.

Also, a letter from George B. Sloat, of the county of Philadelphia, in relation to the same subject, informing that more than 3,700 names have been signed to petitions and forwarded by him and J. R. Wilson, also of Philadelphia county, in favor of the extension of the Woodworth patent for planing boards, &c.

By Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York: Two remonstrances of inhabitants of Rensselaer county, New York, against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

Also, a remonstrance of sundry citizens of Troy, New York, against the same.

Also, nine petitions from numerous citizens in Schenectady, Mechanicsville, Waterford, Saratoga Springs, Fort Ann, Smith's Basin, and Troy, New York, and from Castleton, Vermont, praying that Whitehall, on Lake Champlain, be made a port of entry.

By Mr. WILDRICK: The petition of J. E. Pierson and 78 others of Still Water, Sussex county, New Jersey, against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. PARKER, of Pennsylvania: The remonstrance of John R. Weeks and 58 others, citizens of Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, against the extension of the Woodworth patent by Congress.

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of Henry Lyons and 35 others, citizens of Philadelphia county, in favor of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. MASON: The memorial of J. S. Perry and others, citizens of Kentucky, praying Congress to grant a protection on iron.

Also, the memorial of J. Buckley and others, citizens of Kentucky, praying Congress to grant a protection on iron.

By Mr. CONGER: The petition of J. K. Rugg and 38 others, citizens of Genesee county, Michigan, in favor of Cyrius Parrish, a soldier of the Revolution, for arrears of pension, and to have his pension increased to its original amount, to wit, $56 66 per year, with accompanying testimony and exhibits.

By Mr. BIRIGHAUS: The remonstrance of James Hazleton, William Kerr, William K. Mahaley, and 150 other citizens of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, against the renewal of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. WILCOX: The petition of William Hulbert and others, citizens of the State of Mississippi, praying that said Hulbert may be refunded the sum of $99 41, which he has twice paid for the west half of the northwest quarter of section fifteen and township sixteen, of range nine, east.

By Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts: The petition of James Lyman and others, citizens of Massachusetts, praying that Woodworth's patent be not extended.

Also, the petition of Eleazer Porter and others, citizens of Massachusetts, praying for additional pay to assistant marshals employed in taking the census.

By Mr. MILLER: The memorial signed by 70 citizens of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the extension of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. PRICE: The memorial of P. K. Dickinson & Co., of Wilmington, North Carolina, against the extension of the patent of William W. Woodworth.

By Mr. ROBBIE: The remonstrance of Ira Tracy and 200 others, citizens of Alleghany county, New York, against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

On motion by Mr. SCUDDER, under the rule, the petitions of Joseph H. Davis and others, and the accompanying papers relating to the scamen engaged in the whale fishery and the erection of a marine hospital at New Bedford, Massachusetts, were taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 12, 1852.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have risen for the purpose of asking the unanimous consent of the Senate, to do what I believe I have never before done. It is to occupy a few moments in addressing it upon a subject before the body, relating to the action of the Committee on Commerce, and somewhat personal to myself. I think I will not occupy more than fifteen or twenty minutes of the time of the Senate; and I desire unanimous consent for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT. The Senator can only address the Senate on a subject not now pending, by unanimous consent. If there be no objection the Senator from Maine can proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, in the early part of this session, sundry memorials were referred to the Committee on Commerce, relating to an act to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam. The subject was referred by the Committee on Commerce to a subcommittee, consisting of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAVIS.] On the 18th day of February, that Senator reported the bill which I now hold in my hand. The matter, as originally presented to the Committee on Commerce, embraced the subject of steam-boilers, life-boats, pumps, and other apparatus connected with our steam-boats. On a subsequent day to that on which the original papers were presented to the committee, my colleague [Mr. BRADBURY] introduced a resolution, calling the attention of the Committee on Commerce to another branch connected with the matter to which the bill originally related, to wit: to the subject of the distresses and calamities which grew out of our overburdened boats from New York to California, and from California to New York. On the presentation of that resolution, and of other papers and memorials relating to the same subject, the committee immediately gave the subject a consideration. This bill, to which I have referred, was reported on the 18th day of February, and contains certain provisions designed to remedy the evils complained of in relation to California steamers. After the Senator from Massachusetts had reported the bill, there were two other papers referred to the Committee on Commerce, relating to the California steamers. On the first day of March, by the direction of the Committee on Commerce, I submitted the following report:

"Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred documents relating to the treatment of passengers in steam-vessels going to and from California, and a memorial from the citizens of Brunswick, Maine, on the same subject, submitted a report asking to be discharged from the further consideration of the same; which was agreed to."

Now, if the reporters had stated what I stated in my place, this explanation on my part would not have been necessary. I stated that I made the report because the committee had already reported a bill embracing the subject-matter contained in these papers. But the reporters did not make the explanation which I gave in my place, consequently I find that the Legislature of the State of Maine, justly alarmed that no action was to be taken by Congress in relation to that question, have agitated the question. I find that public meetings in New England have been called, and all predicated upon a mistaken fact, to wit: That the Committee on Commerce have asked leave to be discharged from the consideration of the subject. It simply asked to be discharged from the consideration of those two papers; and the reason which I gave would have been sufficient, if it had been stated, namely: that the subject-matter had already been reported upon. And besides that, and subsequent to this brief report which I made, asking to be discharged from the consideration of these two papers, I may say that I have been overwhelmed with letters from all parts of New England, from which section of country many of our people are going to the distant region of California; and I have sought this occasion to make this explanation, in order that it may be known—first, that the Committee on Commerce have neither been remiss or derelict in its duty; and, secondly, that in making the report, I only sought to be discharged from these two papers, because the subject had been reported upon.

One word further. Because the bill is a voluminous one, I desire to state very briefly what are the provisions in it which we have incorporated, with the desire to cure the evil which has been so much complained of. In the first place, the bill provides that there shall be appointed by the President two inspectors; one to be called Inspector of Steam-Boilers, and one to be called Inspector of Hulls. This bill provides that this Board of Inspectors shall examine the character of the vessel, of its hull and its construction, and shall designate precisely the number of passengers, beyond which the boat shall not be allowed to carry; and these inspectors, after having made such an examination, are to issue a certificate, to the owners of the boat, which certificate is to be printed, and to be put up in some public and conspicuous place in the boat, showing the number of passengers beyond which the boat shall not be allowed to carry. In the opinion of the committee, very much of the evils complained of arise from the great number of passengers taken on board.

It has been suggested that the same rule which applies to our sailing vessels shall apply to our steam-vessels. The matter received the consideration of the committee. I have received this morning a letter from a very intelligent, and scientific, and educated gentleman in Maine, who urges upon our consideration the importance of making the same provisions that apply to our sailing vessels apply to our steam-boats. But when it is known that the construction of our steam-boats varies so much from that of our sailing vessels, it will be seen that the superficial number of feet, or the number of square feet necessary for a passenger in the one case, would not be an adequate or proper rule for the other case. It was believed, and it is believed by your committee, that by the appointment of a skillful man to inspect the boat and its construction, he would better determine the number than any rule which the committee could fix, based on the number either of superficial or square feet.

It is also proposed by the committee when this bill shall come up for consideration, to add another section to it, with ample and sufficient penalties, which shall compel the owners of the boats to have a sufficient quantity of food, and of sufficient quality. Both of these provisions, when incorporated into a bill, in the opinion of your committee, will meet very nearly all the objections, and cure all the calamities which are said to be occasioned. The Senator from Massachusetts will offer such an amendment.

Then, sir, in addition to that, the bill provides, that for a violation of the provisions to which I have alluded, the owners and the master of a vessel shall be liable in a penalty equal to the amount of the passage money, and ten dollars additional for every passenger they shall take on board the boat beyond the number specified in the certificate. The bill also provides, that all the penalties attached in such case shall attach to the boat, and the boat shall be held to respond to all the damages which shall arise in relation to any violation of the provision of the bill relating to passengers. The bill was drawn up by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I am bound to say that he has manifested great industry and signal ability. And I think that when carefully examined by the Senate, it will be very certain to meet its approval. It does meet mine, and will receive my hearty concurrence. If there are any additional provisions which should be deemed necessary, in relation to the ventilation of these boats, or of any other description, I can only say, that there is a concurrent sentiment existing in the Committee on Commerce, to add all necessary provisions to meet all the evils that may be found to exist in the case.

The bill is a very important one, and one in which a deep interest is taken by the public. The calamities and evils complained of are indeed startling, and I can state, the committee are fully impressed with its importance. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS,] who has it in charge, will ask for its consideration at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire simply to add that I have received numerous communications, founded upon the same misapplication to which allusion has been made, from different parts of my State. The explanation which my colleague has given, will remove, I think, all misapprehensions on the subject. I desire to add, that I am very glad to learn that it is in contemplation by the Committee on Commerce to propose an amendment to the bill already reported, imposing severe penalties for the neglect to provide sufficient and suitable food for passengers. I hope the bill will be taken up at an early day, and receive prompt consideration. I believe that the Senate will be satisfied, from a detail of the facts, that greater and more horrid abuses have never been inflicted on civilized men, than are continually practiced, even at the present day, upon large numbers of passengers in some of the steamers plying between the Atlantic ports and California.

SPECIAL ORDER—PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. RHETT. I move to postpone the execution of the order setting apart Fridays for the consideration of private bills, for half an hour.

The motion was not agreed to.

WILLIAM A. DUER.

The report made by the Committee of Claims in the case of William A. Duer, came up for consideration, and was, on motion, postponed until Friday next.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT. The usual course has been to take up reports in the first instance. Last Friday the Senate determined not to act upon the reports, but to proceed to the consideration of the bills on the Private Calendar. The Chair will be under the direction of the Senate as respects that matter. If they prefer that the bills shall be taken up, to the exclusion of the reports made on private bills by committees, the Chair will take that course.

Mr. BADGER. I hope we will proceed, as we did last Friday, with the Calendar. The bills which we pass have to go to the House of Representatives. The adverse reports can be agreed to at any time, and there is an end of them.

Mr. BAYARD. The effect may be that the adverse reports will never be agreed to. Such a result is not uncommon, if they are passed over in that way. It will take but a short time, probably not half an hour, to go through the whole of them.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to proceed according to the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the private bills on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS.

The bill for the relief of Thomas H. Leggett, the bill for the relief of Ira Day of Vermont, and the bill for the relief of John W. Simonton, coming up for consideration, were postponed until next Friday.

ELIJAH J. WEED.

The Senate then proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to the consideration of the bill for the relief of the securities of Elijah J. Weed, late quartermaster of Marines, deceased, which was read a second time. It was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and provides that the accounting officers of the Treasury Department be authorized to reexamine and settle the accounts of Major Elijah J. Weed, late quartermaster of Marines, deceased, in conformity with the law and with usages of the Navy Department; provided, that the allowance made shall not exceed the balance now claimed by the Government from his sureties.

At the request of Mr. BORLAND, the report in the case was read; from which it appears that the subject was referred to the committee on the petition of John S. Devlin, administrator of the late Quartermaster Weed. Major Weed died in March, 1838, indebted to the Government, and the petitioner, as his administrator, seeks, as an offset to the balance of the claim, with the view to relieve his sureties, an allowance of one per cent. upon certain disbursements made by him between 1835 and the date of his death. He asks a reexamination of the accounts of the deceased officer for the purpose of having certain items, which were rejected on a former settling, now passed to his credit. In support of his claim for a percentage upon the disbursements, the memorialist alleges, that for some years naval officers disbursed appropriations for the marine corps and received a percentage therefor; that that was abandoned and the duty thrown upon the quartermasters; that they were allowed one per cent. upon the moneys disbursed; that that percentage was allowed Major Weed from 1832 to 1835, when it was refused under a proviso of the act of 1835, in relation to the Delaware breakwater, which proviso had been pronounced by the Attorney General to be permanent, under which opinion the Secretary of War abolished extra compensations, not authorized by law, to the officers of the Army; that this proviso was afterwards declared by the Supreme Court to be applicable only to appropriations made during the Congress at which the act was passed, but that they also decided that the order issued under an erroneous conception of the law was valid. He argues that the usages of the War Department do not regulate those of the Navy Department, which alone has the control of the marine corps. But the petitioner is mistaken in his allegation that the accounting officers of the Treasury withheld the percentage on the order of the head of the War Department. The facts in connection with the disallowance of this commission are stated by the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury. The marine corps, being but a small body, was not allowed a commissary on subsistence or purchases, but the Secretary of the Navy required the quartermaster to perform certain duties which would have belonged to such officers had they existed. He was also charged with the superintendence of the marine armory, for which he received $150 per annum; and for his services in regard to the subsistence he was allowed $30 a month, and on his purchases of marine clothing a commission of one per cent. This commission, however, was not granted until the year 1826 or 1827. On the 30th of June, 1834, an act was passed reorganizing the marine corps. The account of Quartermaster Weed, of the fourth quarter of 1834, for extra compensation as commissary of subsistence, for pay as superintendent of the armory, and for the commission of one per cent., were referred to the Secretary of the Navy, who refused to allow them, because he considered them as inadmissible under the act of June 30, 1834. It was not, therefore, under the order of the War Department that the allowance was refused by the accounting officers of the Treasury. The committee are clearly of the opinion that the accounting officers were bound to conform to the order of the head of the Department, and they, therefore, properly rejected the claim for percentage. The committee further express the opinion, that it would not be expedient at this time, after the lapse of eighteen years, to recommend to Congress to review the decision of the head of the Navy Department, made in the undoubted exercise of a discretionary power belonging to him. They are of the opinion that the claim for commissions from 1834 to the death of Major Weed should not be allowed. With regard to some other items that were rejected by the accounting officers, and which the petitioner asks may be settled upon just and equitable principles, the committee know no principles but those prescribed by law and the regulations of the Department upon which they can recommend their settlement. In this case, they believe that law is equity. They are unwilling to commit the accounts to the arbitrary and uncontrolled notions of equity and justice which the accounting officers of the Treasury may entertain; but believing that the estate of the deceased may be entitled to an allowance on some items which have been rejected, they report a bill for the relief the petitioner and recommend its passage.

Mr. BRADBURY. I have listened to the reading of the report, and concur in everything which I find stated in it. It declares that no allowance ought to be made for commissions on disbursements; but that equity may be promoted by opening these accounts for their adjustment. I propose, as an amendment, for the purpose of making the bill specific, that it may carry out the purpose indicated in the report of the committee, to add to the end of the bill the words, "nor shall any allowance be made for commissions on disbursements."

Mr. FISH. I am not aware that there can be any objection to that amendment; but it strikes me as wholly unnecessary. The provision which the committee have introduced, wherein it varies from bills previously reported on this subject, has been by striking out the authority given by these bills to accounting officers to settle upon principles of equity. In this bill the committee direct that the amount shall be settled in conformity with the law and regulations of the Navy Department. These usages and these regulations are set forth at length in the report which has been read, and upon which the claim for commission has already been rejected.

Mr. BRADBURY. It will not prejudice the bill in the least, and probably may facilitate its passage.

Mr. BORLAND. I shall vote against the amendment, because it is wholly unnecessary. I think the bill provides all that is necessary. Under the regulations of the Department, this very claim that this amendment proposes to execute, has been rejected. The regulations of the Department are recounted in the report. They are required to settle according to law and under the regulations of the Department, which it has been shown do exclude precisely such allowance as this amendment rejects.

Mr. BADGER. I think the amendment ought not to be adopted. It is an unnecessary amendment in one aspect; and may be mischievous in another. The object of the bill is to have the accounts settled in equity and justice. Now, there may be some technical rule or regulation in the form which will exclude a just and proper allowance.

The amendment was not agreed to. The bill was then reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

NANCY WRIGHT.

The bill for the relief of Nancy Wright was read a second time.

It provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall place upon the pension list the name of Nancy Wright, widow of James Wright, late engineer on board the United States steamer McLean, who died from disease contracted in the naval service of the United States, and pay her the same pension that she would have been entitled to receive had her late husband been commissioned as an engineer in the United States naval service; the pension to commence on the 23d day of December, 1850, and continue during her life.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and there being no amendment offered, it was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

ROBERT JEMISON AND BENJ. WILLIAMSON.

The bill for the relief of Robert Jemison and Benjamin Williamson was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Postmaster General to pay Robert Jemison and Benjamin Williamson the same amount of remuneration for carrying the United States mail during twenty-six weeks, in the year 1836, on route No. 2,696, from Selma to Elyton, Alabama, as the original contractors for said route would have been entitled to receive under the terms of their contract.

Mr. RUSK. This bill has passed the Senate two or three times, and it will save the time of the Senate, perhaps, if the reading of the report is omitted, as I can state briefly the substance of it. These parties were contractors for carrying the mail on a particular route. When the Creek war broke out, they were subjected to increased expense and service in carrying the mail; and they now apply to Congress to remunerate them for this extra service, as well as for service in carrying the mail on a short route, which they did in consequence of the failure on the part of the contractors to comply with their contract. Congress passed a law authorizing the payment of the claim for extra service, but the Postmaster General felt obliged, by the terms of the law, to restrict the payment to the extra services which were performed on their own route, in consequence of the Creek disturbances. Under that decision, they received nothing for the service on the other route.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

NATHANIEL KUYKENDALL.

A bill for the relief of Nathaniel Kuykendall was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill provides that the Postmaster General be authorized and directed to pay, from the revenues of the Post Office Department, to Nathaniel Kuykendall, the sum of $5,701 50, in full satisfaction of all claims on his part for extra services and expenses in carrying the mail on route No. 1932, from Romney to Clarksburg, in Virginia, for four years and a half, commencing in the year 1839, he having conveyed the mail in four-horse post-coaches and three trips a week, and having received pay only for carrying the mail in two-horse stages two trips a week; that sum being to compensate him for this additional service.

Mr. RUSK. I can, perhaps, state the circumstances of this case in fewer words than are contained in the report.

Mr. BADGER. There will be no objection to it. It is all right.

Mr. RUSK. I know that it is all right; the man has done the service, and I think he ought to be paid for it. However, as there may be objections, it may be as well to state that in this case there were three routes making a continuous line of stages. The bids were received to carry the mail in two-horse coaches and in four-horse coaches. This party, I believe, bid for both, but he got only the central route; and his bid was accepted for two-horse coaches. Other bids were made for four-horse coaches for the other portions of the route, and were accepted. Part of his contract was that he should carry all the passengers which came by way of either of the end routes; and from the number of passengers, and the weight of the mails, it was sometimes found that he could carry neither with a two-horse coach. Under these circumstances he used four-horse coaches and carried the mail during the whole length of time. Now, the others were entitled to and received pay for the higher grade of service, and he performed the same service, and ought to be paid at the same rate.

Mr. BAYARD. I regret to say that I cannot assent to the passage of this bill. It seems to me objectionable in principle. The ground on which I oppose the bill is this: the party contracted with the Post Office Department, or the managers of the mail service. After making that contract, and under the circumstances stated by the Senator from Texas, he made an application for an alteration of the contract, which the Department declined; and in defiance of that determination on the part of the Department, he chose to go on and carry passengers just as if he had made his contract for four-horse coaches. Now, I cannot consent to the principle which would thus be established—that where a contract is made with the Postmaster General, (who is the proper party to make such contracts,) and an application is made to change that contract, which he refuses to do, the party, on the application of citizens and others, goes on to perform his contract in a manner different from that implied by its terms. I say that, although such a violation of contract may in some instances be beneficial to the citizens of the neighborhood, the contractor, after the extent of his contract has been fully determined, should not come in and claim that compensation to which he would only be entitled if the Postmaster General had made an alteration. I think the principle involved here is an unsound one, and therefore I must vote against this bill.

Mr. PRATT. We have in this part of the Chamber the misfortune of not being able to hear the remarks of the Senator from Delaware, and very possibly he has stated objections to the passage of this bill which have occurred to my mind; but in consequence of his location, we have not heard his observations.

As I understand the explanation of my friend from Texas in reference to this bill, the case is this: Proposals were issued by the Post Office Department for carrying the mail on three routes which were continuous. Different proposals were made upon the different routes, and the Postmaster General granted the applications for the two routes at the termini for carrying the mail in four-horse post coaches; and each contractor was to carry all the passengers. A portion between the two extremes was left to a contractor who contracted to carry the mail and passengers in two-horse coaches. The party found it impracticable to carry out his contract with two-horse coaches, and was consequently obliged to put upon this intermediate route four-horse coaches, and the result is, that he now makes his application outside of his contract, to be paid for doing no service except that which he contracted to do at a stipulated price. If I understand my friend from Texas, it does appear to me that these parties are not entitled to the compensation which they ask.

Mr. RUSK. Perhaps it may be as well to read the report of the committee, since objections have been made to the passage of the bill. It has already passed the Senate two or three times, and been very fully discussed here on one or two occasions. But I will read the report of the committee, that the Senate may see what it is:

"The petitioner was a contractor in 1839 for carrying the mail on route No. 1,932, in Virginia, from Romney to Clarksburg, and carried the mail for four years and a half at a rate of compensation of $2,000 per annum, being the price stipulated to be paid for conveying the mail in two horse stages, two trips a week and back. But he actually carried the mail in four horse post coaches three trips a week and back, and in one day and a half, instead of two and a half days, which was the schedule under his contract. For the employment of four horse coaches, instead of two-horse stages, and for one additional trip weekly, and the increased speed, he claims an additional compensation, which he estimates at about $8,000 for the whole term of his contract. The facts that the petitioner carried the mail in four-horse post coaches, and that he made three trips a week, and with increased speed, are satisfactorily proved. It also appears that the additional horses and the additional trip increased the tolls on the route about fifty per cent., being nearly $500 per annum.

"This additional service was not expressly authorized by the Department, but the circumstances which induced him to perform it are such as he claims authorized a belief that he should be paid for it, or afford a reasonable ground of equity entitling him to compensation. These circumstances are as follow: At the lettings in 1839, the mail from Winchester to Parkersburg, on the Ohio river, consisting of three routes, was advertised for bids in two-horse stages and in four-horse coaches; and when the bids were considered, the Department accepted the proposals for four-horse service on the eastern and western divisions of the route; but on the middle division, for which the petitioner was the bidder, it accepted the proposals for two horse service; but at the same time expressly reserved the right to change it to four-horse service, and represented to the contractor that it would be so changed as soon as the revenues of the Department would admit of it. It was a part of the contract that the contractor was to convey with the mail the passengers who came in the stage conveying the mail, at the points of connection—that is, Romney and Clarksburg. The contract having been accepted for the lower grade of service in the middle division of the route only, the petitioner found that it would be difficult, if not impossible, for him to perform the same service, both in the conveyance of the mail and passengers, with two horses which the contractors on the east and west ends of the route would perform with four horses. Some of the postmasters and citizens on the route, perceiving his difficulty, interested themselves in the matter, and endeavored to relieve him from the embarrassments of his contract. At the request of the citizens of Marietta, the postmaster of that place went with the petitioner to Washington to see the Postmaster General on the subject, before the time for commencing the service, to induce him to order four-horse service, in conformity with the other divisions of the route. The Postmaster General declined then to order the higher grade of service, but gave encouragement that it might be ordered soon.

"Under these circumstances, and with the advice of the citizens on the route, the petitioner was induced to stock the route for four-horse coach service, and to commence carrying the mail in that way, expecting soon to receive authority for this change in his service. He continued to transport the mail in four-horse coaches, and to make three instead of two trips a week during the whole term of his contract, which was known to the Department; but it did not order the higher grade of service, nor notify the contractor that he must not expect to be paid for the additional service he was rendering. Since the expiration of the petitioner's contract, the whole of this route has been let for four-horse coach service, whilst the mails are not increased beyond what they were during the preceding contract.

"The question in the case seems to be, whether the circumstances under which this additional service was performed were such as to afford a reasonable ground of equity for compensating the petitioner for the same. And the committee are of opinion that they do afford such equitable ground, and they therefore report a bill for his relief. But they do not adopt, as the rate of compensation, the actual charges claimed by the petitioner, but the difference between the sum he received and the sum since paid for the higher grade of service, with an additional trip weekly, on the same route. This is $1,267 per annum, making for the four years and a half the sum of $5,701 50, which they think ought to be paid to the petitioner, and they report a bill accordingly."

Now, sir, if that report does not show a clear case of equity, it is difficult for me to conceive what would do it. I do not design to go into certain circumstances which are in the testimony with regard to the management of the mails about the time this contract was made. Here is a contract made on the two ends of the continuous line, for carrying the same mail and the same passengers; and the intermediate route was accepted at a lower grade of service, and the extreme ones at a higher grade.

Mr. BADGER. Will my friend from Texas permit me to ask whether this bill was reported unanimously by the committee?

Mr. RUSK. It was; and it has passed the Senate two or three times.

Mr. BAYARD. It is said that the Postmaster General reserved the right to change the contract; but he did not so change it, representing however that it would be so changed. Now, I would ask the Senator from Texas whether the evidence of that representation arises from the ex parte affidavit of the individual who contracted or from any written acknowledgment of the proper officer of the Government?

Mr. RUSK. It came from the gentleman who comes here laboring under these difficulties. The other parties at each end of the road had four-horse coaches, and the Postmaster General told him that he would so arrange the line that he should have no more trouble among the passengers.

Mr. BAYARD. This was at the time the contract was made?

Mr. RUSK. No, sir; afterwards.

Mr. BAYARD. I understood that the statement was made at the time this contract was made. The report says:

"At the lettings in 1839, the mail from Winchester to Parkersburg, on the Ohio river, consisting of three routes, was advertised for bids in two horse stages and in four-horse coaches; and when the bids were considered, the Department accepted the proposal for four-horse service on the eastern and western divisions of the route; but on the middle division, for which the petitioner was the bidder, it accepted the proposals for two-horse service; but at the same time expressly reserved the right to change it to four-horse service, and represented to the contractor that it would be so changed as soon as the revenues of the Department would admit of it. It was a part of the contract that the contractor was to convey with the mail the passengers who came in the stage conveying the mail, at the points of connection—that is, Romney and Clarksburg. The contract having been accepted for the lower grade of service in the middle division of the route only, the petitioner found that it would be difficult, if not impossible, for him to perform the same service, both in the conveyance of the mail and passengers with two horses, which the contractors on the east and west ends of the route would perform with four horses. Some of the postmasters and citizens on the route, perceiving his difficulty, interested themselves in the matter, and endeavored to relieve him from the embarrassments of his contract. At the request of the citizens of Marietta, the postmaster of that place went with the petitioner to Washington to see the Postmaster General on the subject, before the time for commencing the service, to induce him to order four-horse service, in conformity with the other divisions of the route. The Postmaster General declined then to order the higher grade of service, but gave encouragement that it might be ordered soon."

Now, I presume that there is no written evidence of any such encouragement held out. I would ask if there is any letter from the Department giving that encouragement to the petitioner. If not, I would be unwilling that any verbal declaration being made by a witness should go to show that the contract should be different. I think the principle is a dangerous one, and I am therefore opposed to it.

Nor, sir, can I assent to the doctrines advanced by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina—that because a bill has been reported by a committee we should pass it quiescently and without investigation. Wherever I can see a principle in a bill which is wrong, I shall go into an investigation of the matter, and shall at all times feel it my duty to oppose such a measure.

Mr. BADGER. I did not intend to lay down any principle on this subject at all. I merely meant to state a rule by which I should regulate my own conduct. Every other gentleman will regulate himself by his own notions; but when a case of a private bill comes up which has been reported unanimously by the committee in favor of granting relief to the claimant, and particularly when, in addition to that fact, on two former occasions, the Senate have passed bills in conformity with that report, I, for one, will not undertake to enter into any reinvestigation of the matter.

My friend from Delaware may have (and no doubt justly) a higher confidence in his capacity to enter into an examination of the decisions of a committee or of the Senate than I can have, and having that confidence, it is all right and proper that he should investigate the matter; but I, not having that confidence that I can better investigate the subject than the committee or the Senate, and this being a private claim, I certainly cannot put my vote against a bill which comes here thus recommended to me.

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator from North Carolina is the best judge of his own course of action regarding matters coming before this body, and I must be the judge of what is best in my own case.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly. That is right.

Mr. BAYARD. Though he may suppose it is somewhat presumptuous in me to question anterior decisions of the Senate, because a bill has formerly been passed, I must say that, in my judgment, if the views of the Senator were carried out, the corruptions that would exist in this Government would be limitless.

Mr. BADGER. Very likely they might. We have heard a great deal about these corruptions in past times, but take it altogether, I think things have gone on pretty well, and these bills have been comfortably got along with.

Mr. MASON. This is a claim brought by a man whom I have known for many years, and a more respectable, worthy, and honest man cannot be found. He contracted for several years to carry the mail, and his failure to receive the compensation due to him for the service has now broken him down, and he is a bankrupt. I do not mean to adduce this as adding to the merit of the case, but I do not doubt the fact will commend itself to the kindly feelings of Senators generally, and especially of my friend from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

Now, as one of a committee who investigated this claim some years ago, and because of the personal interest I took in this gentleman, I examined the subject with great care, and I am prepared to say this to the Senate, that this service was undertaken by Mr. Kuykendall of carrying the mail in four-horse coaches and an increased number of times per week in lieu of the two-horse coaches in compliance with his original contract, on the expectation, if not a direct promise derived from the Postmaster General, that when the improved condition of the revenues of the Post Office Department would admit of it, he would ratify what he had undertaken to do, and pay him accordingly. The service was undertaken because the necessities of that line required it, and because of the just expectation derived from his intercourse with the Postmaster General, that when the revenues would allow it, he would be paid. Here is the letter, which I think will answer the Senator from Delaware. It is from the Postmaster General, and is addressed to the Hon. George W. Hopkins, then chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in the House of Representatives. He says:

"But such was the difference on the route in question, that the two-horse stage service was accepted, with a reservation that the higher service might be ordered if the Department should think proper. The expenditures of the Department were at that time over its income, and economy was the sole consideration which induced the acceptance of the stage service, with the intention freely expressed to Mr. Kuykendall to order the higher service whenever the means of the Department would authorize it.

"Mr. Kuykendall was then running four-horse coaches, and it was no doubt in anticipation of such an order that he continued that kind of service, and ran three times a week when he was bound to run but twice.

"The anticipated improvement in the revenue did not occur, and the higher service was never ordered; and I have no doubt that Mr. Kuykendall had a hard time of it."

Now, I submit to the Senator who reported this bill from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, whether this is not a case which addresses itself to the equity of the National Legislature. This man has expended his money in the public service, and with a just expectation that the service he was performing would be recognized by the Department for which it was done, the fact being substantiated by this letter. And I submit, also, in addition to what has been said with more force by the Senator from North Carolina, that with respect to this bill, so far as the facts are concerned, we may safely rely upon the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. BORLAND. I agree with the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. MASON] and the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] with regard to the confidence that should be placed in the report of a committee, as to the facts in the case; and, in general, I have great confidence in the opinions of a committee. But the question raised by the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] did not relate at all to the facts in the case, or the opinions which may be expressed, but to the principle upon which the allowance is proposed to be given. This letter, as I understand, was written in 1844, years after the transaction to which it relates had taken place, and when the Postmaster General had gone out of the Post Office Department. It is, then, the letter of a private individual in relation to a certain transaction which had occurred long before, and was obtained with the intention of having it used to sustain this claim, and is a mere statement of the transaction as nearly as he could recollect it.

It seems to me, in looking at this matter in respect to Mr. Kuykendall, that it suggests, I will not say the corruption, but I will say the impropriety of the recognition of such a transaction by Congress. An advertisement is put in the public newspapers, and individuals are induced to come forward and take contracts on the lowest terms. An individual comes forward with others, and makes a bid much lower than any one can afford to do the service, and of course he excludes all competition, and gets the contract. After he has done it, if we admit the power of the Department to make him an extra allowance for extra service, we put it in the power of the Department to do as was done in years past, when extra allowance was given to the postmasters throughout the country. We know what a complaint there was of the corruption which crept into the administration of the Post Office Department many years since, when extra allowances were made to contractors, to double the amount originally contracted, so that fortunes were made. Suspicions attached to the administration of the Post Office Department, and, consequently, certain officers were obliged to leave their offices. Whether these suspicions were well founded or not, I will not pretend to say. I mention it, to show that corruptions were supposed to have crept into that Department. Such was the general public sentiment at that time, and a controlling one, owing to the discretion exercised by the Department to change the whole character of a contract and make an increased allowance.

Although this is not precisely of the same character, it involves the same principle. It puts up to the lowest bidder contracts for doing certain public service. All competition is excluded, if you admit that the Postmaster General can have a private understanding with any contractor; for he can change the contract to suit his convenience. I do not doubt that Mr. Kuykendall is a very correct sort of a man; but that does not change the principle in this case at all.

Sir, if this can be allowed, we shall have changes in the mail contracts every day of the year. We recognize the discretion of the Postmaster General, and the contractors will act upon that, of course. If this principle be once recognized in these claims for extra allowance, I do not see how we are to reject these claims in future cases, which may come before us on precisely the same ground. Sir, there has scarcely been a month which I have sat here without having had applications from citizens of my State, asking for an increase in the mail service. They set forth that the interests of the country require it. And what am I told when I make this request? I am told that the means of the country will not allow it. We are told that parties must carry out their contracts; that the Department has no discretion, and that the citizens must submit to the inconvenience. The rule of the Department, I think, is a correct one, although I know that my constituents have suffered in consequence. Where increased service is asked upon any route, the regulation of the Department is this: that the postmasters at the ends of the routes are required to weigh the mail matter; and if it exceeds a certain weight, the weight calculated upon at the time the contract was made, then the increased service is allowed and paid for. I think that that is a proper regulation; and I presume it was the regulation at the time that Kuykendall entered into his contract. All other portions of the country, and all other contractors being required to conform to that regulation, I do not think it proper to make an exception in this case; because, if you do, you will have the Senate filled with applications from all parts of the Union—many of them equally meritorious with this case, however meritorious it may be.

Mr. RUSK. I have never known, during my short term of service here, as well an established case as this fail to receive the favorable consideration of this Senate—to pay what is justly and equitably due to an individual. I admit that we should proceed with very great caution in the establishment of a principle to govern a future Congress, or anything of that sort. But these applications are not determined by law; because, if a law existed to determine them, they would not be before us. They come before us, and are applications to our discretion and sense of justice in the matter. Now, sir, the question arises here, will the United States receive service which was necessary to itself, which was reasonable, and which the Postmaster General himself encouraged to be made, with the view that we should pay for it, and then avail itself of a technicality to escape the payment of it—or will it pay what every man will seat once ought to be paid? What would have been the consequence, if this individual had not put on the four-horse coaches, and run his stages three times a week? Why the mails of the United States would have been delayed; and every man who used those mails would have been delayed, and thrown over in his correspondence. Every passenger going there would have had to do it at an increased expense, and be detained from his business in consequence of this interruption. This man then, by his increased service has benefited the Government, and benefited the public. He was encouraged to perform this service by the Postmaster General. He broke himself in doing so; and he now asks Congress whether they will pay him, or try to exonerate themselves from the payment. I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. BAYARD. I confess I cannot perceive the equity of this case, according to my ideas of equity. Grounds of compassion are too loose as ideas of equity, in my judgment. Acting here as Representatives, we have no right to disburse the funds of the nation as if we were dealing with our own private funds, on motives addressed to our feelings. We must act upon our judgment in relation to claims against the Government. The danger which I think grows out of legislation on cases of this kind, arises out of this: our laws require that the contracts shall be made in writing by the Postmaster General, (previous notice having been given,) and with the lowest bidder. When the contract is made, and after the service has been performed, after a lapse of eleven years, are we to suffer a party to come forward and, on ex parte testimony, to interpolate practically into that contract a private understanding with the Postmaster General, and say that the Government is bound to pay it? This individual did nothing more than by the terms of the contract he was bound to do, as regards the United States. The terms of the contract bound him to carry the mails of the United States, and the passengers on the route, in two-horse post coaches. If he pleased to extend the power for the performance of the duty, he had a right to do so; but he was bound to perform the duty, and he would have lost his contract, and been liable to forfeiture for a violation of it, if he had not gone on and performed the service. The danger is, that you ask now a violation of our own law, (and there is no use in the law if cases of this kind can be brought up, and made exceptions to it after this lapse of time,) which guards against the exercise of discretion on the part of the Postmaster General, when it is not evidenced in the written contract of the party. You require that the Postmaster General shall give a contract to the lowest bidder; and you seek now, in defiance of the contract, to interpolate a private understanding, or a private expectation held out to him. I consider this is a dangerous principle, and one that ought not to be tolerated, however hard it may be on the party. Under the particular circumstances stated by the Senator from Virginia, I cannot recognize the principle of equity of the case, unless you establish to my satisfaction that there was a fraudulent collusion between some party and the officer, for the purpose of ruining this individual or taking advantage of him. No such intimation is made—no such evidence exists; and therefore I cannot see any equity in the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

WILLIAM A. CHRISTIAN.

The bill for the relief of William A. Christian was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to pursuer William A. Christian, in the settlement of his accounts, the sum of $2,643 74, being the amount disallowed him in a former settlement of his accounts, for payments to warrant officers of the United States steam-ship Princeton.

Mr. BRODHEAD called for the reading of the report, and it was read accordingly.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

G. THOMAS HOWARD.

The bill for the relief of G. Thomas Howard was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit and settle the claim of G. Thomas Howard, for compensation and traveling expenses as bearer of dispatches from Texas to Washington city in the year 1845, and to allow him compensation, at the rate of $6 per day, for a period not exceeding twenty-five days, and traveling expenses at the rate of 10 cents per mile, from Austin, Texas, to Washington city, computing the distance according to the most usually traveled route.

Mr. BAYARD. Is there any report in the case? If there is, I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT. It was reported by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. NORRIS,] but there is no written report.

Mr. PRATT. As the Senator who reported the bill is not in his place, I would suggest the propriety of laying it over.

The PRESIDENT. There is a letter from the Secretary of State on the subject.

Mr. BADGER. I would like to hear it read.

The letter was read accordingly. It states that there is no precedent on the files of the Department to determine the reasonableness of Mr. Howard's claim; and that the compensation usually allowed to bearers of dispatches to and from countries, is $6 dollars per day, and all other necessary traveling expenses.

Mr. BAYARD. Unless there is some report in relation to the circumstances of this case, I would prefer that it should lie over. The compensation of a bearer of dispatches, I believe, is a matter of useless patronage. I do not think it is always paid. I have certainly known cases where the office of bearer of dispatches was a mere nominal one; and surely it is an almost entirely useless one. I move to postpone the further consideration of the bill until Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAMS, STAPLES, & WILLIAMS.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Williams, Staples, & Williams. It authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Williams, Staples, & Williams, of the city of Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, a sum not exceeding $1,156 50, being the amount of duties paid by them on one hundred and twenty-one hogsheads of sugars which were destroyed by fire while in the public store, at the city of Norfolk, on the 14th of June, 1848; which sugars were imported by them into the port of Norfolk on or about the 6th of June, 1848.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be read a third time, and was read a third time and passed.

JAMES FERGUSON.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of James Ferguson, surviving partner of the firm of Ferguson & Milhado. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James Ferguson, surviving partner of the late firm of Ferguson & Milhado, of the city of Norfolk, Virginia, a sum not exceeding $735 60, being the amount alleged to have been paid by them in discharge of their bond given to the United States, dated May 22, 1848, for duties on one hundred and forty-two hogsheads of molasses which were destroyed by fire in the public store on the 14th day of June, 1848.

It was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be read a third time, and, being read the third time, was passed.

WILLIAM WOODBRIDGE—HENRY CHIPMAN.

The bill to provide compensation to William Woodbridge and Henry Chipman, for adjusting titles to lands in Michigan, and for other purposes, was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William Woodbridge and Henry Chipman, late judges of the United States for the Territory of Michigan, at the rate of $500 each per annum, for services in ascertaining, adjusting, and settling claims to land, and performing other duties, in conformity with the acts of April 21, 1826, and May 28, 1830.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

SARAH FLINN.

The bill for the relief of Sarah Flinn was read the second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Sarah Flinn $80, for supplies furnished by her to Captain William Rowell's company of Florida Mounted Militia, while in the service of the United States, on the 24th day of March, 1839.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

MAISON ROUGE GRANT.

On the motion of Mr. DOWNS, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill to grant the right of preemption to settlers on the public land known as the Maison Rouge Grant. It provides that every person, being the head of a family, or widow, or single man, over the age of twenty-one years, who, prior to January 27th, 1851, was an actual settler on the public land known as the Maison Rouge Grant, in the State of Louisiana, and resided thereon on that day, or the heirs and legal representatives of such person, shall be entitled to enter land at the proper land office, in legal subdivisions, not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres (to include the residence and improvements of the settler) at the minimum price of such lands, on the same terms and conditions and under the same limitations as are prescribed in the act "to grant the right of preemption to certain purchasers and settlers on the Maison Rouge Grant, in the event of the final adjudication of the title in favor of the United States," approved January 27th, 1851.

Mr. DOWNS. I have an amendment which I wish to offer. It is to add, at the end of the bill, these words:

And that the provisions of the third section of said act be, and the same are hereby, extended to the settlers on the Bastrop Grant, in the same land district as the Maison Rouge Grant.

These two grants are exactly similarly situated. Preemption rights have been extended to settlers on the Bastrop Grant, and I want now to extend to them the provisions of the 3d section of the act of 27th January, 1851, which describes the manner of proceeding when there are two or more settlers on the same quarter section. That provision of the act of 1851 is in these words:

"That if the residences and improvements of two or more persons, entitled to preemption as aforesaid, shall be found on any one of the smallest legal subdivisions of the public lands, the same may be entered jointly by the parties, in order that they may secure and divide the same, according to their several rights; and in default of one or more of the parties taking the proper steps within the time prescribed to secure the benefit of this act, it shall be lawful for any one of the parties of this class to make the entry of the whole of such legal subdivision for his sole benefit."

Mr. FELCH. I would like to inquire from what committee this bill comes?

The PRESIDENT. It was introduced by unanimous consent by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. DOWNS], and is now reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. DOWNS. I will give a word of explanation of the merits of this bill. At the last Congress a bill was passed giving the right of preemption to the purchasers and settlers who had purchased from the former claimants on the Maison Rouge Grant. It was intended to apply to those who had settled merely, as well as to those who had purchased of the original claimants. But the Land Office had construed that law so as to exclude that portion of settlers who had no written title from the former claimant. I understood, at the time that bill was passed, that by its operation, as soon as the grant should be declared to be public land, the rights of preemption would accrue to all settlers; but the Land Office decided otherwise. There is a provision in the act of 1841 that preemptions shall not accrue to any reserved lands; and therefore, though many of those persons have lived on this land for a number of years, the Land Office has decided that their settlement amounts to nothing, because this grant was construed to be reserved land. This bill now is to place them upon precisely the same footing as those who purchased from the original claimants, and therefore obtained preemption rights. This is merely to grant what was intended by the act as it originally passed, but was not embraced in it from a misconception, as I conceive, of the law.

Mr. BAYARD. I would ask the Senator from Louisiana, whether the amendment he has proposed does not extend the right of preemption to settlers on public land other than that known as the Maison Rouge Grant.

Mr. DOWNS. To settlers on another grant similarly situated.

Mr. BAYARD. The proposition contained in the amendment has not been referred to any committee, and of course not reported upon. It extends to other lands than those mentioned in the original bill.

Mr. DOWNS. It contains precisely the same principle.

Mr. BAYARD. But it is really a new subject, which has never gone to a committee, and has never been reported upon.

Mr. DOWNS. There are two Spanish grants in the same neighborhood, of the same date—the Bastrop, and Maison Rouge Grant. The bill specifically applies to the Maison Rouge Grant. The amendment is to extend to the Bastrop Grant a provision which prevails among settlers on the Maison Rouge Grant. It does not affect the United States at all. Its object is to enable parties to settle controversies, to enable them to divide legal subdivisions of land to which they may become entitled. There is no necessity to send it to a separate committee, because it involves exactly the same principle.

Mr. FELCH. I wish to inquire further of the Senator who reported this bill, whether the preemption rights granted by it are precisely the same as those granted under the general law relative to preemption rights; whether the same oath is required of persons who claim them, and the same proofs and testimony to be introduced before the proper officer, in order to enable them to avail themselves of the benefit of the law?

Mr. DOWNS. As I understand it, the same provisions are required. This is only to extend to those settlers without title, the same privilege which was conferred upon others by the act passed at the last session of Congress. I have made the motion to embrace this provision of the bill, because I thought, by the operation of the law and the construction which has been placed on it by the land office, a certain class of persons had been excluded, to whom nobody objects, to whom the land office does not object, and who are everywhere supposed to have a perfect right to this preemption. It is simply to supply an omission of the law passed at the last session.

The amendment was agreed to; the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

DAVID OSBORN.

The bill for the relief of David Osborn was read a second time, and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to David Osborn $220 40, for supplies furnished by him to Captain William Rowell's company of Florida mounted militia, while in the service of the United States, on the 17th of April, 1839.

It was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

THOMAS D. JENNINGS.

The bill for the relief of Thomas D. Jennings was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes Thomas D. Jennings, of Florida, to enter, at the minimum price of public lands, a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, embracing the improvement on which his late father, Lawrence D. Jennings, resided before his death, on due proof being presented to the register of the proper land office, that he would have been entitled to a preemption, but for the removal of the family after the death of the father.

It was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

JOHN McREYNOLDS.

The bill for the relief of John McReynolds, of Detroit, in the State of Michigan, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the payment of $1,036 86 to John McReynolds, of Detroit, Michigan, for expenses incurred by him in the commencement of the erection of a light-house on Beaver Island, after which he was directed to erect said light-house in another place.

It was reported without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

SAMUEL BRAY.

The bill for the relief of Samuel Bray was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Samuel Bray, keeper of the Dog Island light-house, such amount, not exceeding $500, as may, upon satisfactory proof exhibited and produced by Samuel Bray, cover the losses by him suffered, while keeper of said light-house, during the gale of 23d and 24th of August, 1851.

It was reported without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

THOMAS RHODES.

The bill for the relief of Thomas Rhodes was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Thomas Rhodes the sum of $3,175 11, in full satisfaction for the expenses incurred by him in opening and constructing a road from Mobile, in Alabama, to Pascagoula Bay, for the transportation of the mail, in the year 1828, in pursuance of an implied authority and contract from the Postmaster General.

Mr. RHETT. I should like to hear some explanation of that bill from the Senator who reported it.

Mr. SOULE. This bill has been several times before the Senate, reported upon favorably, and acted upon. It comes again before us, on account of its never having been reached in its order in the House of Representatives. There have been several reports in its favor. One of them may be taken up and read, and it will explain the situation in which the committee found themselves on investigating this claim. It is one which pleads loudly for justice, and requires at our hands that we should act upon it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think this is an admirable bill, and one which ought to pass. It is the first affirmation which I ever recollect having seen here of the doctrine of the right of making roads to carry the mails. I think it is an admirable bill.

The bill was reported without amendment, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

PHILIP MILLER.

The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill from the House of Representatives for the relief of Philip Miller. It requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Philip Miller, of Kentucky, on the roll of invalid pensioners, at the rate of $8 per month during his natural life—to commence from and after the 1st of May, 1848.

It was reported without amendment, ordered to be read a third time, and being read a third time, was passed.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, WASHINGTON.

The bill for the relief of St. John's Church, in the city of Washington; which was reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia, was read a second time; and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the lot of ground now used as a burial ground by said church, occupying square No. 276, situated near the northern limits of the city, and which the late President Madison permitted the said church to occupy for said purpose, be granted in fee-simple to the church, and that the Commissioner of Public Buildings be authorized and required to convey said lot to said church by a proper deed, as evidence of this grant; and also that the $200 heretofore paid by the church be repaid to the rector for the use of the church, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BORLAND. Is there any report in the case?

The PRESIDENT. There is not. There is nothing but the petition. The bill was reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia, by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS], not now in his seat.

Mr. BAYARD. Unless some reasons be given for making the grant of $200 to the church, I move to strike out that portion of the bill. But as the Senator who reported it is not present, I move to postpone its further consideration until next Friday.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH H. D. BOWMAR.

The bill for the relief of Joseph H. D. Bowmar, reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, was read a second time; and the Senate proceeded to consider it as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that a patent shall be granted to the said Bowmar, of Carroll parish, Louisiana, for the lot or fractional section No. 27, in township 19, and range 3 east, in the district of lands north of Red river, subject to entry and sale at Washita, in the State of Louisiana, containing 145 13-100 acres, on the final settlement of certificate No. 9977, issued to said Bowmar May 16, 1849, on the payment of purchase money on said land; and that so much of section 2, of the act of March 3, 1849, entitled "An act for the relief of Thomas J. Carson," as confirms the selection made by the Secretary of the Treasury of said lot No. 27, for the use of public schools, be repealed; provided, that nothing in the present act shall be so construed as to reduce the quantity of lands to which said township is entitled by law.

On the request of Mr. ATCHISON the report was read; from which it appears that the memorialist settled on the lot stated, and became entitled to a preemption in consequence thereof. That lot having been improperly selected for school purposes, upon an appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury, the selection was revoked, and on January 4, 1849, the memorialist was permitted to enter his preemption. Before the entry was actually made, however, Congress, in ignorance of the rights of the memorialist, passed an act for the relief of Thomas J. Carson, by which he, Carson, was permitted to enter the sixteenth section, and lot twenty-seven was reserved for school purposes. The proper officers, in the mean time, before the act of Congress was known to them, permitted the memorialist to enter his preemption, and granted the certificate on May 16, 1849. With the obstacles arising from the act of Congress for the benefit of said Carson, a patent is refused to the memorialist. Under the circumstances of the case, and with the concurrence of the inhabitants of the township, the committee are of the opinion that relief should be granted to the memorialist, and report a bill for that purpose. The proviso is added to secure the right of the township to the quantity of land which the law allows it.

Mr. ATCHISON. I do not know whether, upon a close examination of the matter, I would have any objection to this bill or not. But, sir, it appears to be somewhat complicated, and for the purpose of having an opportunity to examine it, I propose that it be permitted to lie over.

Mr. DOWNS. I can explain it now.

Mr. ATCHISON. But I would rather examine the report. I think we have done enough for Louisiana to-day, in the way of preemption rights. I doubt whether Congress, having once vested a right by law in the township, can now, by repealing that law, divest the township of any right; and if you do that, and authorize or require the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or the President, to issue a patent to this individual to this land, whether or not he would not have just claim against the Government for the value of the land. I move that the consideration of the bill be postponed until next Friday.

Mr. BADGER. I will vote cheerfully for the postponement, if my friend who makes the motion will pledge himself that between now and next Friday he will examine the case. If he will not, I think it is unfair to move the postponement.

Mr. DOWNS. I hope the postponement will not take place. This is an exceedingly simple case. There is a provision of law that a certain amount of land, in each township, shall be set apart for public schools. Instructions were issued to the land officers in Louisiana, many years ago, to make the selections. It happened that in some townships more was reserved than was necessary. The authority has been exercised by the Secretary of the Treasury, when the matter was under his control, and by the Secretary of the Interior, since the organization of that Department, when this was ascertained to be the case, to relieve the surplus from reservation, and allow entries to be made. In a case of this kind, Bowmar made application to be allowed to enter this lot, and on a hearing of the whole case, Mr. Walker decided that he had a right to do so, because the township had enough besides. But, in the meantime, Congress, knowing nothing about it, and a claim pending here for Carson to be allowed to make his entry on this same lot, they passed a law authorizing him to make such an entry. If the committee had known these facts when Carson's case was before them, they would not have reported in his favor. It is now clear that the proper title belongs to Bowmar, and it is necessary to repeal that portion of the act referred to in the bill. As to the observation of the Senator from Missouri, that it is not competent for Congress to take back any of these school lands, they do it always, with the consent of the township. It has been the practice for twenty years. I disapprove of it. I think it is wrong; but it has been acted on from time to time, with the consent of the township, and it is now too late to make that objection. But it does not arise in this case, because the school selection had actually been made from this section by the Secretary of the Treasury; and it is not now a question between the petitioner and the United States, but a question between Carson and Bowmar.

Mr. PRATT. I regret to interfere in this matter; but if I understand the question, there is an important principle involved in it. The contest is not between the township and the individual grantee, but between two individual grantees—Carson and Bowmar. Now, the Supreme Court have decided, in a case which I have had occasion recently to examine, that wherever a party is entitled to a preemption and has made a claim to make an entry to the land, that inchoate preemption confers such a right as cannot be interfered with by any subsequent action of Congress. Here, if I understand correctly, by one act of Congress, the right to enter land was given to a man by the name of Carson. Another man, by the name of Bowmar, claims a prior right of preemption. If he possesses that prior right, under the decision of the Supreme Court, the judicial tribunals of the country are open to him. It will be for those tribunals, and those alone, to decide between the relative rights of these individuals. I do not think it is the province of the Senate of the United States, in any case, to act judicially. When there are individual rights legally existing, when the tribunals of the country are open for decisions upon these rights, we are not the proper tribunal to take them in hand; nor do we possess the constitutional power, in my humble judgment, to enter upon such a question. The case which is now presented is precisely the one which I have stated. If I understand it correctly, I do not think the bill ought to pass. I think the contest between these two individuals should be carried on in the tribunals of the country, where it could properly be decided as to their rights.

Mr. DOWNS. There is no doubt that the doctrine of the gentleman is precisely correct. I agree with him in every particular, and it is conclusive. The position which he takes proves that this bill ought to pass, and that it must pass. He says that Congress cannot divest these preemption rights. That is the position of Mr. Bowmar here. He had a preemption right; he was permitted to enter it, and got his certificate. Not only had he a right, but it was actually vested in him by the initiatory title of the certificate issued to him. The Secretary of the Treasury, on a full hearing of the case, put him in possession of it; but Congress, not knowing anything of this at the time when Carson presented his application, passed a law authorizing Carson to enter the land. If Congress could not divest Bowmar, who not only had his title but had made his entry, it is perfectly conclusive that this bill ought to pass; not to divest the title, but to secure to this man a title which was vested in him. I hope the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] will join me in supporting this bill. I hope he is perfectly satisfied with it.

Mr. ATCHISON. I think the Senator from Louisiana has shown, conclusively, that this is a question between Carson and Bowmar. Well, let the courts decide that question. Let them decide who has the title of the land. Let them decide whether the law of Congress divesting Bowmar, or attempting to divest him, and to invest Carson, should be sustained; or whether the preemption law, under which Bowmar claims, should sustain him. Now, this is the question. From the gentleman's own showing, Congress has nothing to do with it. But I prefer to have an opportunity of examining it. I make no pledges about it. I will not pledge myself either to read the bill or the report. Sometimes I do read the bills, and sometimes I read the reports; and I think now I will do so in this matter, but I will not pledge myself. As the Senator from Louisiana has alluded to the Senator from Kentucky, I am utterly astonished that he has not interposed and examined this matter. Why, sir, it may affect somewhat the distributive share of the State of Kentucky, under his proposition to distribute the public domain. I trust that the vote will be taken on the postponement. The Senate is very thin, and I dislike to call for the yeas and nays. If I should do so, probably a quorum would not answer.

Mr. DOWNS. The argument of the Senators from Maryland and Missouri proves that this bill ought to pass. Congress have already interfered. As it is, they have given the right to enter to Carson, and he will get the patent unless this bill is passed, while, according to their doctrine, he is not entitled to it. I want this act to pass, to give the other man a patent. There is a provision in the bill that these two individuals shall fight out the contest. The passage of the bill will not interfere with any other person. I hope, if the gentlemen want to see a fair fight, they will vote for the bill.

Mr. ATCHISON. This man Bowmar claims under a preemption law, either of 1838 or 1841, or of a prior year. Carson claims under an act of Congress, vesting him directly with the title to this land. The Senator from Louisiana tells me that Bowmar proved his preemption, deposited his money, and obtained a certificate—the initiatory to a title. Then Congress, without knowing anything about it, upon Carson's petition, passed a law vesting in him the right to this land. The Senator says, that unless we interpose by this bill, Carson will obtain a patent. What advantage will that patent be in the courts of Louisiana, or in the courts of any other State of this Union, to Carson? I presume none. I do not know that this bill will be of any disadvantage to the United States; but it may be to Carson. These individuals now stand upon the same platform. Let them go before the courts of Louisiana, and let their title be decided by the courts. I renew the motion to postpone.

The motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN CEMETERY IN MEXICO.

By unanimous consent, the bill appropriating a sum of money for the interment of officers and soldiers, who died in Mexico, in the American Cemetery, near the city of Mexico, was taken up, read a third time, and passed.

REPORT FROM A COMMITTEE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. UNDERWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported various amendments to a bill which had been referred to that committee, providing for the survey of lands in California.

The amendments were ordered to be printed, and then, on motion, the Senate adjourned until Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 12, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. L. F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. GOODENOW. Mr. Speaker, my name is not recorded upon the vote laying upon the table the resolution of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. STANLEY] to close debate on the homestead bill. I voted in the negative upon that proposition, and ask that the Journal may be so corrected.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be corrected, as suggested by the gentleman, unless objected to.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move to suspend the rules, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with the view of taking up the special order—the bill to authorize the continuance of the work on the Capitol.

CONTESTED ELECTION FROM NEW MEXICO.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I gave notice yesterday to the honorable gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] that if he did not bring up the question of privilege from New Mexico, in reference to the contest of my seat, I should do so. I regret extremely he is not in his place. I would like very much to have him in his place before I go on. I cannot stand here and permit such charges as have been preferred against the honorable gentleman who fills the executive chair in New Mexico to go uncontradicted any longer. I have given the gentleman from Missouri, (who I regret is not in his seat,) an opportunity to be here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico moves to proceed to the consideration of the petition presented by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] contesting the seat of the Delegate from New Mexico.

Mr. OLDS. Was not that petition withdrawn? The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that it was withdrawn. The pending question was to refer to the Committee of Elections, and to print.

Mr. HALL. My colleague is not in his place this morning. I do not know what keeps him away.

A MEMBER. Here he is. He has just come in. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] when this petition was introduced by him, was upon the floor proceeding to submit a few remarks in reference to the question involved. Does the gentleman from New Mexico insist upon occupying the floor upon this question?

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I insist that the question be taken up. I cannot consent that the distinguished friend of mine shall be subjected to the odium of such charges any longer. I call upon the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] to call up that question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist upon my motion. The SPEAKER. It is competent for the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—that motion having been submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN.] The question submitted by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PHELPS,] it is true, is a privileged question, but the House may proceed to other business.

Mr. POLK. Does the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. WEIGHTMAN] desire to make a personal explanation? I will consult his wishes upon that subject, so far as my vote is concerned.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I do not desire to make any explanation connected with myself personally, or in regard to the petition which is offered to be referred to the Committee of Elections. I have no manner of objection to that; but with it are connected charges of corruption against the distinguished gentleman who is now filling the executive chair in New Mexico.

Mr. POLK. I wish to know if it is the desire of the gentleman to do so now? I would be willing to assist him in doing it.

Mr. WEIGHTMAN. I desire it now. The question was then taken upon Mr. CLINGMAN's motion; and it was agreed to.

THE EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is the special order, being "Senate joint resolution No. 2, authorizing the architect of the Capitol to continue in employment the mechanics, laborers, and others, employed upon the two wings thereof."

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have been instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Public Grounds, of which I have the honor to be chairman, to report an amendment to the resolution now pending, by way of substitute, and insist upon its adoption.

The amendment was then read, as follows:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the period between the passage of this resolution, and the end of the fiscal year terminating June 30th, 1853, the sum of $500,000, for the continuation of the work on the two wings of the Capitol.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The necessity which gave rise to the original resolution has passed. It was intended only as a temporary expedient to prevent a total suspension of the work on the two wings of the Capitol. The appropriation of the last Congress for this improvement was only $100,000, and that was exhausted at the commencement of the present year. Since then the work has necessarily been suspended, the mechanics and laborers discharged, and the important object to be accomplished by the extension of the edifice, consequently delayed. I earnestly hoped that at an earlier period the House would have taken up the resolution of the Senate, passed it, and permitted the work to be continued. Had this been done, two months of fine weather would not have been lost—the work would have been in a state of progress, and the nation could not have reproached its Representatives for refusing to do for so long a period what need not at any time have occupied more than five minutes.

The appropriation of $500,000, contemplated by the amendment I have proposed, is less than was asked for by the Secretary of the Interior, and the accomplished architect in charge of the work. Their estimates were made last fall, and a large portion of the time in which the money was to have been expended having elapsed, it is deemed necessary now to appropriate only this amount, which will be sufficient for the period between the passage of the resolution and the end of the fiscal year, terminating June 30, 1853. The Committee of Ways and Means have not provided in any of their appropriation bills reported to the House for the extension of the Capitol. The House very appropriately referred the subject to the Committee on Public Buildings, and that committee, after inquiring into the propriety of the appropriation, and in view of the fact that no regular appropriation bill to which this can be attached, will, in all probability, be passed before the end of the session, have directed me to urge it now.

The work has been commenced. I cannot doubt that it is the intention of Congress to complete it. One hundred thousand dollars have already been expended, and, I am happy to say, judiciously expended. This appropriation is needed, and must be made, and it is wiser to make it now and permit the work to proceed with a full complement of hands, than to make a small appropriation which may not last until the regular appropriation bills are passed. It will be the best economy to complete the building as speedily as it can be done consistently with a proper execution of the work.

Mr. WOODWARD. If I am in order in making the inquiry, I should like to know whether it is likely that the special committee, relative to the foundation of the wings of the Capitol, will probably make a report? The question of what is to be the amount of appropriation may be affected by the report from that committee. I should like to inquire, if it be in order, when that committee may be expected to report, and what is likely to be the character of the report?

Mr. McNAIR, (chairman of the committee.) We shall report next week, and we are now almost ready.

Mr. WOODWARD. I ask pardon of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] for interrupting him.

Mr. STANTON. I have no objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McNAIR] making his statement.

Mr. McNAIR. The investigation has been going on regularly, and we are now almost ready to report. We have found the wall in a dreadful condition—in a condition that has astonished us all. When we came to examine it, we found that wall with shells built up on the outside, and small stones thrown in on the inside. We have found it in a very bad condition. There are no stones running through the wall to bind it. There are no headers, and there is no bond work.

Mr. WOODWARD. I understand from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] that he had not concluded his remarks. I supposed he had, or I would not have made the inquiry.

Mr. STANTON. If I do not lose my right to the floor, I have no objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McNAIR] proceeding.

Mr. McNAIR. The mortar that has been put in there we have found to be entirely insufficient, as we believe. It has been in there about three months, and it is not yet set. Men with picks just dug out the inside, and threw out the stones with their hands, and threw out the sand or mortar, or whatever you call it, with a shovel. We have, as one member of the committee expressed it, realized our very worst anticipations. We had no expectation that this large appropriation would be sprung upon us at this time, for the architect himself asked but $350,000 in his report to the President of the United States. That report I have in my possession. We believe this thing ought to be investigated fairly, and that all things connected with it should be brought before this House before this appropriation is made. If this appropriation is once made, we will be powerless to change it. We will be all fastened, and you will put up a building which will cost $5,000,000, upon an appropriation of $100,000 made by this House on the 30th day of September, 1850—an appropriation made in three lines and a half, giving to the President of the United States $100,000, and power to appoint an architect—that architect to produce a plan, of which he shall approve; and then the money was to be expended from the commencement of the extension of the Capitol. That money has been under the control of the architect himself, who has drawn it out of the Treasury himself. It has been expended; how, we know not. I have here a statement of the money drawn from the Secretary of the Treasury by the architect himself in sums of $20,000, and expended or disbursed by him, I know not how. This matter requires an inquiry, and I want this House to know and to understand how this business is progressing, and whether this foundation will be so frail and so weak that the superstructure raised upon it will fall down. One of the best architects, perhaps, in the State of Pennsylvania was here, who has no interest whatever in this work, and probably never will have, and he declared to me, when he looked at that wall and examined the formation of it, that he would venture his life the building would fall down if built upon it. Now, that is the opinion of a respectable architect who has no interest in this matter, and I therefore want the House to pause before making this appropriation.

Mr. DUNCAN, (interrupting.) I wish to ask the gentleman, who that architect from Pennsylvania is? and whether he has been examined before the committee?

Mr. McNAIR. No. I did not say that he had been. The gentleman is a friend of Mr. DIMMICK, and was visiting him; he may give his name if he chooses.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. DUNCAN. As he is represented as a person of such high reputation, we want to know who he is.

[Cries of "Name!" "Name!"]

Many MEMBERS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. McNAIR. He was introduced to me by Mr. DIMMICK.

[Loud cries of "Name!" "Name!" and "Oh no, go on!"]

[Renewed cries of "Name!" "Name!"]

Mr. FLORENCE. Oh no; the reputation of Pennsylvania may be at stake.

[Cries of "Order," and laughter.]

Many MEMBERS. "Name!" "Name!"

Mr. McNAIR. Well, his name is Knowles. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNCAN. Where is he from?

Mr. McNAIR. I wish gentlemen to know something about the disbursement of that money, before they judge whether everything is perfectly right.

Mr. SEYMOUR, of New York, (interrupting.) I wish merely to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whether he has any knowledge of the misapplication of these funds, or any suspicion of their misapplication?

Mr. McNAIR. I have a knowledge that the money has been drawn by the architect. He has drawn it; and there has been no return made by him for the disbursement.

Mr. WOODWARD. I simply wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I did not expect a debate of this character would spring up. My inquiry was strictly as to the business before the committee, and related to the manner of constructing the wall. I never for a moment had the least suspicion of a misapplication of the funds, and I should be very glad if my friend would restrict himself to the matter of the construction of the wall.

Mr. FLORENCE, (Mr. McNAIR yielding the floor.) As the great object to be attained just now is, to arrive at a definite conclusion by which this House can vote to-day upon this bill, may I beg to ask my colleague from Pennsylvania, whether there has been a vote in that committee upon the subject of the wall?—whether there has been any conclusion arrived at by the committee that may enable this House to arrive at a conclusion?—whether the whole of the committee agree with the chairman?—and further, whether experienced gentlemen—persons competent to judge of the strength of that wall, have not given certificates that it is adequate for the purposes for which it was built? Inasmuch as the chairman of the committee has been asked to give us information, and as we are all interested in knowing it, it is perhaps as well that he should state now whether such certificates have not been given. My reason for asking it is, that I have understood from experienced persons that the wall is quite adequate for the purposes for which it is designed, notwithstanding the opinion of the chairman of the committee, who, perhaps, has no better practical knowledge on the subject than I have.

Mr. McNAIR. I have told the gentleman, as I tell him now, that there has been no vote taken in the committee. I will tell him further, that I know nothing about any such certificates as he speaks of.

Mr. FLORENCE. I did not mean to say certificates. I meant to ask if there had not been such testimony before the committee.

Mr. McNAIR. There has been such testimony, but there has also been contradictory testimony. After the testimony was all given, we went out and examined for ourselves. We formed our own opinions in regard to it, and have given them in full in the report. For my own part, I must say that I was very much disappointed, and I think that the other members of the committee—if they are here—will say the same for themselves.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, (resuming.) Mr. Chairman, I was about to remark, when I was interrupted, that it had been the misfortune of all great men who had the genius and resolution to undertake works of this magnitude, to be harassed and annoyed by the criticism and censure of petty minds, who have not the capacity to comprehend or the skill to execute a great design. In this remark I do not allude to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I do allude to that description of meddlers who, from motives of disappointment at having failed to secure contracts on this work, come into this Hall to harass the House, and, I had almost said, to lead intelligent and honorable members of Congress into dilemmas, of which, when they learn the whole truth, they will be ashamed.

Mr. McNAIR. Who are they?

Mr. STANTON. Such men as your particular friend, Mr. Colman, who, you said yourself, had been the instrument in bringing about this investigation.

Gentlemen who have read the history of the construction of that great edifice on the north bank of the Thames, at Westminster, will recollect that Sir Charles Barry, the distinguished architect charged with the design and construction of the work, was annoyed at every step, from the time the first foundation stone was laid to the completion of the building, with special committees and investigations, like those we have authorized here, but which resulted in nothing but the complete vindication of the great architect and his noble structure. Sir, the truth is, in all great undertakings of this magnitude, success is best accomplished by relying upon individual responsibility. You acted upon that principle when you gave the President power to adopt the plan for the edifice, without other limit than his own discretion; and you must, to some extent, act upon the same principle in permitting him to complete it. You can delay, embarrass, and ruin the work, by listening to the idle clamor of the ignorant and the envious; but such a course will be more discreditable to you than to the President, the architect he has employed; or any one acting under them. The lamented Taylor would never have conquered at Buena Vista, nor Scott have taken the city of Mexico, if at every emergency these brave generals had been restrained and controlled by the unenlightened suggestions of the War Department. Nor will your new Capitol ever be creditable to the nation, if the work and the plans are changed and modified by the action of special committees, raised at the instance of every stupid fellow who imagines that he sees a brick awry, or some small crevice not perfectly putted up.

I am rejoiced that this debate has arisen, because I had some curiosity to hear what the honorable member from Pennsylvania, [Mr. McNAIR,] who is chairman of the special committee, would have to say upon the subject of the foundations; and I wished to avail myself of the opportunity of expressing my own opinions on the subject freely and fearlessly. When I heard there were doubts as to the stability and firmness of these foundations, I confess I was amazed, for I could not conceive that any intelligent gentleman, who saw them as they presented themselves to the eye of everybody, could have any other opinion than that they were unnecessarily strong. I am glad, however, that the committee have made their investigation most thorough and complete; no matter what may be their conclusions when they take the sense of the members. They have not only, as we have been told by the chairman, dug into the center of the walls to test the quality of the work, but, I have been informed, they have employed an accomplished scientific gentleman of this city, (Professor Johnson,) at an expense of some $20 or $25 per day, to make extensive experimental tests of the solidity and strength of the gneiss rock of which these foundations are built, as well as of its capacity to resist the action of the atmosphere.

Now, there is not a laborer engaged on these foundations—not even the most ignorant of them—who does not know that not a square inch of the surface of those walls will be exposed to the action of the elements. The outer surface will be covered up by the earth, or the terraces which will surround it, and the inner surface by the arches or floors above it, so that no part will be exposed.

The chairman of the special committee, [Mr. McNAIR,] in advance of the action of the committee, gives us his judgment as to the character of these foundations, and pronounces them shamefully defective. Now, as to the character of the material: I happened to have a conversation with Professor Johnson as to the result of his experiments, in which he kindly gave me the facts which will follow.

Mr. McNAIR. Was he upon his oath?

Mr. STANTON. No, sir; but I presume his word upon this subject would be as good as his oath.

Mr. BEALE. He took six or seven specimens of stone from different parts of the building, so as to ascertain the average quality of the stone.

Mr. STANTON. I shall state it all fairly, as I have no disposition to do any one injustice.

The weakest and most inferior specimens of the stone used which could be found, when subjected to pressure, by accurate machinery for that purpose, bore a crushing weight of over 8,000 pounds to the square inch, or 1,152,000 pounds to the square foot. Now, the heaviest portion of the material of which the walls of the edifice will be built weighs only 175 pounds to the cubic foot; and as the building will be about 60 feet high, the weight which each square foot of foundation must sustain is only 10,500 pounds, or less than one hundredth part of what the walls are capable of sustaining, supposing the whole foundation to be built of the most inferior material. The best portion of the stone used bore a pressure of 20,000 pounds and over, or one and a half times more than the most inferior. Not one stone in a hundred used in the foundation, I am authorized to say, was of the inferior quality of the first specimen to which I have referred; and taking a medium between the worst and the best, as the proper average quality of the stone used, and these foundations, so much decry, are really capable of bearing, according to scientific demonstration, 2,450,000 pounds to the square foot, or two hundred and thirty-three times more than is actually required.

These are some of the results which had been obtained by the gentleman referred to, at the time of our conversation. They certainly will be conclusive, to all unprejudiced minds, as to the strength and durability of the stone.

I have no information as to the result of his experiments to test the capacity of the stone to stand atmospheric action. They had not been completed at the time referred to. But I care not what may be the result. My own practical experience teaches me that the stone is sufficiently strong, solid, and durable, for any purpose of the kind. I agree with the learned Professor, that these experiments can be of no practical value, for the reasons above stated, and that this part of the investigation had as well been dispensed with. They are only a waste of genius and of time.

But the chairman of the investigating committee has told us, with great gravity, that he went to one of these foundation walls, with pickaxe and crowbar in hand, and dug up a portion of it; that, to his great surprise, he found his worst anticipations realized. The wall, he alleges, is built of small stone and bad mortar, and is insufficient to sustain the structure to be erected upon it. Now, let me disclose a secret in regard to this digging operation. The honorable chairman satisfied himself by digging in a single spot, and that spot happened, fortunately for the purpose of the gentleman, to be just where the workmen terminated their labors. Now, it is known to all practical men, that in building either brick or stone walls, there will necessarily be an accumulation of pieces of brick or small stone as the work progresses. These must be worked in, and it is economy to use them in "filling in," or "leveling up." This happened to be the case at the spot where the honorable gentleman used, so successfully, his pickaxe and crowbar. I suppose some sagacious person, knowing the zeal of the honorable gentleman, informed him of these facts; and he availed himself of the information, and made his assault upon the stone and mortar accordingly.

Mr. McNAIR. I have received no such information. No one ever told me that the small stones were in that particular place.

Mr. STANTON. Oh, well, I only supposed it might be so. It happens, however, to be the fact, that this identical spot was the last part of the building worked upon, and these small stones were used up at that place as matter of economy. But these stones, so torn out of the wall, are not small stone, and could not from their use impair the strength of the foundation. They average from six inches in length to two feet, and I have seen many a solid and substantial wall built of stone of no greater size. Many of the best and oldest buildings in the world rest upon foundations built of pebbles, broken rock, and small pieces of stone or brick.

I have taken some extracts from the "Transactions of the British Architects," which will show the extent to which this mode of building has been carried in past ages:

"In Greece, the foundations of all the very early fortifications were formed of small stones. Some of the walls of the stronghold at the pass of Thermopylae are constructed of small stones and mortar. Thucydides, describing the way in which the walls surrounding the Acropolis had been restored after the Persian war, about 478 years before Christ, says the foundations consisted of stones of all sizes and forms thrown in indiscriminately. These still remain, and are so hard as to be almost impenetrable."

"The Romans constructed their walls of two faces of masonry filled in with cement, consisting of pounded bricks, or tiles, rough stones or flints, and lime well incorporated. There are examples at Messina, where in fact the walls surrounding the town, erected 370 years before our era, are wholly of this description. At Rome, it was everywhere used; the temple of Augustus, the baths of Agrippa, of Titus, and of Diocletian, the Coliseum, the Aqueducts, St. Peter's, and many others serving as instances. The well known wall of China, built about 205 years before Christ, was constructed in a somewhat similar manner, and notwithstanding numerous vicissitudes, is still wondrously strong, discovering no signs of ruin."

The Romans brought their arts to England, and there practiced them.

"The foundations of the Roman Station, Aldborough, Yorkshire—the upper parts of which are formed of round pebbles united by a strong cement—and of some portions of Severn's wall, consists of rough stone and pebbles, compacted in clay; while in several instances we find they used perfect concreted masses of gravel, sand, or pounded bricks and lime, precisely similar to the concrete of our day."

"The walls of Aldborough Church, Yorkshire; the tower of Ears Barton Church; that of St. Peter's Church, at Barton upon Humber, Lincolnshire, and a building at Warrford, Southamptonshire, all of which, in the opinion of several antiquaries, are composed, some of round pebbles united by mortar, and others of rubble stone and flints well grouted; they are still of amazing solidity, and appear to defy time."

Sir Christopher Wren discovered that the foundation of St. Paul's Cathedral, upon which had stood an imposing pile destroyed by the great fire, was composed of a mass of Kentish rubble stone, cemented with extremely hard mortar.

"The foundation of the north transept of Westminster Abbey, built in 1245, is composed of flints, irregular stones, rubble, and mortar, forming a body almost impenetrable."

"The foundations of the public buildings in Westminster, the law courts, the additional buildings to the House of Lords, the Library of the House of Commons, &c., were formed of granite, or other hard stone, broken in small pieces, (none exceeding in size an ordinary hen's egg,) and laid in layers closely rammed and grouted; every third layer of Dorking lime and sharp river sand."

The new Parliament House of Great Britain, recently built, rests upon foundations ten feet seven inches in height, composed entirely of concrete. On this mass of small stone, broken up for the purpose and grouted, the walls of that massive structure are erected; and yet our ears are stunned with the cry, that the stone in these foundations are not large enough to give it proper strength. This fact, in regard to the foundations of the work at Westminster, I learn from the reports of the architect. I happened to mention it a few days ago in the presence of some of the workmen lately engaged on the Capitol, when two of them informed me that the report stated the matter correctly, for they had each worked upon these very foundations.

The walls laid, and which are the objects of daily observation by the members of this House, are subjects of admiration to every scientific and practical man who has seen them. Such solidity, such strength, and such admirable skill in their construction, have never been manifested before in any work done in this city, and I doubt whether better work of the kind can be found in any part of the Union. Yet we are told by the honorable chairman of the special committee that the walls are of no value, and should be torn up. I am astonished at the conclusion to which he has arrived. It makes me blush for the intelligence of my fellow-members on this floor upon matters of such a practical character. When gentlemen see the report of the special committee, if the evidence accompanies it, they will find that some of the most scientific engineers and architects in the nation—indeed I might say the world—as well as the most experienced practical men, have testified, after examining the work, that it is of sufficient strength and solidity to bear an infinitely greater weight than can possibly be put upon it.

The mortar of which these walls are built is said not to be of good quality, because it has not yet hardened. The fact that such a complaint is made, is proof only that there are men intrusted with the legislation of this country, who are lamentably deficient in those practical matters which are familiar to the commonest of men. Who, in his sober senses, could imagine that mortar in the center of a thick wall—seven feet thick—exposed to the severity of a rigorous winter, and only two months laid, would be now dry and hardened? The very best mortar ever used could not have hardened in such a situation in so short a time. Twenty years will not suffice to make it as dry and solid as it will become; and every practical, as well as scientific man, knows that it is better it should be so. Ask the common laborer who has been accustomed to attend upon masons, and he will tell you, that the longer the process of evaporation continues, the stronger will be the adhesion of the mortar. It is a fact so well demonstrated by the experience of those who are accustomed to work in mortar, that it needs no scientific experiments to prove it. The fact, then, that in digging into these foundations the mortar was found not to be dry and hard, is no evidence that it is of bad quality. On the contrary, I assert, without fear of contradiction by any man of intelligence on the subject, that the mortar is as good as could have been made. It is made of good lime, clean, sharp sand, and mixed in proper proportions. The practical and scientific men who have examined it, concur with me in opinion, and ridicule the folly which pronounces it of bad quality. I hold in my hand some of the mortar, taken from the very place in which the honorable gentleman tore up the wall.

Mr. McNAIR. That is not as it was taken out of the wall.

Mr. STANTON. It was taken from that very place in the wall, and nothing has been added to it but water. The action of the atmosphere has dried it—that is all. It dried because it was thus exposed. How, in the name of all that is reasonable, could it be expected to dry in so short a time, if it had remained in the center of a wall seven feet thick. Near the earth, too, where there was more likely to be absorption of moisture, rather than evaporation, the probabilities were all against its drying. Indeed, from my practical knowledge of mortar, having worked in it for twelve years, I should have doubted the quality of this, had it not been just as it was.

The honorable gentleman says these walls are a mere shell on the outside, and filled up with small stone and bad mortar in the center. I have shown how they are built; but even if it were as the gentleman seems to think they are, I cannot see how they could even then be liable to bulge or press out. Every one knows that walls are not so liable to split as to crack cross-wise. They crack cross-wise because of the inequalities of the foundation. But, these walls will be so sustained on the outside by the earth, and on the inside by the cross walls and the arches, that it will be impossible for them to give way by splitting or bulging.

Mr. McNAIR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STANTON. With pleasure—as many as you may choose to ask.

Mr. McNAIR. I desire to ask if a certain very interesting article, which appeared not long since, did not supply you with information on this subject?

Mr. STANTON. I do not know to what article the gentleman alludes. The extracts I have given are obtained from books; the rest I derive from my own practical experience, which I think qualifies me to speak of subjects like this with some knowledge more than the gentleman possesses, even after the advantage he has had of this very important investigation.

A VOICE. How many applicants for contracts were there from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STANTON. I do not know how many from Pennsylvania have applied for contracts; but this I am informed is true, that disappointed applicants for contracts have been active in stimulating this investigation. I believe some of them were before the committee, and I suppose were the persons who attempted to throw doubt upon the stability of the work.

The gentleman takes exception to the fact that the architect of the edifice, Mr. Walter, has control of the funds used. I cannot see that this is any part of the duty conferred upon the committee by the House, which clothed them only with power to inquire into the sufficiency of the foundations. But it is an exception to the law and not to the President, and ought to have been taken two years ago. Congress gave the President power to adopt the plan, and money to carry it out, with instructions that the money should be expended under his direction, "by such architect as he might appoint." Congress now has no right to complain of the action of the President in this respect, nor in regard to the adoption of the plan. If he has transcended what Congress now supposes to be a reasonable limit, it is the fault of Congress. It was in our power to have restrained him. We might have required him to present his plans and estimates to us for our adoption or rejection, but we did not think it proper to do so. We bade him take the responsibility, and he obeyed our command. I think he has acted wisely in adopting a plan, which, while it affords room enough, is not extravagant in cost, and will, in its architectural design and perfection of arrangement, reflect credit upon the nation. Our population, our territory, our resources, have increased with unexampled rapidity. Who can calculate their extent, when another half century shall have passed? The edifice we are now constructing is not for ourselves alone, but for posterity; and I am happy to say that in the after ages of the Republic it will most nobly illustrate the genius and power of the present. It is beautiful in design, perfect in its proportions and arrangements, and not too magnificent for the Capitol of thirty-one American States.

The gentleman, in his zeal to defeat the continuance of the work, thinks proper to assail the architect in regard to the expenditure of the money, and charges that he has not accounted for that placed in his hands. The money is drawn from the Treasury upon his requisition, according to law, and not otherwise. Every cent so drawn has been honestly and faithfully accounted for. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McNAIR] does not know it, I can tell him that the accounts of the architect are so kept, that any man can see in a moment the condition of the whole account, and learn the disposition of every dollar of the money. I will say to the honor of Mr. Walter, that if all other disbursing officers of the Government were as faithful and accurate in their accounts and disbursements, you would hear of no complaints about defalcations and corruption. The $100,000 heretofore appropriated have been expended, and I am gratified to have it in my power to say, judiciously expended. An immense amount of work has been done for that amount of money. Look at the immense excavations at each end of the Capitol—the great number of cubic perches of stone bought and laid—and other materials accumulated. And not one cent of this money, says the honorable gentleman, has been accounted for. Why, sir, I was about to say that this charge was so unjust to Mr. Walter, and would be so little believed by any one who knows him, that it was scarcely worth denying. But, if he really has doubts upon the subject, let him go to the Comtroller's office of the Treasury, and he will see that every cent has been faithfully and honestly accounted for.

Every man must be sensible of the great importance of the proposed improvement, and I am only surprised that the representatives of the nation, who have year after year seen the great inconveniences of legislation arising from the miserably defective construction of this House, did not sooner direct it to be commenced. I need say nothing of this Hall, the very worst in the world for purposes of deliberation. Its defects are two palpable not to be seen and felt by every member. Large and commodious as the building may seem, it does not contain more than one half as many committee rooms as are needed for the use of the two Houses. In many of them the committees are doubled, some of the committees have no rooms, and it frequently occurs that special committees cannot be accommodated without seriously interfering with the duties of others. And how are the officers of the House accommodated? They are crowded into the smallest rooms, and scarcely more than half the space necessary for the prompt and proper dispatch of business. The library room of the House is ill shaped, irregular, and not much larger, or convenient, than a good-sized rat hole. The document room is but little better, and both seem to have been made for any other purpose than that to which they are applied. Neither the Postmaster nor the Sergeant-at-Arms, has more room than is usually allotted to the bar-keeper on a steam-boat. All this is discreditable to a great nation like ours, and affords abundant reason for the immediate progress of an improvement, which will afford greater conveniences for the legislative department of the Government.

I hope this appropriation will be made. I deem the investigation to be made by this committee as of very little importance. Indeed, I know no practical man—I had almost said, no sensible man—will so hazard his reputation as to insist that those foundations shall come down. Who has complained of them, and of what is the complaint made? It arises from the disappointment of men who sought contracts and did not get them, and applies to a single spot ten or twelve feet long and two feet deep in one of the walls upon the south side of the House. I understand there is no sort of objection to the foundation upon the other side of the building—none in the world. If the gentleman having charge of this matter had taken the trouble to walk fifty feet further, he would have seen a portion of this work unfinished, just as it was laid up by the hands of the workmen, and instead of coming here and complaining that there are no large stones in that foundation, he would have told us that he saw them jutting almost entirely through the wall. I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McNAIR] to say, if upon that side of the building there are not large stones running through the whole wall?

Mr. McNAIR. There are large stones running nearly through the wall; and I believe they were put up there for the purpose of making a show. When we came to dig into the wall, we found no stones running through it.

Mr. STANTON. That shows the state of feeling under which the chairman of the special committee is acting. Why could he not state the simple fact, without throwing in the remark that "they were put up for show?" for if he had been destitute of all prejudice and feeling, and had not the interest of others who have instigated this investigation, to sustain, as well as his own reputation, for having begun it, would not the mere declaration of fact have been sufficient? Now, sir, I say that that wall was laid before the gentleman came to the city of Washington.

Mr. McNAIR. I have no interest in this thing.

Mr. STANTON. How in the name of common sense could the men when at work upon that part of the wall, have anticipated that the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. McNAIR], when he came here, would have been set on to commence a crusade against the foundations of this building? That work was done long before the honorable gentleman came here, and it remains now just in its unfinished condition, and in the best condition possible to test the quality of the work. Now, sir, I venture to assert that he will not say that that wall is not strong enough.

Mr. McNAIR. I will. That is my opinion.

Mr. STANTON. Well, I am very glad to hear that, for it is in keeping with all the results of the judgment you have manifested here to-day. Now, sir, this part of the wall torn down by the committee, was "leveled up" as the base for larger stone, and "leveling" is a technical term with masons, simply indicating the bringing of the wall to a level surface, in order that you may have a bed for larger stone to rest upon, or for other purposes. In this process of "leveling up," small stones are needed and necessarily used, and this is known to all practical men, if not to the chairman of the committee, created to pass judgment upon the labor of skillful and experienced operatives, who could have no motive or interest to make other than a good job.

I have been instructed to offer this amendment by the Committee on Public Buildings, who think that the appropriation should be made and the work completed with all possible speed consistent with its proper execution. The Secretary of the Interior, in his letter to the Committee of Ways and Means, and the Architect, in his annual report, estimated $350,000 as the sum to be expended during the present fiscal year ending June 30, 1852, and $650,000 for the subsequent year, ending June 30, 1853. The appropriation provided for by the amendment, extends to June 30, 1853, and is only half the sum asked for by the Secretary and Architect, a large portion of the time having elapsed in which the amount of their estimates would have been expended. I earnestly hope the House will pass the resolution and permit the work to proceed. The appropriation is needed, must be made, and the sooner the better. In conclusion, I will simply say, that no matter what may be the character of the report of the special committee, the money will be required, and the appropriation should be made.

Mr. BROWN, of Mississippi, obtained the floor.

Mr. WALLACE. As I am a member of the committee, and as comments have been made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] upon their action, I appeal to the liberality of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Brown] to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. BROWN. There is nothing which I would not do for my friend from South Carolina [Mr. WALLACE] except to yield a portion of my hour. I shall want all of it for my own use, not upon this question, but upon other questions.

It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, to address the House at all in reference to the bill now before it. I propose, in the opening of my remarks, to take a brief retrospect of the rise, progress, and fall, of the Southern movement. It is very well known, sir, not only to the members of Congress, but to the whole country, that the continued action of the Northern people, and of the Northern States, upon the subject of the domestic relations existing in the South, between the master and the slave, had at one time wrought up the Southern mind to a very high degree of exasperation. Apprehensions were freely expressed, and doubtless generally entertained, that some great disaster was likely to befall the country, growing out of this excitement. In this state of public feeling, during the Thirtieth Congress, a gentleman, then a Representative from one of the districts in the State of New York, [Mr. Gott.] introduced a resolution, preceded by what the Southern members believed to be a most insulting preamble. This preamble, insulting though it certainly was, did not propose any legislative action. The resolution, directed a very simple, but a very important inquiry to be made. It directed the Committee for the District of Columbia to inquire into the expediency of abolishing the slave trade in this District. The passage of this resolution gave offense to the whole Southern delegation, and they commenced, at once, manifesting their hostility to this movement in a manner not to be misunderstood.

A distinguished gentleman in the other branch of the Legislature, from my own State, and now its Governor, came, as the older members of Congress know very well, into this House and solicited members of Congress to sign their names to a call for a meeting of Southern Senators and Representatives. In obedience to this call, a meeting assembled in the Senate Chamber, over which a venerable Senator from the State of Kentucky [Governor Metcalfe] was called to preside. Here, sir, I date the rise of the Southern movement.

From this point it commenced its progress. But for this movement, I undertake to say, the Southern Democracy was not responsible. That meeting was a joint assemblage of the Southern Whigs and of the Southern Democrats. There were Whigs who absented themselves; and there were Democrats who absented themselves; but the Southern delegation in Congress generally, and without reference to party, was responsible for the meeting and for its proceedings. That meeting put forth an address to the Southern people, written, as it is said, and I have no doubt correctly, by the late venerable and distinguished Senator from South Carolina, [Mr. Calhoun.] It was such a paper as was intended to produce, as it certainly did produce, a most profound sensation upon the Southern mind. Upon my return to Mississippi, I found a very high degree of excitement—an excitement not confined to the Democrats, but pervading all parties, Whigs as well as Democrats. A proposition had already been made, and was then being actively urged, for a convention of our State—a popular convention—to take into consideration the relations then subsisting between the North and the South, growing out of the institution of domestic slavery. A number of gentlemen, of both political parties, published a call to the people, inviting them to assemble in convention. This call was the first advance step of the Southern movement, and for it, both Whigs and Democrats in my State were alike responsible. In obedience to it, the people, without reference to party, assembled in primary meetings and appointed delegates to a State Convention, and, in every instance, the delegates to that convention were appointed of equal numbers, Whigs and Democrats. The convention assembled in the month of October, 1849.

This, sir, was the second step in the progress of the Southern movement. Up to this period neither party could claim the exclusive credit, and up to this time it was all credit—there was no debit. That convention put forth another address to the people of Mississippi; and from that address I propose just in this connection to read a very short extract. For this address, bear you in mind, both the Whig and the Democratic parties of Mississippi were responsible, so far as they could be made responsible by their delegates in convention. It bore the honored signatures of leading Democrats and leading Whigs. It was a document which bore the signature of a very distinguished member of the UNION party, now high in the confidence of the Administration, and its representative as chief consul on the Island of Cuba—Judge Sharkey. After disclosing to the people what had been done and what was proposed for the future, Judge, now Consul, Sharkey and his associates said:

"Besides and beyond a popular convention of the Southern States with the view and the hope of arresting the cause of aggression, and if not practicable, then to concentrate the South in will, understanding, and action, the convention of Mississippi suggested, as the possible ultimate resort, the call by the Legislature of the assailed States, or still some more solemn conventions—such as should be regularly elected by the people of those States—to deliberate, speak, and act with all the sovereign power of the people. Should, in the result, such conventions be called and meet, they may lead to a like regularly-constituted convention of all the assailed States, to provide in the last resort for their separate welfare by the formation of a compact and an union that will afford protection to their liberties and their rights."

Now, that is the language for which I say all parties in Mississippi were responsible. It is the emanation of a convention composed equally of Whigs and of Democrats, or as they are now called of State-Rights men and Union men. The very head and front of the Union party in Mississippi, was the president of the convention, which put forth that address—the very head and front of the Union party in Mississippi attached his name to that sentiment and published it to the people of Mississippi—"to provide in the last resort for their separate welfare." How could this be done else than by a separation from the Northern States? How could it be done else than by secession or revolution—by breaking up the Government. True, it was to be done in the last resort; and pray have we ever spoken of secession except as the last resort—the final alternative? But now I find this language brought into the House of Representatives by my honorable colleague, [Mr. Wilcox,] and held up here with an attempt to hold the party to which I belong responsible for it. History, sir, must be known to him, at least the history of our own State, and if he has read that history he knows that the Hon. William L. Sharkey, the appointee of Millard Fillmore as consul to the city of Havana, was among those who put forth this address—put his signature to this language, and indorsed it to the people of Mississippi. To this point the Southern movement progressed. This Mississippi convention advised the convention of the Southern States. Virginia responded to that call, so did Georgia and Alabama, and Louisiana, and Arkansas, and Texas. Aye, even Tennessee came in, slowly and reluctantly, it is true, but still she comes—

Mr. POLK. To save the Republic.

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir, Tennessee went into the Nashville Convention to save the Republic, and so did Mississippi.

Mr. SCURRY. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him.

Mr. BROWN. Very briefly.

Mr. SCURRY. The gentleman who attended from Texas did so against the large majority of the district which he represented. A majority of that district voted directly and flatly against the convention.

Mr. BROWN. Well, I am not going to inquire how delegates came to be there. I speak of history as it is. Texas was represented in the convention, whether by her authority I do not know, and what is more, at this time I do not care. It is not material. The Nashville Convention, in obedience to this call, and in pursuance of these proceedings, assembled. This was another step in the progress of the Southern movement. Up to this time, if there was any strenuous objection to it anywhere, I, at least, was not aware of it. Here and there an exception may have been found—here and there a newspaper editor might be found to oppose it; but the great mass of the Southern politicians—and as far as I could judge of the Southern people—Whigs and Democrats—were for it. They were for it without distinction as to party. The convention assembled. It elected Hon. William L. Sharkey, of my own State—the head and front of Mississippi Unionism—to preside over its deliberations. He did preside. That convention put forth an address to the people, followed by a series of resolutions, asserting certain propositions upon which the Southern people ought to insist. Still, sir, there was no formidable objection either to the convention, or to what it said or did. The progress of the movement still seemed to be onward. Soon afterwards the compromise measures began to attract attention in the country and in Congress. A feeling of trepidation seemed to steal over Senators and Representatives. Here and there an old advocate of the Nashville Convention—one who had looked to it as the source from which a panacea was to come for all wounds and bruises, and putrifying sores, gradually fell off. I might call names if I did not wish to avoid involving myself in a discussion with too many gentlemen at the same time. With the falling off of these early and sturdy advocates commenced the decline in the Southern movement—and with the passage of the compromise, I mark the first distinct evidence of its decay.

In November, 1850, after the compromise measures had passed, a Union Convention, the first ever held to my knowledge in the United States—certainly the first ever held in my own State—was assembled at the city of Jackson, the seat of government of Mississippi. It was not a Southern-Rights Convention; it was not a State-Rights Convention; it was not a Whig Convention; it was not a Democratic Convention; it was a Union Convention, so it was called, and so it assembled. It was in advance of any other political organization in the State of Mississippi, or any other State, growing, so far as I know, out of the compromise. It rose as if from the ashes of the Southern movement in Mississippi. It was made up of the consistent few who opposed, and of the greater number who seceded from the Southern movement. With the assemblage of this convention in Mississippi, I date the downfall of the Southern movement in that State; a fall which was rapidly succeeded by its downfall elsewhere. Virginia determined to acquiesce in the measures of the compromise; Georgia acquiesced; Alabama and the other States in the South followed suit, or were silent. To the Union Convention of Mississippi belongs the credit, if credit it be, of striking the first fatal blow at the Southern movement. From this moment it rapidly declined. The movement I regard as dead.

It died at the hands of its early friends—its fathers. It is now very dead; and if I were called upon to write its epitaph, I would inscribe upon the stone that marked its burial place, Requiescat in pace. I will not make merry over the tomb of an old friend. I loved this movement. I believed it was, in its day, full of patriotism, full of devotion to the best interests of the country, and eminently calculated to preserve the Union, because it was eminently calculated to preserve the rights of the States within the Union. But it has passed away. A witty friend, in speaking of its buoyant rise, its rapid progress, and its early decay, described it as being like Billy Pringle's pig:

"When it lived, it lived in clover,
And when it died, it died all over."

[Laughter.]

When those who had been chiefly instrumental in getting up this movement abandoned it, could we be made longer responsible for it? They brought it into being, and by their hands it fell; and now they turn upon us, denounce it as a monster, and charge its sole paternity on us. We assume our due share of the responsibility, and they shall take theirs.

The Southern movement was, I repeat, the joint work of both parties acting together. This is history. If there was any rivalry, it was as to which party was entitled to the most credit. There was in this movement a fusion of parties. But upon all the old issues each party maintained its separate organization. And when the Southern movement was abandoned each was free to resume its original position.

The Whigs did not return to their position. They halted by the wayside, and by the aid of a few Democrats, formed the Union party. It was a party not demanded by the exigencies of the hour; but called into existence to subserve the views of particular men. This brings me to consider the present organization of parties in my State.

My colleague [Mr. WILCOX] the other day, in what I considered rather bad taste—although I certainly shall not undertake to lecture him upon matters of taste—spoke of a bare minority—of almost a majority of the people of our State as attempting to sneak back into the Democratic ranks. That was the language employed. In speaking of the State-Rights men of 1832, after their separation from General Jackson, he said:

"They stood aloof from the party, in armed neutrality, in the only State where they had a majority; and in States where they were in the minority, generally acted with the Whig party in opposition to the Democrats. They did not after their defeat attempt to sneak back into the Democratic party under the style of old line Democrats, as the secessionists of the present day are attempting to do."

Now, I shall undertake to demonstrate that the State-Rights party of Mississippi were never out of the ranks of the Democratic party, and that by no act of theirs have they ever put themselves beyond the pale of that party; and therefore there was no occasion for them to march back, even with banners flying, and much less for them to "sneak back," in the language of my colleague. Who were they that put themselves first out of the pale of the Democratic party? It was my colleague and his associates. In November, 1850, they assembled together in what they certainly did not call a Democratic Convention. They assembled in a Union Convention, and passed what they were pleased to term Union resolutions. They formed a Union organization, independent of the Democratic party, and equally independent of the Whig party. They did more than that. They chose, as the especial organ of that party—the particular mouth-piece of that political organization, the leading Whig organ at the seat of government. I ask if it is not so? It is true they took down the name of the paper. It was called the "Southron." That title no longer suited their purpose, and they called it the Flag of the Union. But they left the old Whig editor to conduct it. True it is that they associated with him a so-called Union Democrat. And it is equally true that the old line Whig and the new line Democrat yet conduct that journal. From this point, the unhappy controversy which has continued in Mississippi, took its progress. The Democratic party became divided. But there can be no difficulty in deciding who kept up the old organization. The newspaper press of the State gives always a pretty clear indication as to how parties stand. If there is one single, solitary Whig paper in the State of Mississippi that has not kept the Union flag flying at its mast-head from the opening of the contest down to this hour, I ask my colleague to say which one it is. If there was a Democratic paper in the State of one year's standing that did not take the State Rights side, with but a single exception, the Columbus Democrat, and keep it, I do not know where it is to be found. Who seems from these facts to have been getting out of the Democratic party—my colleague, who is sustained by the Whig press, or I, who have been and am yet sustained by the Democratic press?

More than this. The Union party called a convention in April, 1851. It was to be, by the terms of the call, a Union Convention—mark you, it was not a Democratic Convention, it was not a Whig Convention, but it was a Union Convention. What did it do? Did it nominate Democrats for office? It made four nominations, and two of them were Democrats by name, and two of them were open and avowed Whigs. It did not assemble as a Democratic Convention. It did not sit as a Democratic Convention. It did not make Democratic nominations. It nominated two Whigs and two Democrats, and my colleague voted the ticket thus nominated. Who was it, let me ask, that, following after strange gods, thus put himself outside the Democratic party; and who is he that, in coming back, will have occasion to sneak into the ranks?

The State-Rights party, or the Democratic States-Rights party, as it is termed in our State, assembled in Convention in June. What did they do? They made their nominations, and they selected their nominees from the old line Democracy. General John A. Quitman was made our standard-bearer. I was surprised the other day to hear my colleague going back to 1824 and 1828, to find the evidence of Quitman's want of fidelity to true Democratic principles. Something has been said about a statute of limitation. Whether the late distinguished nominee of the Democracy of Mississippi requires a statute of limitation, I certainly do not know. If he voted for John Quincy Adams in 1824 and 1828, and has since seen the error of his way, where is the Democrat who will not forgive him? Where is the Mississippi Democrat who has not forgiven him? But we have his own word for saying, that he did not vote for John Quincy Adams in 1824. He did not vote for him in 1828. He was always a State-Rights man of the strictest sect; and upon the issuing of General Jackson's proclamation against South Carolina, he, like hundreds and thousands of others who had been always faithful to the standard of the old hero, abandoned him; and they returned to him in their own good time. But if it be so grave an offense in the Democrats of Mississippi to have nominated a gentleman who voted (allowing the charge of my friend to be true) for John Quincy Adams in 1824, and again in 1828, what shall my friend say of Governor Foote. He claims to be a better Democrat than anybody else; and yet he held the only office that he ever did hold at the hands of the people in Mississippi, until he was elected Governor, from the Whigs of the county of Hinds, and that so late as 1838-'9. Yes; my friend forgot that, in 1838, Governor Foote ran as a Whig, was elected as a Whig, and served as a Whig, in our Legislature. So, upon the score of consistency, I think, allowing my friend's statements to be true, we stand quite as well as he does. And I submit to my colleague whether it is not a little too late for him, or for his friend, the Governor of the—I was going to say Union party, but he is Governor of the State by the constitution—to complain of Governor Quitman's want of Democracy. Did not both you and Governor Foote vote for Quitman for Governor in 1849? Did not Governor Foote put forth, or 'aid in putting forth, a pamphlet in this city, urging the claims of this same John A. Quitman for the Vice Presidency? Yes, sir, so late as 1848 he recommended him, as a man worthy of trust, to the whole Democracy of the Union. Yet my friend lays charges against his political orthodoxy, dated as far back as 1824 and 1828—twenty years beyond the time when he received the indorsement of Governor Foote and nearly one third of the whole Democracy of the Union; twenty-one years beyond the time when he received the indorsement of Mississippi for Governor, and my friend's vote for the same office. If the indorsement of the National Democracy in 1848—if the indorsement of Mississippi Democracy in 1849—if the indorsement of Governor Foote, and of my colleague also, may be relied on, I think Quitman can pass muster. He is sound.

Our nominees were all Democrats. We run them as Democrats—as State-Rights Democrats—against the Union ticket, composed of two Whigs and two Democrats. We were beaten. And what has happened since the election? Who is it that has gone out of the Democratic party? The Legislature assembled—the new Governor was inaugurated. What was almost his first act? It was to appoint an Adjutant-General. It was an important appointment—the most important in his gift. Did he appoint a Union Democrat? No, not he. Did he appoint a secession Democrat, as my friend calls them? No, not at all; but he appointed a Whig. That was his first important appointment as Governor, and he dismissed a Democrat to make it. What did his “faithful Union Legislature” do? It did not send him back to the Senate, that is clear. I will tell you what it did. There was an old and venerable Democrat superintending the penitentiary. It was a mere ministerial office, filled by a man who had confessedly discharged his duties with ability and integrity, and to the entire satisfaction of everybody. He was turned out by the Union Legislature, and a Whig put in his place. A gentleman who had discharged for a series of years the duties of clerk of the same establishment, with fidelity, and to the entire satisfaction of every one, was also dismissed, and a Whig put in his place. A Whig Sergeant-at-Arms was elected. Places were given to other Whigs over the heads of Democrats. The patronage of the State, so far as the Governor and Legislature could control it, has been given to the Whigs; and so far as the executive advertising has been concerned, it has, with scarcely an exception, been given to the Whig press. I ask if this looks like Democracy? Two vacancies existed in the United States Senate. How were they filled? With Democrats, did you say—old, long-tried, and consistent Democrats? Were they sent here to represent the Union men of Mississippi? No, sir. One Democrat and one Whig were returned. If these things show that my colleague, and his associates in Mississippi, have been faithful to the Democratic party, why, then, I must confess I have grown strangely wild in my opinions of political fidelity. What think our friends from other States? “Can things like these overcome them like a summer cloud, and not excite their wonder?” Is it consistent with Democratic usage to organize under the style of the Union party? Is it compatible with party fidelity to nominate and elect bitter enemies of the party? Is it a part of the tactics of the Democratic party to dismiss Democrats and put Whigs in their places? Ought the patronage of a Democratic Government to be given exclusively to the Whig press? And, finally, ought a Democratic Legislature to elect a Whig United States Senator? These are questions raised by my friend, and his party. I ask the National Democracy to answer them.

My colleague calls us constantly, through his speech, the secessionists and disunionists of Mississippi. This is a kind of political slang used in a party canvass with effect, but it is entirely out of place here. A member of Congress ought to use terms that apply to a given state of facts—that have some relation to justice. My friend says what he, perhaps, said so often in the heat of the canvass, that he almost got to think it was true—that we went into the contest with secession and disunion inscribed upon our banners. Why, no such thing is true. My friend must have seen that inscription through a distempered imagination—through some extraordinary perversion of his mental vision. There was no such inscription on our banner. The Democratic party of Mississippi asserted the abstract right of a State to secede from this Union. They entertain that opinion now; and at all proper times and upon all proper occasions they will maintain it. We believe, in the language of the Kentucky resolutions, “that where there is no common arbiter, each party to a compact is to judge of the infractions of the compact, and of the mode and measure of redress.”

The State, we say, “is to be the judge of infractions of the compact, and of the mode and measure of redress.” If, in the language of the Kentucky resolutions, the State believed that the compact has been violated, she, and she alone has the right to judge, so far as she herself is concerned, of that infraction, and the mode and measure of its redress. I desire to ask my colleague if he does not indorse the Kentucky resolutions, and whether the whole Union party of Mississippi does not indorse them? If he will say to us, by authority of his party, that they repudiate these resolutions, I will guaranty that they sink so low, as a political party, that, though you sounded for them with a hundred fathom lead line, a voice would still come booming up from this mighty deep, proclaiming, “no bottom here.”

I desire to submit this proposition to my colleague. He says, that because we assert the right of secession, therefore we are secessionists. Non constat. He asserts the right of revolution. Let me ask my friend, do you consider yourself as a revolutionist? If I am to be denounced as a secessionist because I assert the right to secede, may I not turn upon my assailant and say to him, You are a revolutionist, because you assert the right of revolution?

But, sir, this new Union organization—this party which claims first to be the Whig party par excellence, and then to be the Democratic party par excellence—to what sort of sentiments does it hold? Ask my friend here, [Mr. Wilcox,] in the presence of our colleague of the Senate [Mr. Brooke] who has lately arrived in this city, “Gentlemen, what are your opinions on the subject of the currency?” My friend would doubtless say something about hard-money, and gold and silver; but our colleague in the Senate would tell us that he believes in paper money, and banks. Suppose the two gentlemen should be asked what they thought on the subject of protection? My friend here would commence lecturing you about free-trade; but his colleague in the Senate would begin to tell us how much protection we want. And it would be thus in regard to distribution, internal improvements by the Federal Government, the Sub-Treasury, and upon all other party questions. If you ask them what they are for, they tell you they are for the Union. But as to what political measures they propose to carry out, they do not at all agree, even among themselves.

Why, sir, if I may be allowed, in this high council-place, to indulge in an anecdote, I think I can tell one illustrative of the position of this Union party, and especially the Union party of my own State. There was an old gentleman who kept what was called the “Union Hotel.” A traveler rode up and inquired whether he could have breakfast. The landlord said, “What will you have?” “Well,” said he, “I’ll take broiled chicken and coffee.” “I don’t keep them.” “Let me have beefsteak and boiled eggs, then.” “I don’t keep them.” “Well,” said the traveler, “never mind; give me something to eat.” “I don’t keep anything to eat.” “Then,” said the traveler, getting a little out of patience, “feed my horse; give him some oats.” “I don’t keep oats.” “Then give him a little hay.” “I don’t keep hay.” “Well, give him something to eat.” “I don’t keep anything for horses to eat.” [Laughter.] “Then what the devil do you keep?” “I keep the Union Hotel.” [Renewed laughter.] So with this Union party. They are for the Union, and they are for nothing else. They are for that to which nobody is opposed. They are constantly trying to save the Union, and are making a great outcry about it, when, in fact, nobody has sought or is seeking to destroy it. They keep the Union Hotel, but they don’t keep anything else.

Now, sir, to come a step further in the progress of Mississippi politics. As soon as the election in our State resulted adversely to my friends and to myself, we, as a matter of course, abandoned the issue upon which it had been conducted. We gave up a contest in which we had been beaten. But we did not change our opinions as to the soundness of the principle. It was a contest for the maintenance of a particular State principle, or State policy. We were overthrown by a majority of the people of our own State, and consequently we gave up the issue. Immediately afterwards, by the usual authority and in the usual way, there was a notice inserted in the leading Democratic papers of the State, calling upon the Democratic party, without reference to new State issues, and without reference to past disputes, to assemble in convention for the purpose of appointing delegates to attend the Baltimore National Democratic Convention. This was in November, 1851. Almost immediately afterwards, the Union party called a Union convention, which assembled on the first Monday in January last. It was represented by about thirty-six delegates, from twelve or fourteen counties. On the 8th of the same month, the Democratic Convention proper, assembled, represented by some two hundred or more delegates, from fifty-five counties. Our convention was called as a Democratic Convention. It assembled as a Democratic Convention. It deliberated as a Democratic Convention. It appointed delegates to the Baltimore Convention as a Democratic Convention. It appointed Democratic electors. It represented emphatically the Democracy of Mississippi. Having been beaten on the issues of State policy, I repeat, we gave them up. We so publicly announced; and when we met in convention on the 8th of January, it was as Democrats on the old issues.

How was it with the Union Convention? Was that a Democratic Convention? Was there any such pretence? No, sir; it assembled as a Union Convention—a Union meeting to appoint delegates to attend a Democratic National Convention. Why, what an idea! What right had such a meeting to appoint delegates to a Democratic National Convention? If the Union party, calling themselves Democrats, may appoint delegates to the National Democratic Convention, why may not the free Democracy of Ohio, typified in the person of the gentleman across the way, [Mr. Gwinnings,] do the same thing? They claim to be Democrats, and have organized the free Democracy; and why may not they send their representation to the Democratic Convention? Suppose the Free-Soil Democrats get up an organization, why may not they send delegates too? and why may not every other faction and political organization have its representatives there? No, sir; if there is to be a Union party, let there be a Union convention. If certain gentlemen have become so etherealized that the Democratic organization does not suit them, let them stay out of the Democratic convention. When they put on the proper badge—when they take down the Union flag, and run up the old Democratic banner, I am for hailing them as brothers—for forgetting the past, and looking only to the future. They need not sneak back. We will open the door, and let them in. “To err, is human; to forgive, divine.”

Mr. CHASTAIN, (interrupting.) I wish to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if the platform of the Nashville Convention did not repudiate the idea of having anything to do with either of the national conventions—the Whig or the Democratic?

Mr. BROWN. For that convention, the Whig party and the Democratic party, as I said before, were alike responsible. The Union party, composed, as it is, of Whigs and Democrats, must take their part of the responsibility for it. Was not Judge Sharkey, a Whig and your President’s appointee to Havana, responsible? Was he not president of the convention, and is he not a Union leader? Did not Governor Foote have a hand in it? Did not Mr. Clemens take his share of responsibility? Did not almost all the prominent, leading Union Democrats of the South have a part in that convention? I want to know if these gentlemen may slip out and leave us to hold the sack? The State-Rights Democrats of Mississippi, as such, never indorsed the recommendation to which the gentleman alludes; and, therefore, we no more than others are responsible for it. If the Union Whigs and Union Democrats will stand by the recommendation, they may fairly expect us to do so too; but it is a very pretty business for us to make a joint promise, and then allow them to break it, and require us to hold on to it. No, sir. “A contract broken on one side, is a contract broken on all sides.”

Mr. MOORE, of Louisiana, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Mississippi mentioned the State of Louisiana in connection with the Nashville Convention. I wish merely to state this fact, that a law was introduced into the Legislature of Louisiana authorizing the people to send delegates to that convention, but it failed. I do not believe a single man went from the State of Louisiana to that convention who was authorized by the people to go there.

Mr. BROWN. I cannot stop for these interruptions, as I find that my time is fast running out. Now, what did the Democratic party of Mississippi mean when they assembled in convention and appointed delegates to the Baltimore National Convention? They meant, sir, to go into that convention in good faith, and to act in good faith. We do not believe the Democratic party is going to come up to our standard of State-Rights, but we know they will come nearer up to it than the Whig party; and we therefore intend to go into the Democratic Convention, with an honest purpose to support its nominees. We trust you to make us fair and just nominations; and if you do, we intend to support them. If I am asked who the State-Rights Democrats of Mississippi would sustain for the Presidency, I will answer, they will sustain any good, honest, long-tried, and faithful member of the Democratic party, who has never practiced a fraud upon them.

I can tell you this, that in going into that convention, the Democracy of Mississippi will not ask from it an indorsement of their peculiar notions—if, indeed, they be peculiar—on the subject of State-Rights.

Mr. CHASTAIN, (interrupting.) Let me ask the gentleman if he would vote for Mr. Cass?

Mr. BROWN. If I were to answer that question, I might be asked by other gentlemen whether I would vote for this man or that man. I do not choose to engage in any controversy about men.

Sir, I was saying that we shall not ask at the hands of the Baltimore Convention an indorsement of our peculiar views on the subject of State-Rights—if indeed these views be peculiar. We shall ask in the name of the State-Rights party no place upon the national ticket—neither at its head nor at its tail. And when we have aided you on to victory, as we expect to do, we shall ask no part of the spoils, for we are not of the spoil-loving school.

What we ask is this: that when we have planted a great principle, which we intend to nourish, and as far as we have the power, protect, you shall not put the heel of the national Democracy upon it to crush it. We ask that you shall not insult us in your convention, either by offering us as the nominee a man who has denounced us as traitors to our country, or by passing any resolutions which shall thus denounce us in words or by implication. Leave us free from taunt and insult; give us a fair Democratic nomination, and we will march up to it like men, and we will be, where we have always been in our Democratic struggles, not in the rear, but in the advance column. We will bear you on to victory; and when victory has been achieved, you may take the spoils and divide them among yourselves. We want no office. Will the Union party give this pledge? Of course they will not, for they are committed against your nominees in advance, unless certain demands of theirs shall be complied with—and among them is the ostracism of the State-Rights men. They propose to read out the great body of the Southern Democrats, and then I suppose make up the deficiency with Whigs. When the national Democracy relies on Whig votes to elect its President, it had better "hang its harp upon the willow."

The State-Rights Democrats will never be found sneaking into any party. We ask nothing of our national brethren. If we support the nominees, as we expect to do, it will be done, not for pay, but as a labor of love—love for old party associations; love of principles, which we hope are not yet quite extinct, and which, we are slow to believe, will be extinguished at Baltimore. If we fail to support the nominees, it will be because they are such as ought not to have been made.

We make no professions of love for the Union. Let our acts speak. We have stood by the Constitution and by the rights of the States, as defined by our fathers. If this be enmity to the Union, then have we been its enemies. We have not made constant proclamation of our devotion to the Union, because we have seen no attempt to destroy it, and have therefore seen no necessity for defending it. The danger is not that the States will secede from the Union, but rather that the Union will absorb the reserved rights of the States, and consolidate them as one State. Against this danger we have raised our warning voice. It has not been heeded; and if disaster befall us from this quarter, we at least are not to blame.

Laudation of the Union is a cheap commodity. It is found on the tongue of every demagogue in the country. I by no means say that all who laud the Union are demagogues; but I do say that there is not a demagogue in the Union who does not laud it. It is the bone and sinew, the soul and body of all their speeches. With them; empty shouts for the Union, the glorious Union, is a passport to favor; and beyond the point of carrying a popular election, they have no ideas of patriotism, and care not a fig for the ultimate triumph of our federative system.

Mr. Chairman, there are many other things to which I should have been very glad to make allusion, but I am admonished that my time is so nearly out, that I can have no opportunity to take up another point. I shall be happy, however, in the few moments that remain of my time to answer any questions that gentlemen may desire to submit. I supposed, from the disposition manifested by gentlemen a few moments ago to interrogate me, that I should necessarily be compelled to answer some questions, or seem to shrink from the responsibility of doing so. I therefore hurried on to the conclusion of what I deemed it absolutely necessary to say, for the purpose of answering those questions. I am now ready.

After a moment's pause, Mr. B. continued: Gentlemen seem not disposed to press their inquiries, and my time being almost out, I resume my seat.

Mr. WILCOX next obtained the floor, and said: Really, sir, when my honorable friend rose to address the House upon Mississippi politics, I confess the fact that a spirit of trepidation seized me. I had been informed that I was to be devoured this morning by my honorable friend—I say friend, for he is my friend, and as such I regard him. But really the storm is passed, and here I am. His missiles have been weak, and they have fallen harmless at my feet.

The honorable gentleman takes the position that this Disunion or Secession party in Mississippi exists only as a mere chimera in the brains of certain men in that State—that it is only a chimera, a mere phantom—that there is no party in favor of disunion or secession in Mississippi, or in the United States. I thought that gentleman had too high a regard for truth to make a declaration so baseless of truth.

Mr. BROWN. To prevent all misapprehension, I desire to ask my colleague if he means to say that I have been guilty of a falsehood? For that inference might be left upon the minds of some by his language.

Mr. WILCOX. I have spoken explicitly enough. My language will bear no misconstruction. None whatever.

Mr. BROWN. Do you mean to say that what I have said is false?

Mr. WILCOX. If you say that there was no party in Mississippi in favor of secession or disunion, you say what is false.

Here Mr. Brown, who was standing near Mr. Wilcox, struck him in the face. The blow was returned, and a violent personal conflict ensued between the parties. The committee was in an instant thrown into the greatest confusion. The greater portion of the members left their seats and rushed towards the scene of conflict. Loud and continued cries for the Sergeant-at-Arms (who was temporarily absent) to arrest the parties. The chairman of the committee [Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut] called to order in vain. In the midst of the noise and excitement, Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, moved that the committee rise; which motion was put and carried. The chairman vacated, and the Speaker resumed the chair, and called to order. The disorder continuing, Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, demanded that the persons creating the disorder should be arrested.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has sent for the Sergeant-at-Arms.

[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!" and great confusion.]

Mr. McLANAHAN. Has the chairman of the committee reported?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear no proposition until order is restored. The Sergeant-at-Arms, and the officers of the House under him, will perform their duty by taking into custody those who are still disposed to be disorderly.

After some minutes, the members who had repaired to the scene of action succeeded in separating the parties in collision, and order was partially restored; and

The chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly joint resolution No. 2, providing for the continuation of the work on the extension of the Capitol, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move the usual resolution, that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the subject last before it shall cease in half an hour after that committee shall have resumed its consideration.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. McLANAHAN. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. McLANAHAN. Well, I hope the House will not pass it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker—

[Cries of "Lay it on the table!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to lay it on the table, for I am in favor of the resolution. But I will suggest to the mover whether, as there was a member upon the floor when the committee rose, the House have the right to take from him his hour. I hope the time will at least be prolonged, so as to cover that speech.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have no doubt of the right of the House to stop debate, for it is usually done when somebody is entitled to the floor. I will modify the resolution, to extend the time to one hour, however, if gentlemen desire it, and upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. FICKLIN. I would suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McNAIR] has not been heard in reply.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. My speech was in reply to his.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move that this House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. McMULLIN. Is it in order to move that the resolution to close debate do lie upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. McMULLIN. I submit that motion.

Mr. STANLEY. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The resolution was then reported, as follows:

Resolved, That all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the resolution of the Senate No. 17, to provide for the construction of the work on the extension of the Capitol, shall cease in one hour after its consideration is resumed; and if the committee shall not come to a conclusion sooner upon the same, it shall then proceed to vote upon such amendments as shall be pending or offered to the same, and shall then report it to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon by the committee.

Mr. FITCH. If the debate be closed by the resolution, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the select committee, [Mr. McNAIR,] be entitled to an hour under the rule to close the debate?

The SPEAKER. He will not; but the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who reported the bill, will be entitled to an hour.

The yeas and nays were then ordered; and the question being taken, the result was—yeas 78, nays 102—as follow:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, John Appleton, Averett, Beale, Bragg, Breckinridge, Buell, E. THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

PUBLISHED AT WASHINGTON, BY JOHN C. RIVES.—TERMS $3 FOR THIS SESSION.

32D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, MARCH 15, 1852.

NEW SERIES....No. 47.

John Moore, Morehead, Newton, Olds, Outlaw, Samuel W. Parker, Penniman, Perkins, Phelps, Porter, Price, Richardson, Robinson, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Smith, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Tuck, Walsh, Ward, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Williams, and Yates—102.

So the resolution was not laid on the table.

Mr. BROWN. I desire the unanimous consent of the House to make a remark or two, in justice to myself and the House. It shall be very brief.

Mr. Speaker, during the six years that I have occupied a seat upon this floor, I am not sensible that I have, before, once violated or committed a breach upon the rules of this House. I deeply and painfully regret that there should have been a necessity for my doing so now. I shall not recur to the circumstances under which I was induced to perpetrate an act in the presence of this House, which I know was a breach of its rules and a violation of parliamentary decorum; a thing which I certainly should not have been guilty of, except from what I conceived to be a very pressing and extraordinary necessity. I apologize to the House, sincerely, earnestly, and from my heart. Sir, I apologize to the representatives of the people, and express to them my deep and heartfelt regret that I should have been engaged in any transaction which must necessarily reflect discredit upon the councils of the nation. More than this, under the present circumstances, I cannot do. I trust the House will receive my apology. I throw myself upon the indulgence of the country, and ask its pardon also; and I offer the guarantee which a life passed in the service of my country affords, that a similar occurrence will not again take place, unless under some other very pressing and very extraordinary circumstances. I am the last man to violate, willfully, the smallest rule of the House, and much less to violate its order and its decorum so flagrantly, as to attract the attention of the House, and, as I painfully fear, the attention of the country also. I have nothing more to say.

Mr. WILCOX. It is a matter of heartfelt sorrow to me, that I have to rise so soon after having become identified with this body, to make an apology for a breach of its rules.

During my identity with this House, I have endeavored, so far as in me lies, to discharge the duties devolving upon me as a representative, and to comply strictly and rigidly with the rules and regulations that govern the House. And, that the quiet and repose of this great deliberative Hall should have been disturbed under circumstances of the kind and character which transpired a few minutes ago, I repeat, is to me a matter of heartfelt sorrow. I tender an apology to this House. I mean, I feel, what I say. It is the language of my heart. I intended no disrespect to the representatives of this nation; none whatever. I am incapable of it. And now permit me, once and forever, to say that I desire to enter a disclaimer to that effect.

But, sir, as my honorable colleague has alluded indirectly to this unpleasant difficulty, permit me to say that I considered the wrong and outrage offered me, by him, justified me in the course I pursued.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I move that the gentlemen from Mississippi [Messrs. Brown and Wilcox] be excused.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to suggest to my friend from Arkansas, that there has been no proceeding against those gentlemen; and therefore there is no necessity that such a motion should be made.

Mr. JOHNSON. I make the inquiry of the Chair. Did not the Speaker, under the direction of the House, order these men to be arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms?

The SPEAKER. The Chair issued an order for the arrest of those continuing in disorder; but the Sergeant-at-Arms was not present at the time, and no arrest was made.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then no motion is necessary. I withdraw my motion.

PROPOSITIONS TO ADJOURN OVER.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move that when this House adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. STANLY demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and decided in the negative—yeas 67, nays 110—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernethy, John Appleton, William Appleton, Babcock, Beale, Bennett, John H. Boyd, Bragg, Breckinridge, George H. Brown, Busby, E. Carington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Carter, Chastain, Colcock, Cottman, Culom, Dawson, Dinnick, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Floyd, Gilmore, Green, Hamilton, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, James Johnson, John Johnson, Landry, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, McDonald, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, John Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Orr, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Phelps, Porter, Riddle, Sackett, Schoonmaker, Scurry, Smart, Smith, Snow, St. Martin, Sutherland, Wallace, Ward, Addison White, Wilcox, Wildrick, Woodward, and Yates—67.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Allison, Ashe, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bartlett, Bell, Bibb, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Caskey, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Dunham, Durkee, Eastman, Evans, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Thomas J. D. Fuller, Giddings, Goodnow, Gorman, Grow, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Henn, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Mason, McKelvie, McLanahan, Meade, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Morrison, Murray, Newton, Olds, Outlaw, Penniman, Perkins, Polk, Price, Rantoul, Richardson, Robbins, Schoolcraft, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Stanly, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, George W. Thompson, Thurston, Townshend, Tuck, Walsh, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Alexander White, and Williams—110.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn, and there were, upon a division—ayes 44; noes not counted.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the proposition to close debate.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Has the House seconded the call for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution, and upon that the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. At what hour does that resolution propose to close debate?

The SPEAKER. In one hour after the committee shall have resumed the consideration of the subject.

Mr. JONES. Then I move to amend, by substituting to-morrow, at half past one o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order, the previous question having been demanded.

The question then being upon seconding the previous question,

Mr. FOWLER called for tellers; which were ordered, and Messrs. CLINGMAN and CHANDLER appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 37.

So the previous question received a second; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the resolution, and it was agreed to.

Mr. CLINGMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CABELL, of Florida. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. CLEVELAND. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CABELL] is also a privileged question, and must take precedence of the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CABELL. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SMART. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that this is a question which must be put before that of the motion to adjourn, under a positive rule of the House, although both are in order, and privileged questions.

Mr. MASON called for the yeas and nays upon the motion of Mr. SMART; and they were ordered.

Mr. SMART. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MASON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and there were, upon a division—ayes 55, noes 97; so the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the special order.

Mr. ORR. Is it in order to move, now, that when the House adjourn, it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. ORR. Then I make that motion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. PHELPS demanded tellers upon the yeas and nays; which were ordered, and Messrs. ROBBINS and CLINGMAN appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 39; noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ORR. As many members have to go to the Departments on business, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I renew the motion, and with the distinct understanding that it will not be withdrawn.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order to renew and withdraw a motion consecutively, as soon as the yeas and nays are called, and thereby delay public business?

The SPEAKER. It is not within the power of the Chair to do more than to enforce the rules of the House. The motion is clearly in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the House will put down these efforts to defeat public business.

Mr. HEBARD. The question I propose is this: whether this is one of those questions which can be repeated successively—the question of the adjournment over?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is of the opinion that it is improperly repeated, the Chair will hear him upon that subject, and he may take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The Chair has no doubt but that the motion is in order. There was no vote taken upon the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR], to adjourn over until Monday. It was withdrawn. It was as competent for the gentleman in front of the Chair to make that motion, as it was for the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HEBARD. That is not the point I make. It has been once voted upon. The question is, whether it can be made again the same day?

The SPEAKER. If voted upon this morning, there may be a different reason this evening for adopting it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will remind the Chair that it was voted upon and rejected, under the call of the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. Of that the Chair was aware; but would the gentleman insist it is not in order for a gentleman to submit a motion to adjourn more than once during the day?

Mr. GENTRY. The point of order is, whereas the House refused to adjourn this morning, it cannot adjourn this evening. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEBARD. That is not my question.
Mr. MEADE. I ask for the reading of the 48th rule.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My remark was in reply to the observation of the Speaker, that if it had been voted upon, it would not be now in order; and I wish to remind the Chair of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not understand the Chair. The Chair had reference to the proposition made by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] If it had been voted upon, the Chair would have decided, immediately upon the announcement of the vote, that it would not be in order to renew it; but business intervening, it would be in order a dozen times during the day.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I agree with the Chair there.

The SPEAKER. The 48th rule, as requested by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MEADE,] will be read.

The Clerk read the rule as follows:

"A motion to adjourn, and a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, shall be always in order."

Mr. ROBBINS demanded the yeas and nays; which were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the motion was decided in the negative—yeas 58, nays 107—as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Allison, John Appleton, William Appleton, Ashe, Babcock, Bennett, John H. Boyd, Breckinridge, George H. Brown, Busby, E. Carrington Cabell, Lewis D. Campbell, Dimmick, Dunham, Edgerton, Colcock, Cullom, Dawson, Gentry, Green, Hamilton, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hillyer, Hobaday, James Johnson, John Johnson, Landry, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, John Moore, Morehead, Nabers, Olds, Orr, Andrew Parker, Samuel W. Parker, Peaslee, Phelps, Porter, Richardson, Riddle, Sourry, Smart, Smith, St. Martin, Wallace, Ward, and Alexander White—58.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Averett, Thomas H. Bayly, Barrere, Bartlett, Bell, Bibbhaus, Brenton, Briggs, Brooks, Buell, Burrows, Joseph Cable, Caskie, Chandler, Chapman, Churchwell, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Curtis, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Evans, Ficklin, Fitch, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Giddings, Goodenow, Gorman, Grow, Hall, Harper, Haws, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hendricks, Horsford, Houston, Howard, Thomas M. Howe, Thomas Y. How, Ives, Jackson, Jenkins, Andrew Johnson, Robert W. Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Preston King, Kuhse, Kurtz, Mason, McLanahan, Meacham, Meade, Miller, Melony, Henry D. Moore, Morrison, Murray, Newton, Fenniman, Perkins, Polk, Price, Rantoul, Robbins, Savers, Schoolcraft, Schoonmaker, Scudder, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Snow, Stanley, Benjamin Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham F. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Geo. W. Thompson, Thurston, Townsend, Walsh, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Wilcox, Wilbrick, Williams, Woodward, and Yates—107.

So the House refused to adjourn till Monday.

Mr. STANTON. As it is the desire of the House, I move we adjourn; which motion was agreed to.

And the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania: Three memorials from citizens of the county of Philadelphia, asking an extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. STEVENS, of Pennsylvania: The remonstrance of a large number of citizens of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. CHANDLER: Four memorials, one signed by 105 builders and lumber merchants; one signed by Joseph West and 116 others; one signed by members of the Select and Common Councils and Board of Trade; portwardens, alderman, and recorder; one signed by A. Clark and 122 others, all citizens of Philadelphia, remonstrating against a renewal of patent for Woodworth's planing machine.

Also, two memorials signed by 115 citizens of Philadelphia, asking for a renewal of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. SIBLEY: Memorial of 156 citizens of the United States, residing in New York, Pennsylvania, and other States, members of "the Western Farm and Village Association," praying a grant of 160 acres of land to each individual, signed on condition that actual improvement be made thereon previous to the 15th day of July, 1852; and that said memorialists be allowed to select these grants from any unappropriated public lands between Lake Michigan and the Rocky Mountains.

By Mr. WASHBURN: The remonstrance of Henry Richardson and others of Oldtown, Maine, against the renewal of Woodworth's patent.

By Mr. ALLISON: Three petitions signed by C. F. Speyer and 252 others, citizens of Beaver county, Pennsylvania, on the subject of intervention.

Also, the petition of Robert J. Hammond and 153 others, citizens of Washington county, for an act to prohibit transportation and delivery of the mail on the Lord's day.

By Mr. ROBBINS: The petition of Patrick Sharp and 36 other citizens of the county of Philadelphia, asking Congress to modify the bounty land act of September 25, 1850, so as to give to each of the persons intended to be benefited thereby, and to the seamen and marines who served in said wars, not less than 160 acres of land.

Also, on the same subject, the petition of Jacob Moser and 72 others, citizens of the city and county of Philadelphia.

By Mr. CAMPBELL, of Illinois, the memorial of David C. Riggs and 21 others, citizens of the State of Illinois, praying for a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Burlington to the Missouri river.

On motion by Mr. CLEVELAND, the petitions of Messrs. Frink, Chew & Co., and others, and the accompanying papers, relating to seamen engaged in the whale fishery, and the erection of a marine hospital at New London, Connecticut, were taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion by Mr. PORTER, the petition of McKnight, Brent & Wood was taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAMILTON: The petition of Gideon Bouty and others, citizens of Frederick county, Maryland, remonstrating against the extension of the Woodworth patent.

By Mr. PENNIMAN: The memorial of 400 citizens of Michigan, asking a grant of alternate sections of land in aid of the Oakland and Ottawa railroad.

Also, the proceedings of a meeting of the Detroit bar, and a memorial thereof, asking increased compensation to the district judge of the United States for the district of Michigan.

By Mr. DOTY: The petition of settlers on the Menominee Purchase, in Wisconsin, for a preemption of three years to the lands occupied by them.

By Mr. BRENTON: The petition of R. Morgan French, asking compensation as special mail agent, from San Francisco to New York.

Also, the petition of Isaac Covert, deputy marshal in Indiana, asking additional compensation for taking the census.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 13, 1852.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. C. M. BUTLER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSRS. WILCOX AND BROWN.

Mr. POLK. I rise to a privileged question. I am gratified to be able to state to the House that the unfortunate difficulty between the two representatives from Mississippi [Messrs. Wilcox and Brown] has been adjusted in a manner highly creditable to both parties, and that they now occupy the same position of friendship which existed between them previous to the unpleasant affair of yesterday. At the request of the friends of both parties the matter was referred to the honorable gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. JOHNSON] and myself, for adjustment.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] upon yesterday, that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole upon the state of the Union, on the special order.

RESOLUTIONS OF STATE LEGISLATURES.

Mr. PRICE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey in relation to the producers of coal, and the manufacture of iron and glass.

There was no objection, and the resolutions were received, read, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. KING, of New York, asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the House to introduce joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York, against the extension of the Woodworth patent; which were referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand the first business in order is upon the pending motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I wish to inquire if the subject under consideration before that committee is a special order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DANIEL. If the House refuse to go into the Committee of the Whole, I suppose that it will be competent to postpone that special order with the view of going into Committee of the Whole House upon the private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It will be in order.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope, then, that the motion pending will not prevail.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist, as this motion now pending is the first business in order, that it be put, and take precedence of every other motion. I object to any other proceeding until that is disposed of.

CONTESTED ELECTION FROM NEW MEXICO.

Mr. PHELPS. I rise merely to suggest to the House that I had hoped that the question of privilege which I called up the other day I should be able to have considered to-day; but if the House will consent to its now being taken up with a view to postponement to a day certain, I shall be satisfied. I was not present on yesterday when an attempt was made by the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. WRIGHTMAN] to call up that question. As soon as the signal had been given that the House had assembled, I left the room of the Committee of Ways and Means with the resolution calling it up for consideration. I am perfectly willing, however, to have the question laid over until Monday.

A MEMBER. Let it lie, and it can be called up at any time.

Mr. PHELPS. I am, sometimes retained in the committee room, and, of course, cannot be here precisely at the time of the reading of the Journal. I am perfectly willing that it shall be postponed until Monday.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, that of next week the portion which will not be taken up in the consideration of private matters is allowed for the completion of the special order and the disposition of the deficiency bill. If this case of contested election intervene, it is entirely possible, and indeed probable, that the whole time thus allowed for public business would be consumed in discussion. I therefore hope that the contested election will be postponed for a more remote day.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I make this point of order: There is nothing before the House but the pending motion. I do not understand the gentleman from Missouri to have insisted upon taking up the privileged question. It will go over, of course, until Monday, or some other time.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Missouri presses his proposition to consider the subject, it being a privileged question, the Chair thinks that it will be competent to take the sense of the House in regard to its disposal; but it is competent also for the House to postpone it or to pass to other business at any time. That matter will be decided, the Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, by a vote upon the proposition now pending to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PHELPS. Very well.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY ROOM.

Mr. WILDRICK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled "An act to provide for the repair of the Congressional Library Room lately destroyed by fire;" which received the signature of the Speaker.

The question was then put upon the motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and it was decided in the affirmative.

THE EXTENSION OF THE CAPITOL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is the special order, being "Senate joint resolution No. 2, authorizing the architect of the Capitol to continue in employment the mechanics, laborers, and others, employed upon the two wings thereof," upon which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILCOX] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DUNCAN. If the gentleman from Mississippi would give away for a few minutes while I make an explanation in reference to the bill now under consideration, I would be obliged to him.

Mr. WILCOX. I will say to my honorable friend that I will reserve sufficient time in which he may say all that he desires, and ask that I may have notice from him. I regret exceedingly, Mr. Chairman, to say anything further upon this subject than that which I addressed to the House a few days ago; but were I to fold my arms and sit quietly by and permit the speech of the honorable member from Mississippi [Mr. BROWN] to go unanswered, in all probability the charge could with some propriety or impunity be made against me, that I had uttered from my place upon this floor things that were untrue, so far as Mississippi politics are concerned. Further, that my Democracy might be impeached from the remarks which the honorable gentleman saw fit to submit. I simply ask to say to my Democratic friends to-day, that I have always been a Democrat—that I have never hedged to the right or the left, but am a Tennessee Democrat. The first lessons of Democracy that I ever learned were from the late lamented James K. Polk of Tennessee, and the first political speech that I ever delivered in my life, when a boy, was written by that immortal statesman. I was raised in Tennessee. I love her statesmen, I love her politics, and I rejoice to say this morning that I stand with her upon these questions—that I stand with the Democracy of Tennessee upon the late compromise measures passed by the Congress of the United States. Here, sir, is her platform. I hold it in my hand. I went to Mississippi to seek out an honest livelihood; shortly after having been in that State I took the stump as a speaker of the Democratic party, and labored arduously in the campaign of 1844, and afterwards in 1848. I have ever been a faithful, uncompromising, unyielding Democrat. I was elected secretary of the Senate of that State, and reelected, as a Democrat. When our country was involved in war with Mexico, it was charged upon the Democratic party as being a Democratic war, and that that immortal statesman of Tennessee had plunged us into it, notwithstanding my patriotism was excited, yet I am free to confess that my partisan predilections coerced and compelled me to offer my services in behalf of my country—to fight this country out of that Democratic war.

The gentleman seems to think that I now stand outside of the Democratic party. Why, it is known to everybody that these compromise measures were Democratic measures, notwithstanding they received the support and advocacy of the Whigs; but the majority of members advocating and voting for these measures were Democrats. Now, let us see how I stand. I look north of Mason and Dixon's line, and I see all the great statesmen of the North, including Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Seymour, Mr. Clifford, Mr. Dallas, Mr. Douglas, and Mr. Dickinson—ay, sir, all the great statesmen of the Democratic party—not only indorsing, but acquiescing in every feature of that compromise. I look South, and I find distinguished Southern Democrats sustaining and acquiescing in the compromise measures. Further, I find that every convention of the Democratic party that has met since the passage of the compromise have indorsed it. I acquiesce in these compromise measures. My Democracy prompts me to acquiesce in them as a final settlement. In doing so, I have not lost my identity with the great national Democratic party of the United States. I delivered a speech a few days ago, in which I endeavored to be bold and pointed, reviewing Mississippi politics. I spoke from the record. I spoke from the message of the Governor, as submitted to the Legislature of the State. I spoke from the history of that State, and quoted article upon article from the press of that State, and yet the honorable gentleman from Mississippi proceeds to answer my address—contradicting what I have said. So far as General Quitman is concerned, he says he had it from the mouth of that gentleman that he did not oppose General Jackson. Now, I want no further difficulty or collision with that honorable gentleman, but I feel proud that I have here with me, upon the present occasion, some old documents, and they are dangerous things. I feel proud that I can submit to this House the address of the Democratic party of Mississippi, put forth to the people of that State, in which General Quitman is charged with being a nullifier and a secessionist; the author of the nullification and secession addresses; the president of their meetings; the warm personal and political friend of Mr. Adams; with supporting him in 1824 and 1828; and as the bitter and unqualified enemy of General Jackson up to 1836. Here is the address of the Democratic party of the State of Mississippi. Let the gentleman join issue with the Democratic party of the State of Mississippi upon that point. Why did not General Quitman, in those days, when our country was in peril and danger, deny these things? They never were denied; and for the first time have I ever heard that he was not the supporter of Mr. Adams.

But the honorable gentleman raises a great hue and cry about the mixed ticket of the Union party in the State of Mississippi. He studiously avoids saying anything about the mixed ticket of his own party—of State-Rights secession Whigs being nominated for the convention and the Legislature by Democratic State-Rights conventions. He says nothing about his party abandoning the Democratic doctrine of free trade—of excluding by legislative enactment all goods manufactured north of Mason and Dixon's line. He says nothing about a Democratic State-Rights secession Senate electing the honorable John J. Guion, an open and avowed Whig, President of the Senate, on account of his indorsement of the secession, disunion doctrines of the State-Rights party—and nothing about having run him afterwards for Chancellor of the State. Yes, sir, a secession Senate, contrary to the usages and customs of the party, elected a Whig President of the Senate, who became Governor of the State on the resignation of Governor Quitman. For the first time in nineteen years Mississippi was placed under the rule of a Whig Governor—and that, too, by a secession Senate, a majority of whom were Democrats. May I not be permitted to exclaim with the Scotch bard

"O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see ourselves as ithers see us!
'Twad frae mony a blunder free us,
An' foolish notion."

Here, sir, was an example set by a Democratic Senate; which Senate now refuses to go into the election of a United States Senator for the long term, riding over the constitution and laws of the State, and standing out in perverse opposition to the express wishes of the people. If this is Democracy, God save me from such Democracy! Throughout my whole speech I spoke from the record. Did I stand with the Democracy of my State in 1834? What was Democracy then, should be good Democracy now. In that day and hour, when our country was imperiled in consequence of the doctrines of secession and nullification which were running riot throughout our country, the Democratic party of the State (and here is the journal) of Mississippi that met in convention to sustain General Jackson, denounced the doctrine of nullification and secession as a heresy unknown to the Constitution. I plant myself upon those resolutions. Here are the journals also of the Legislature that assembled—the Democratic Legislature; it sustained General Jackson, his proclamation and all. I stand upon those resolutions, and the Union party of the State of Mississippi stand upon those resolutions.

But the honorable gentleman says there was no Disunion party in Mississippi; there was no party there in favor of secession! Why, I refer you to my address delivered a few days ago. I now say that whoever in this House, or elsewhere, says that there was no such party in the State of Mississippi in favor of disunion, misconceives the history of the country. Upon this question the honorable gentleman and myself differ; his impressions are to the contrary. What are the facts? There was a large Democratic State-Rights secession dinner given to General Quitman, at which there were thousands of persons assembled. At that meeting a letter was received from Colonel Pickens, of South Carolina, in which we find the following:

"Are we to stand by and see these monstrous outrages perpetrated, and raise no arm for resistance? Is Mississippi to stand by and say to South Carolina, Strike, but we cannot? Did she stand back at Buena Vista for any one to lead? No! She flashed her gleaming sabre high over the perilous ridge of battle, and her waving plume led where death and danger stood. It may become her sacred duty to walk the plank alone; and if so, I trust she will walk it like a queen that never quailed before earthly power, although it may lead over a gulf of fire and blood. We have but one path to tread—the path of duty, lead where it may. Mississippi, with such men as Quitman and Davis to lead her to the breach, can do anything she dare to maintain her rights. Brave men can cut their way to independence, if needs be, with sword in hand."

He concludes with this sentiment:

"MISSISSIPPI AND SOUTH CAROLINA: May they at present entwine for themselves, as sisters, a civic wreath as imperishable and as glorious as the bright tunic of their gallant sons that rose in splendor from the plains of Buena Vista and Churubusco."

When this letter was read, it was received with shouts of approbation. About the time of this celebrated Quitman festival, a similar one was held in South Carolina. This toast was given:

"JOHN A. QUITMAN: The first President of the Southern Republic, in all the illustrious line to follow him, there never will be found a clearer head or a braver heart."

Yet the honorable gentleman rises in his place upon this floor, and says that there was no party in Mississippi in favor of secession or disunion. Again, one of the judges of the high court of errors and appeals of Mississippi, when addressing a State-Rights convention, was reported to have said, "that he thanked his God that there was no such a God in his political pantheon as the Union God."

Why, the history of the country does not comport with the remarks which the gentleman has made. I care not for the impression which has been made upon his mind. He may have his impression of the facts, but I recollect the newspapers of the day charged him with saying, "I call God to witness, that I am for resistance;" and he called upon the people of his district "to trust to God and keep their powder dry."

During my canvass upon one occasion, while I was addressing the people, and calling upon them to submit as good citizens to the laws of their Government, two hundred men upon horses surrounded the place where I was speaking, with a banner unfurled to the breeze. Was it the old star-spangled banner of our country? Oh, no, not at all. It was a flag with two stripes upon it—one for Mississippi and one for South Carolina. And in the midst of my speech three cheers were given by them for South Carolina and three cheers for Mississippi. No disunion party in the State of Mississippi!—no secession party in the State of Mississippi! I have heard men, in my own State, of this party, hurl imprecations upon this Government, saying it should be sunk fifty fathoms in hell. No party in favor of disunion—in favor of secession?

If I had time, I could read you resolutions from almost every county in the State, where this party took the ground, if the North refused to run the line of 36° 30' through California, that they were in favor of the dissolution of the Union. I referred you to those resolutions in part the other day; and yet, with those resolutions, the message of Governor Quitman, and the proceedings of the convention of the State of Mississippi, before the honorable gentleman's eyes, he says there was no party in the State of Mississippi in favor of secession or disunion. I have seen meetings, time and time again, where they had their transparencies with Secession and Southern Confederacy written upon them.

The honorable gentleman asks me some questions. He asks me if I was ever in favor of the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions? Did I indorse the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions? Oh, yes, with all my heart I have ever indorsed those resolutions. The gentleman cannot with any propriety refer to those resolutions to sustain his sinking cause. The doctrine of the peaceable and constitutional right of a State to secede from the Union cannot be deduced from them. It would be a shameful perversion not only of the spirit but the very letter of those resolutions. The author of them, in 1833, with all the amplitude of his power, and the profundity of his vast conceptions, reviewed them, and what was the conclusion to which he came? He said this constitutional right was wholly unwarranted, and that secession was an extra and ultra constitutional remedy. These are facts of such public notoriety that they cannot be gainsayed. It is in the recollection of the older members of this House, that these resolutions were adopted in consequence of the passage of certain obnoxious acts of Congress. And these resolutions amounted to nothing more than a simple protest by the parties aggrieved, so as to produce a repeal of those measures or obtain amendments of the Constitution. Every State in the Union indorsed and responded to them. I defy any gentleman to point to a single State which, in responding to them, "hinted at anything being contained in them looking, however remotely, towards secession."

Mr. Jefferson agreed with Mr. Madison; and their joint opinion is contained in Mr. Madison's letter to Mr. Everett, in 1833. I would refer that honorable gentleman to this letter, and if he would read it, it would prove useful to him. But the honorable gentleman says that he will not ask the Baltimore Convention to indorse his peculiar views of the doctrine of State-Rights. Oh, no, I do not think he will. I do not think that the gentleman will have the effrontery—I speak it in no unkind sense—to rise in that body and request the passage of a resolution indorsing his peculiar notions of State-Rights. No, the day and hour will never come, when the national Democratic party will incorporate in its creed of faith this doctrine of the peaceable and constitutional right of a State to secede from the Union. Never. But should such a proposition be presented to the Baltimore Convention, it will be scouted from that convention with indignation.

But, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding it has been my pleasure, in days past, to regard the honorable gentleman as a Democrat, to vote for him as a Democrat, I must confess that I have been driven to the conclusion to suspect the genuineness of his Democracy. When the question was asked the honorable gentleman by Mr. CHASTAIN, of Georgia, if he would support Lewis Cass, of Michigan, for the Presidency, if nominated, he refused to answer the question. The boldness and independence of character which should ever signalize a Southern gentleman upon that, as any other question, seem to have forsaken the honorable gentleman. Why, sir, I have no hesitancy in saying that I will support the old veteran. His manliness of character, his spotless integrity, commend him to the nation as one of her brightest jewels. The accomplished scholar, the able statesman, and skillful diplomatist, should he be nominated, the nation will look to him as a pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night, to guide her in her onward and upward march to usefulness, to honor, and to greatness. I am a Democrat, sir, in whom there is no hypocrisy, no deceit, disguise, or dissimulation. There is none in the principles of the party. I go further, and say that if the Baltimore Convention should nominate Sam Houston, of Texas, the old Tennessee Democrat, I, with nineteen twentieths of the Tennesseans, (and their name is Legion,) will give a loud Amen! He is a Jackson Democrat, and notwithstanding the extreme vicissitudes of life through which he has passed, like the Hebrew children, he stands unscathed by the fiery furnace. Look at this man. When a boy he was commissioned by General Jackson, and side by side, he fought the battles of his country. In manhood he was elected Governor of Tennessee. In after life, when clouds lowered over him and adversity came, he emigrated to Texas, where he redeemed a nation from oppression, from anarchy, and from priestcraft. Yes, sir, with a handful of men, he accomplished more than the Government of the United States with the Army and Navy at its back. He conquered Mexico; took her President a prisoner; established a Republic; was elected its President, and afterwards presented it to this Government as a part of its vast domain. Oh, yes, sir, the Highland harpers never rallied more eagerly to the standard of Rhoderick Dhu, at his bagpipe blast, than I would to the support of Sam Houston for the Presidency. And if Mr. Buchanan, of the old law-abiding, Constitution-loving, and right-recognizing Keystone of the Arch, should be presented, I, as a Democrat, will support him, will vote for him, and fight for him, if necessary. I regard him as one of the main pillars in our national edifice. If the political economist and able jurist, George M. Dallas, is presented, I will support him. If the warm-hearted, chivalric, and generous Dickinson is presented, I will support him. If the young giant of Illinois is presented, my heart will leap with joy to sustain him. And for the best of reasons. Should our old ship of State ever lose her ballast, split her planks, and spring a leak, he knows what a hammer, a saw, a chisel, and an auger were made for.

A MEMBER. Would you support Marcy?

Mr. WILCOX. Yes, sir. I would do nothing else but support Marcy. I am a Democrat—the majority of the people of Mississippi are Democrats. The patriotic Whigs of my district supported me as a Democrat—they will support me again as a Union Democrat—I know nothing else but Democracy. The best evidence of Democracy which a man can furnish, is to be willing to abide the nomination of the National Democratic Convention.

The distinguished gentlemen to whom I have alluded in connection with the Presidency, are all Union, acquiescing, compromise Democrats, and stars of the first magnitude—diamonds of the first water. It would be invidious in me to make a distinction. I cannot find it in my heart to do it. It is the business of the convention, and to it

I refer them. A sense of duty has constrained me in trespassing upon the House to this extent, and I will here conclude.

Mr. BEALE next obtained the floor, and said: Mr. Chairman, I feel impelled, for the first time in my life, although I have been a member of this House for many years, to intrude some few observations upon the attention of this committee. There is a bill lying upon your table, which proposes an appropriation of $500,000 for the continuation of the wings of the Capitol. A select committee was appointed, early in this session, whose duty it was to examine into the permanence, stability, and quality of the foundation work to support the superstructure that is intended to be put upon it. Now, sir, I hold that the House ought to know what are the sentiments of that committee, because if they do not, they will legislate in the dark in relation to the appropriation of a very large amount of money. That, and that alone, impels me to give the information which I possess on the subject.

I hope I shall be pardoned for referring to the observations which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] made on yesterday in relation to this subject. That gentleman gave us his learning in architecture, and told us of his long experience as a mechanic, and he chose to depreciate the talents and probity of the committee.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I depreciated neither the talents nor the probity of the committee.

Mr. BEALE. The gentleman was present, I think, when the excavations were made in the wall, and I, too, was there, and he observed on yesterday, that the committee were men of such diminutive structure of mind and feeling, that they were capable only of observing specks and blots upon the great superstructures of genius and talent. [Laughter.] Now, whether I come within this lamentable category, I will not determine. I am willing that my position in this House should be judged by those who have known me since I have been here. I make no pretensions to talent, but I do make pretensions to probity.

Permit me, sir, in a very succinct manner, to say what I know in relation to the examinations which have been made by the committee, and which I think the House should know before they vote an appropriation of $500,000 for continuing the work on the wings of the Capitol.

The condition of my mind when I came to this work, was this: upon a survey of the outward appearance of the wall, I had two objections to it; the first was, that I thought the stone was too small for the magnitude of the wall, and the second was, that there were very many long lines of stone running longitudinally with the wall, which did not appear to me to have breakers to sustain them.

Well, sir, this matter was inquired into by the committee. We had architect, builders, masons, and all that description of persons before us, and they all agreed on several great facts. The first was, that the best wall which could be built, was of hewn stone, where each strata should be laid down with a little mortar on top, and the next strata breaking against it. That was the best wall that could be built. The next best wall that could be built, was where there were leaders and stretchers run across the wall, and that in the next strata heavy stones should be laid upon the junctions and smaller stones upon the superficial area. That is the next best wall that could be built. There was particular inquiry made in the committee as to the mode in which this wall had been built up, and the universal opinion was that it was safely built and in the manner last indicated. We had the evidence of architects, builders, and masons—men who were not interested in the work, who had bid for it and been disappointed of getting employment, who swore to the durability and excellence of the wall. Well, sir, I must confess, such is my confidence in human nature, that my objections were removed, especially when on speaking to Mr. Walter, the architect, in relation to these long lines of stone running longitudinally with the wall, he asked me "did you ever know a wall to crack longitudinally? Does it not always crack at right angles?"

But, sir, the committee made an excavation some ten or twelve feet long, and from two and a half to three feet deep, and that excavation realized the worst anticipations that could possibly have been formed. There was a stone running along the outside of from six to twelve or fourteen inches thick, and the middle was filled up with rubble and angular stone, with bad mortar, presenting actually the worst character of wall that could have a decent outside appearance.

Now, I do not pretend to say that this foundation will not support a structure of four feet five or six inches of solid marble, let it be thirty-odd feet high; but I do say, that if this wall is like the part that we examined, it would be extremely doubtful whether it could support such a structure. That is my opinion, founded upon the facts which have come before us and upon the examinations we have made. The swearing is all in one way, the facts the other way.

In relation to the employment of a scientific man, that was at my suggestion. I did not know the quality of the stone. It is not common in the part of the country in which I live; and although the gentleman from Kentucky found fault with the committee for employing that gentleman, I hope it will be viewed by the committee as an honest effort on our part to acquire the information necessary to arrive at a correct judgment.

Mr. DUNCAN. I am very happy to obtain the floor for a few minutes, in order that I may remove an erroneous impression which probably exists in the minds of this committee from the representations made, inadvertently, perhaps, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. McNAIR,] the chairman of this select committee. That gentleman stated yesterday, and he is so reported in the papers this morning, that the committee had examined the walls for themselves, and had come to the opinion, from that examination, that these foundations were in a dreadful condition.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of that committee, and I dissent entirely from that statement. I have formed no such opinion. I have attended every meeting of that committee; I have heard all the testimony, and have taken it at length in writing. I am not now going into a detailed discussion in relation to this testimony; but this I state: The committee have not, to my knowledge, had any meeting of conference since that excavation of the wall to which the gentleman alludes, nor have they exchanged opinions at all, to my knowledge, in relation to the subject as a committee. At the close of the examination of witnesses, it seemed to be the unanimous impression on the minds of all the members present, that the testimony conclusively showed that the foundations were adequate to sustain any weight which may be placed on them. Notwithstanding this, the chairman of the committee expressed a desire that the committee should investigate the walls themselves—dig into them. I differed with him upon that point. I thought it was not befitting for a committee of this House, clothed with unlimited power to send for persons and papers and to examine witnesses, to go out and dig into this green wall, surrounded by a company of men and boys. I did not give my assent to the examination. I did not believe it was necessary, and I did not attend that examination. But since that time I have carefully examined that excavation, and my opinion still remains the same—it is not changed in the least.

And, sir, I dissent also from the statement made by the gentleman, that the outer sides of the wall were mere shells, and the inside filled with small stones. I measured the sides of the wall, and found in each, stones more than two feet in length projecting inward, and many of the stones thrown out of the wall, were from one to two feet long. It is true that in that particular place a large proportion of the stones were small, but the best architects tell us that a wall built of such material, with a suitable proportion of binding stone stretching across the wall, or nearly so, at suitable distances, say once in twenty feet would be sufficiently strong to sustain any superstructure. That it would be stronger than a wall built entirely of large stones, unless these were carefully hammered and fitted, an expense which is never incurred in foundation walls. And the committee should know that the wall, which was the subject of examination, is leveled up to receive windows four feet in width, and distant from each other seven feet, and the wall between them will be carried up with larger stones, and at the surface of the ground is to receive, according to the plan, a block of granite fifteen inches thick and four feet in width.

Now, I say to this House that if any reliance can be placed upon testimony,—testimony the most intelligent, the most impartial, and the most reliable that can be obtained—then the foundations of this extension are amply sufficient to sustain a greater weight than they will be required to bear—that they are better foundations than those of any public building in this city—better than those of any public building ever erected in this country; and we have such testimony.

But, as I said before, my opinion is not changed by this accidental excavation into this green wall. I objected to this mode of examination, because it did not accord with my views of propriety. I do not set up my views as a standard for other gentlemen. They may be better able to judge of such things than I am. But I will say that the examination made by this special committee does not in the slightest degree shake my confidence in this work.

Now, as to the quality of the stone of which the foundations are composed, we have had it tested and the learned professor, who applied the test, says that it is not only capable of sustaining the weight of the superstructure that is to be placed upon it, but that it is capable of sustaining a pressure one hundred times as great. And all the architects who examined the foundations concurred in the opinion that they were capable, at least, of sustaining ten times the weight that is proposed to be placed upon them. So much for the material.

Now, as to the lime. It was testified that the lime used from Seeley's mountain, was the best lime in the country; that it is used upon the public works by General Stuart, the Chief Engineer of the United States, in preference to any other. But it is not to be expected that this mortar bedded two feet in the wall, placed there since the commencement of this session of Congress, with severe frosts every night, should become dry by this time. If it had, it would only have proved, according to the best authorities upon the subject, its inferiority.

But let me go further. This work was all done by the day. Every man employed on it was employed in that manner. Is there any assignable motive that could have induced these men to have laid up the walls hastily, carelessly, or inadequately? Again, the principal architect holds the highest rank in his profession. He has probably had a larger experience in the erection of costly edifices than any other man of his age in the United States. It will satisfy gentlemen in regard to his competency to perform the work assigned him, to be told that the Girard College, in the city of Philadelphia—that grand and massive structure—was erected under his superintendence. And the superintendents under him are men of the largest experience, fully competent for the discharge of their duties, and were constantly present during the progress of the work. And gentlemen of this city—architects—who testified before the committee, stated that they knew many of the masons employed, and that they were good and faithful workmen. Now, what conceivable motive could these men have had to slight this work? I should hesitate to set up my opinions in this case against those of practical and scientific men. And if this committee, on conferring together, had expressed doubts of the stability of the work, I would have proposed that they should submit their excavation in the wall to the examination of some of the most intelligent and practical of the gentlemen who were called to testify, before they ventured, on their own judgment, to report that these walls were insufficient, and in a dreadful condition. And I greatly regretted that the chairman of the special committee saw fit to introduce a statement, apparently designed to awaken the distrust and prejudice the minds of members. With what other view did he state that the money appropriated was drawn and disbursed by the architect, and how, he did not know; "and that the matter deserved inquiry?" Sir, if the architect disburses the money, it is because the law makes it his duty. The committee did not deem it their duty to investigate how and for what the appropriation had been disbursed. If they had made the inquiry, they would have found it properly expended and duly accounted for, every cent.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to interrupt him for a moment? I hold in my hand a letter from the Comptroller of the Treasury—Mr. Whittlesey—to the architect, dated the 10th of February, in which he says all the money has been accounted for. I ask that the letter may be read.

The letter was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, February 10, 1852.
SIR: Your account for the extension of the Capitol from August 2d to the 31st December, 1851, has been adjusted at the Treasury, and a balance of $3,494 98 found to be due from you to the United States, which agrees with your account. Very respectfully,
ELISHA WHITTLESEY, Comptroller.
THOMAS U. WALTER, Esq.,
Architect for the Extension of the Capitol.

Mr. DUNCAN. The architect very freely submitted to the committee his books, containing proposals and bids, his contracts, and all the papers connected with the work; and would, with equal freedom, have submitted a statement of expenditure, if they had requested it. That architect was a stranger to me until the present session; but I do not hesitate to say that in ability, in fidelity, and in integrity, he is not surpassed by any man in the United States. I would as readily place the disbursement of all the money necessary to the completion of this Capitol in his hands, as in the hands of any man or set of men that could be selected to perform that trust. But this is a matter which depends altogether on the law of Congress. They can place that disbursement where they see fit.

Before I sit down, I wish to say a word about the appropriation proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. During the last Congress, different opinions were entertained in regard to the expediency of making the proposed enlargement of the Capitol; but that Congress decided to undertake the work, and voted an appropriation for its commencement. The work has been begun; a large sum has been expended; and I presume it will go on. I presume no one is prepared to say that the design shall now be abandoned. It should, then, be prosecuted with as much expedition as is consistent with economy. Who wishes to see these beautiful grounds incumbered for years with rubbish? I believe that, in this case, expedition is economy. Let the work go forward. The season—the most favorable season in the year for work—has arrived; and the House should lose no time in making the requisite appropriation.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words upon the subject embraced in the special order, and in reply to the speech made yesterday by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON.] I am a member, sir, of the special committee, which that honorable gentleman has honored with his notice, in his own peculiar manner. I was appointed a member of that committee without my knowledge, consent, or procurement, and contrary to my desire, and I have served upon it with reluctance, and from a sense of duty which I owe to this House as one of its members, and from what I conceived to be due to its presiding officer who placed me upon it. Until the gentleman from Kentucky delivered his extraordinary speech on yesterday, I did not feel myself called upon, at this stage of the debate, to express any opinion in reference to the sufficiency or insufficiency of the work which that committee has been directed to inspect, and to report the facts which may be elicited to this House. I had supposed that it would be time enough for me to make my opinions known upon that subject when the report of the committee shall be before this House for its consideration and action. The course pursued by the gentleman from Kentucky has made it necessary for me to depart, in some degree, from that line of policy. In what I have to say, sir, I shall not imitate the example of the gentleman from Kentucky. I shall not seek to elicit the plaudits of any class of persons who may effect a lodgment in your galleries, for the purpose of influencing the acts and deliberations of this honorable body; nor do I intend to follow the gentleman from Kentucky through the mazes of his learned dissertation upon the mechanical structure and perfection of the Acropolis, the Coliseum, and the Vatican, for the purpose of making a display of my architectural learning as he has done. That honorable gentleman has my free assent and permission to go, whenever it may be agreeable to him to do so, with Volney and Laved, over the ruins of Greece and Rome, Memphis and Carthage, Nineveh and Babylon, and to make to his countrymen such report upon his discoveries as may be most agreeable to him; and I assure him that I shall not enter into competition with him for the honor to be acquired by his antiquarian researches into the dusty memorials of past ages. What I have to say relates particularly to the things of the present age. And, sir, I deny that that gentleman has the right, under the usages and sanctions of parliamentary law, to rise in his place here, and make a speech denunciatory of the opinions of a committee of this House, before such opinions have been pronounced and made known by that committee.

Mr. STANTON. Will the gentleman from South Carolina allow me for one moment?

Mr. WALLACE. The gentleman from Kentucky has made his speeches here without interruption from me, and I do not intend to be interrupted by him.

Mr. STANTON. Very well, I only wanted to state a fact.

Mr. WALLACE. What right has he, sir, to impute to me, as a member of that committee, a set of opinions in reference to a matter of public concern, which is in part committed to my charge, before I have uttered any opinion upon the subject; and to make this gratuitous assumption the theme of a popular harrangue upon a supposed state of facts which may not, and as far as I am concerned do not exist, that he may thereby win for himself the approbation and applause of a particular class of persons who surround this Capitol? The gentleman from Kentucky seems to have assumed the peculiar championship of every person who has had the good fortune to aid in laying the foundations of the proposed additions to the Capitol; and his terrible lance is poised for a tilt with every ill-fated wight who comes in his way, whenever a leaf is heard to rustle in the gale. I shall not call his sympathy in this regard in question, or add my sympathies to his; but I say to him, sir, and to this House, that I shall repel in a proper manner any attempt on the part of that gentleman to make any unwarrantable allusion to the manner in which my duties, as a member of this body, are discharged. When I shall express an opinion in regard to the work, which he seems to regard with such pious care, that opinion will then be a proper subject for comment, and not before; and I submit to this House, that the course of argumentation pursued by the gentleman from Kentucky is not sanctioned by parliamentary usage and parliamentary law, and is disrespectful to the committee which he has made the subject of his declamatory assaults, and to this House whose organ it is; and I say to that gentleman that I will permit no such liberties to be taken with me. What purpose can he have in view but to pre-judge the judgment of that committee before this House and the country, and to forestall its action, if that action shall be contrary to the ideas he entertains of his own infallibility? What other end can he hope to accomplish by the course he has thought proper to pursue? Is a committee of this House to be reprobated in advance by that gentleman's display of architectural learning in reference to the cements and conglomerates of Babylon and Nineveh, in order to subdue their minds to his peculiar way of thinking? Must the committee be told before hand what they must do to escape his ire and propitiate his wrath? Would he, sir, give this house to understand that it must legislate to suit the wants of a class of persons who congregate around your Capitol? Sir, this House and the country may well be surprised at what has fallen from that gentleman since the present session began. He has thought proper to urge this House to vote immediate appropriations of money, for the chief reason that a class of persons in this city are out of employment. Doctrines like these may well excite alarm in the public mind. Are the doctrines of the French school of communism to be gravely urged in this House? Will this House entertain the proposition that any class of persons shall come here and demand that appropriations be made to furnish them with labor at the public charge? Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not aware that any member of the select committee, of which I form a part, is opposed to an immediate appropriation to carry on the work upon the Capitol which has been begun. The foundations are laid, and I presume no one absurdly supposes the work is to be discontinued. So far as I am concerned, the appropriations may be made to continue the work, no matter what the report of the special committee may be.

But while I am willing to vote this appropriation, I desire to say that I will vote it that the work which has been begun may go on, and not because the class of persons who excite so much of the sympathy of the gentleman from Kentucky are out of employment. I do not recognize the right of any class of persons to come here in person, or by their representative, and demand that appropriations be made to give them employment. Such ideas, sir, as have been advanced upon this floor by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky should, in my judgment, be met by the unqualified reprobation of this House and the country. These ideas are but the reflex of those of the French school of communism and the right to labor, which erected the barricades in the streets of Paris in 1848, and from the destructive tendencies of which, France has sought present repose by the restoration of the Empire under the military rule of Napoleon II.

Now, sir, I desire to do all I can to relieve the mind of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky from his distressing alarms, in reference to the imaginary rights of the persons whom he defends with such remarkable energy; and I assure him, sir, with the utmost sincerity, that I do not intend to go in the silly hour of night, and burglariously run off with the countless tons of granite and gneiss, to which his friends have given order and design, for the foundations to the additions to the Capitol. Nor do I suppose that the special committee have any serious design to perpetrate such an act of Vandalism; and I assure that gentleman that I do not believe, therefore, that it will be at all incumbent upon him to take his station upon those walls, and there to keep watch and ward to guarantee their sanctity, or to expose himself thereby to the buffetings of the bleak winds until the melancholy notes of the curfew shall summon him to his nightly repose. I hope I may contribute to the gentleman's composure, by saying to him and to this House, that I shall interpose no obstacle to the prosecution of this work.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that in reference to this work, I have no feelings of opposition to indulge. I have not been a constant attendant upon the deliberations of the committee, but I heard and took notes of the testimony until I was perfectly satisfied that the work is sufficient for the purposes for which it is designed, and up to a late day I was prepared to pronounce that judgment before this House. When a portion of the wall, however, was removed by the direction of the honorable chairman of the committee, a state of facts was disclosed somewhat conflicting with the testimony upon which I relied most.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I propose to amend the amendment, by adding one dollar to the sum intended to be appropriated. I do it, not with a view that the amendment shall be adopted, nor for the purpose of saying anything in addition to what I said yesterday in regard to the materials of which the foundations are constructed or the character of the workmanship, but simply to afford me an opportunity of replying to the excited remarks of the honorable gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WALLACE,] who, it seems to me, has worked himself into an unnecessary rage over what I said. Now, sir, if that gentleman will put himself to the trouble of referring to my speech, reported in the Globe of this morning, he will see that the remarks to which he takes such exception applied only to the chairman of the special committee, [Mr. McNAIR,] although from what the chairman had previously said, I might, with much propriety, have embraced him [Mr. WALLACE] in the same category. When I spoke, I did not even know that the gentleman was a member of that committee; and if I ever did know it, it had been forgotten. He need not be disturbed with the idea that any portion of my remarks were intended for him, for he was furthest from my thoughts. I knew him to be a gentleman of great intelligence, as he has shown himself to be of fiery eloquence; and whether he had practical information or not upon the subject under discussion, I should have accorded to him too much judgment not to see that all the clamor which has been raised against this work, arising from the investigation which has been instituted, was unjust, as well as silly and ridiculous.

I made no attack upon the members of the committee. If the gentleman listened to my speech he knows I did not. I intended none. I designed simply, in the remarks which I was about to submit to the committee, to explain the amendment which I had offered, and inform the House as to the necessity of the appropriation asked. If I had not been interrupted, I should simply have done this and taken my seat. But one of the gentleman's colleagues [Mr. WOODWARD] interrupted me, by submitting a question to the chairman of the special committee, [Mr. McNAIR,] who rose in his place, made a speech, and led this House to believe that you, sir, entertained the same absurd opinions in regard to the foundations that he had expressed.

Mr. WALLACE. Which one of my colleagues does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. STANTON. Mr. WOODWARD.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield the floor?

Mr. STANTON. Oh, yes; if he desires it. I shall be polite to him, and allow him to say what he wishes, though I could not. Now, sir, your chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, was the first to allude to the action of the committee. He brought the subject up, and you have to thank him, not me, for associating you with the absurd conclusions to which he had come. What did he say when appealed to by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. WOODWARD] to know when the committee would report? I read from the report of his remarks:

"The investigation has been going on regularly, and WE are almost ready to report."

He says "we," which includes you with the rest of the committee, if I understand the meaning of the word. "We have found the walls in a dreadful condition."

He is misrepresenting you, not me.

"We have found the walls in a dreadful condition—in a condition which has astonished us ALL."

The word "we" is not broad and comprehensive enough, in the judgment of the speaker, to embrace the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WALLACE,] and he uses one of more enlarged signification, and says "us ALL."

"When we came to examine it, we found that wall with shells built up on the outside, and small stones thrown in on the inside."

Here, then, is the first intimation given to the House, that the committee designed to make any such foolish report as that language implies. I did not introduce any allusion to it until this development was made by the chairman, and I confined what I had to say to him alone. If he had not broached the subject, I should not have referred to it. I could not have thought that his intelligent colleagues would concur with him in his strange conclusion as to the instability of the foundations, and therefore meditated no attack upon the members of the committee, as the gentleman seems to suspect. I am happy to find, by the manifestations of to-day, that all the members do not concur with the chairman. This is all, sir, that I deem it necessary to say in reply to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON.]

Mr. WALLACE. I will esteem it a favor, if the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow me five minutes to conclude what I have to say.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am persuaded that I cannot do half the good that the gentleman from South Carolina can do, and I therefore yield the floor to him with great pleasure.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I am much indebted to the courtesy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER.] When, by the rules of the House, my remarks were suspended, I was proceeding to say that the examination made of an interior portion of the wall disclosed a state of facts somewhat conflicting with the testimony upon which I placed the most reliance. It was stated by a witness, who was examined before the committee, that the wall is solid masonry throughout. The investigation which followed does not sustain that testimony, if I understand the true meaning of the witness. It appeared, upon examination, that a portion of the interior structure is composed of what is called "rubble," and mortar; that is, of small stones thrown in, without much attention to the order in which they are placed, and the interstices filled in with mortar or cement, with the view to form a conglomerate. I was upon the wall, sir, but a very short time. The examination was commenced when I was not present. I attended, with several members of the committee, at the time referred to, at the special request of the honorable chairman of the committee, [Mr. McNAIR,] and this House has been informed by the gentleman from Kentucky, that he, too, faithful to his trust, was with the spectators above, watching intently the progress of the investigation; and what he saw, doubtless gave point to the characteristic tirade which he pronounced here yesterday, and to which the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BEALE] has just alluded. It is very natural that the gentleman from Kentucky should go where his sympathies and associations lead him; and while he was surrounded, at the time and place referred to, by many of the persons whom he has so perseveringly sought to quarter upon the public Treasury, I can readily conceive that he was in a position entirely congenial to his taste, and am not surprised that the speech which followed should be pronounced as the result of the inspiration drawn from such an exalted source.

When the examination of the wall was completed, my first impression led me to conclude that the work was insecure. In that opinion I was not confident. My reflections since that time have induced me to yield my doubts to the better judgment and greater experience of the able architect who has the work in charge. I have been assured by that gentleman, in presence of the committee, that the wall is sufficient to bear five times the weight of the superstructure that is to be built upon it. During the few minutes which I spent in company with that gentleman in the committee room, I formed a very favorable opinion of his ability; and I am informed, from the most reliable sources, that his personal integrity, sound judgment, experience, and knowledge of architecture, are of the most satisfactory character. Nothing has been elicited by the action of the committee which, in my judgment, can authorize me to come before this House and inflict a wound upon his character and good name, by declaring that he has, in any wise, been unfaithful to the trust confided to him. I will not trifle with his reputation by the commission of such an act. So far as I am made his judge, he shall have justice at my hands. I am prepared to yield whatever doubts I may have entertained to the judgment of the architect, and to say to this House, that I believe the work is sufficient for the purposes for which it is designed.

It will appear from what I have said, that I do not concur in the opinion expressed yesterday by the honorable chairman of the committee, [Mr. McNAIR.] But acting upon the view of the matter which I have expressed, I suggested to the honorable chairman the propriety of going on to make his report by detailing the material facts which are in possession of the committee, and leaving the subject to the judgment of the House.

I do not suppose that the Congress will act so absurdly as to commence a work of this kind, expend a considerable sum upon it, and then discontinue it. I see no reason why the work should not progress; and I am ready to vote any appropriation of money that may be necessary to prosecute it to its termination.

Mr. STANTON, by unanimous consent, withdrew the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I then offer as an amendment, to add $2 to the sum of $500,000 contained in the bill. The whole business of regulating the additions to this Capitol is placed in the hands of the architect; and the question is not whether the stones laid there are laid permanently, and according to our judgment, and whether the lime that is used is of the kind that ought to be used, but it is simply the question, is the person employed there competent to the work he has undertaken? Of that we have two modes of judging; one of the past, the other of the future. All the antecedents of that gentleman, sir, are in the affirmative. Every act of his life goes to prove that he is competent to the work he has undertaken, not simply as a finished mechanic and accomplished architect, but as an honest and conscientious man, who will not leave a work that he has undertaken unfinished, and will not declare that as good which he does not believe is good, although his own hand has performed it.

In the course of my official relations with the city which I in part represent, I was called for many years into close connection with that gentleman, and although it would be impertinent in me to say that I know him to be an accomplished architect because his judgment and his action are superior to my judgment or anybody's action, I can only submit the work of his hands for other persons to decide upon, rather than my assurance or my certificate of his ability. I have watched his work. I know him as a man, as a citizen, as an architect, and as a man of business; and in all of these relations he stands preëminent among those with whom he is acquainted. It was in the performance of my official relations with that gentleman, that I looked almost daily upon the foundations of a building quite as heavy in its weight and in its cost as the wings of your Capitol will be. It has rested twenty years upon the foundations which were then laid, and there is not beneath the Girard College a sign or evidence of the yielding of a single portion of the stone upon which they rest. These works, I think, are about twice as thick, twice as strong as the foundations to which I have alluded. I infer, therefore, they are capable of sustaining double the weight.

In the remarks which I have to make, and which I consider as giving an opinion contrary to that of my colleague, the chairman of the special committee, [Mr. McNAIR,] I beg leave to state, my associations with him leave me not a doubt of the purity of his intentions and those of the other gentlemen of the committee; but it is his misfortune to be at the head of a committee upon a subject with which he is not professionally acquainted; and it was the misfortune of the committee to be composed of gentlemen who did not claim a professional knowledge of the work in which they were to be engaged. It was of course expected they would call to their aid men of professional excellence—men competent to judge of the work before them. I think the testimony which has been adduced, by gentlemen free from all motives of partiality, was such as would satisfy the House of the competency of the work. I am happy to hear the remark that fell from the honorable gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WALLACE,] that whatever may be the fate of a portion of that wall, which I believe competent, there should be no hesitation at all about voting for this appropriation. The work must go on; and the sooner it is commenced, the sooner, I hope, it will be finished. I trust, therefore,—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CARTER. I am opposed to the last amendment of $2.

Mr. GENTRY. Oh! let them have it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. I merely rose to remark, that it occurred to me all this discussion of the mechanical sufficiency or deficiency of this wall was a departure from the real danger to which the wall is exposed. It seems to be treated as a question of masonry—as a question of mechanics—and its capacity to sustain the superstructure that is intended to be erected upon it. Now, my opinion is, that the wall is sufficient, and will endure until it answers all the purposes that it will be required to answer. The danger is not as to the weight that it will have to sustain; the danger is not to mechanical forces; the danger lies in a far different quarter. It is more a question of locality. I do not think the wings are in the right place. [Laughter.] They are too near the eastern skirt of this empire; and I have no apprehension at all but that it will rest, mechanically, firmly upon its present foundation, and bear upon its surface the edifice you propose to place upon it, until the weight of empire transfers it to the center of the empire. You had better address yourself to that consideration; for the time is soon coming when the difficulty will be not in the weight upon it, but in keeping the foundation still. The foundations will partake of the spirit of the Republic, and make a western trip. I hope it will be—

Mr. FLORENCE. May I ask a single question, as to whether that is the gentleman's idea of progress—that we are progressing from a Republic to an Empire? [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. I do not think I can make a "foggy" understand it, [laughter;] but I alluded, of course, to the empire of territory. Those gentlemen who travel in the "fog" are very diligent in taking distinctions. [Laughter.] All this inquiry about the mechanical structure of that wall is a work of supererogation. In my opinion, if the wall was not half as heavy as it is, it would endure all the weight it will ever have to sustain. The traveling qualities of those wings of the Capitol will be felt before they fall down. [Laughter.]

The question was then taken upon the amendment of Mr. CHANDLER to the amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. FLORENCE moved to amend by inserting "$4" after the words "$500,000."

Mr. FLORENCE. I have been very much gratified this morning at the turn the debate has taken upon the question before the committee in relation to this appropriation; but I have been pained to hear gentlemen reflecting, by remarks that have been made, upon persons occupying a peculiar sphere in society. Now, it occurs to my mind, that nowhere so much as upon the floor of this House do a certain class of people, as they have been termed, require defenders. There is no especial merit attached to the fact that a person is a working-man, so called; but it is especially becoming those living or being in that sphere of life, that they should defend others in the same sphere against indiscriminate attacks upon them. I do not appeal to the galleries; I do not refer to the fact that we are surrounded by persons urging Congress to make this appropriation; but I do say, here, that it becomes our duty, especially at this time, to make this appropriation, because the honor of this Union is involved. I will tell you that, when the first appropriation was made for the extension of the Capitol, the peculiar class of working-men required as operators upon it were very scarce. It is a trade that requires peculiar perfection, if I may be permitted to laud that class of people so much, particularly in a work of this kind. If I am correctly informed, and I believe I am, the superintendent of this work procured from Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and other cities and parts of the Union, excellent workmen; and they came here upon the assurance of that gentleman that the work should be continued to them, and that they should not be permitted to starve, as they have nearly been doing this most inclement winter, because Congress refused to make this appropriation. The distress that existed among these workmen who were frozen up here, would make the hair of every member of this House stand upon end if it were recited.

Mr. HALL. Will you vote them a farm?

Mr. FLORENCE. I am willing to do it. I am willing to vote land for the landless, and when the bill comes before the House, proposed by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] my vote will be found recorded in its favor. But here are these workmen waiting, not upon the bounty of the Government, but asking that the pledges given them shall be fulfilled—that the assurance made them when they came here may be redeemed. And I feel a peculiar pleasure and pride that I am permitted to rise in my place upon this floor and say thus much for that most useful class of our citizens. I do not desire that they shall have special legislation, (nor do they ask it,) but I do desire that they may have extended to them all the privileges and all the rights others enjoy.

Mr. HENN. Who gave those assurances?

Mr. FLORENCE. I understand, and I stated it as clearly and distinctly as I could, that they were made by persons engaged by the Government. They, as they had a perfect right to, sought to get the best talent they could in that peculiar line, and the assurance was given to them of continuous employment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WALSH. I propose to say just a word or two to correct an error which I think has been repeated this morning, and into which a gentleman from North Carolina, not now in his seat, [Mr. VENABLE,] fell on a previous day, and that was, that it had been asserted that it was the primary duty of this Government to give labor to men who were in want of it. There was no such demand by the friends of the extension of the Capitol, on the ground of primary duty. These men came here in the depth of winter, not knowing anything of the particular terms of this contract. They came here to engage in the erection of the Capitol, and, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] said, were frozen up with their families. I say, without asserting a primary duty, that it presented as strong a case of appeal to the sympathies and right feelings of this House, as when you saw from your Capitol windows the burning edifices of Alexandria. It was a case, as I stated heretofore, appealing to the sympathies; but they did not appeal to the sympathies. There was no pretense of primary duty. These men came here under a certificate of the architect, stating that they could be usefully employed by the Government. While gratifying a reasonable sympathy, we were not asked to violate any rule in reference to the contract they were called upon to make. This House, as I then suggested, should have been proud of the privilege of doing so. It has been said, by high authority, "that this world is a tough wrestler, who has a bear's grip for the poor;" but it should be the proud privilege of every man, legislating for the great interests of the country, to remove the burden which always bears upon the back of the wayfarer upon this world. Now, a word or two more. I do not admit the rebuke set up by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JOHNSON,] the other day, and reiterated by the eloquent gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. WALLACE.]

I do not know of any drawing-room rule which is to prevail here and control me under the responsibilities which I owe to my country and constituents. If I see a spectacle of distress in this gallery, which is under my jurisdiction, I shall refer to it, without consulting those rules of high-life which seem to be brought in here to direct legislative power. It is a pressing case—it is a case in which men, offered employment when their employment was deemed to be necessary by those having the control of the execution of this contract—presenting a spectacle of distress, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] has well said, almost unexampled, even to the view of men who have been accustomed to see all the fluctuations of poverty. Many of them are my own townsmen, accustomed to the ordinary comforts of life, which they procured by the sweat of their brow. They are now in the midst of your community, and under circumstances of distress which were drawn upon them in consequence of their discharge from employment. It is a case calling for the loudest and strongest sympathy in every human heart, and the heartiest expression of that sympathy by every human tongue.

Mr. ORR. I do not propose to make a speech. I wish to give notice now, that when an amendment is moved hereafter I shall insist that the rules of the House be enforced, requiring that gentleman should confine themselves to explanations of the amendments they offer.

Mr. BRENTON. I offer the following amendment:

And that no contract, made in prosecution of the work aforesaid, which shall in any way exceed the sum hereby appropriated, shall be binding upon the Government.

I desire to see such an amendment as that attached to every bill which may be proposed to this House for appropriating money to public works; and I would not only desire to see it attached in form, but I would desire to see it put in practice from this time forth. We are called upon each year to pass a deficiency bill for the purpose of meeting expenditures made in connection with the public service—expenditures which exceed the amount, from year to year, that is appropriated. My object in offering this amendment is simply to keep every individual, connected with the expenditure and disbursement of public money, within the limits prescribed by law, and to hold them to strict accountability if they refuse to do so. Why is Congress called upon, in connection with the public service, to pass deficiency bills? It is because the expenses and disbursements have exceeded the amount appropriated. I do not design, at this time, to discuss this question; but I merely state that I desire to see this principle incorporated into every appropriation bill for the consideration of the House; and in future I desire to see all the officers of the Government, especially those having charge of the public funds, held to the rule most rigidly. I hope this amendment will be attached to that appropriation.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I agree with the gentleman, and am in favor of the general principle he contends for, but there is no necessity for incorporating any amendment of that character with this bill. If there was any probability that this appropriation would finish the work, why, for fear they might go beyond that appropriation and involve us in a larger expenditure, I would vote for his proposition; but nobody imagines for a moment that this appropriation will finish the Capitol. Of course, in contracts that are hereafter to be made, the rule can be carried out in furtherance of the gentleman's design. I have stated this as a reason for voting against the amendment now, although I approve the general principle. But my object in rising was to appeal to the gentleman not to press his amendment. There really seems to be nothing to discuss. Everybody agrees that this appropriation is necessary. If the walls are to be gone on with, as they now stand, the appropriation is needed. If they are to be pulled down, and stronger ones built, the appropriation is equally necessary. Why shall we not agree, by general consent, to let this bill pass, and upon the coming in of the report of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McNair] all these questions which have been thrown irregularly into this debate will naturally come up. It is Saturday, and I think it would be right for us to take half a day's holiday, as much at least as we give to the negroes down South. I appeal to gentlemen to let this bill pass, and then by common consent adjourn.

The question was then taken upon Mr. BRENNON's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. GOODENOW moved that the committee rise and report the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee, [Mr. STANTON.]

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. MASON. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

Provided, That the expenses incurred in testing the stone and other materials to be used in the construction of the work, shall be paid out of this appropriation.

The special committee have been testing the strength of the materials used in the construction of the foundation; and under the resolution of the House authorizing the committee to do it, I suppose the authority was involved to incur the necessary expense. It was a matter which was left wholly to their judgment. They have done so, and bills will come in. Some object to their being paid out of the contingent fund, and I offer this amendment, that these expenses may be paid out of the appropriation of $500,000; and that the Committee on Accounts may have nothing to do with the matter.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I hope this will not be done.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to oppose that amendment. I think the amendment is quite unnecessary, and is altogether irrelevant to this bill; and I make a question, that it is not in order to pay the expenses of a select committee, which has been appointed by this House for the purpose of examining those foundations, out of the general appropriation, for the purpose of completing the building. I think the amendment is not in order. The expenses for which it provides are a part of the contingent expenses of this House, and ought to be paid out of the contingent fund. And it ought to be so, for the purpose of showing the House what is the expense of making such examinations, and of appointing such committees as have been appointed in this case. I mean no disrespect to the committee whatever; but the account of the contingent expenses of the House ought to show the expenses attendant upon its own action. This expense ought not to be charged to the fund for the completion of the Capitol. Upon this ground I think that the amendment ought to be rejected.

The question was then taken, and Mr. MASON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. FLOYD. I move to increase the expenditure $5. We have, during the last year, had an expenditure of $50,000,000. We are called upon now to pass a deficiency bill, amounting to several millions more. We have an estimate of the expenditures for the next year amounting to $42,000,000.

Mr. ORR. I rise to a question of order. The rules of the House require, that when an amendment is offered, the gentleman proposing to speak upon that amendment must confine his remarks to the subject-matter of the amendment. The gentleman is not doing it. I made the announcement that I should make the question of order, and of course I shall carry it out.

Mr. FLOYD. I will vary my amendment, so as to strike out one half the proposed appropriation. I know of no estimate of expenditure that has come to us from the Departments which may be omitted with less injury to the public service, than the half million of dollars asked for by this bill. This Hall is not so badly arranged but what you can find an abundance of gentlemen who are willing to occupy it. Nor am I aware of any department of the public service that is to suffer by allowing these foundations to remain as they are for one, two, or five years. We have a debt, in a time of profound peace, of some $64,000,000, if I mistake not; and so we are going on granting every expenditure asked by this Administration—which certainly does not commend itself to the country by any very strict notions of economy—we are going on to grant every expenditure that is asked for, without ever making a beginning at reform or economy. It seems to me, we are acting in the dark upon this subject. This House have appointed a committee to investigate the capacity of the foundation, but it has not yet reported, although we have been told, it may report next week. In the meantime, without the report of our select committee, we know not whether this foundation is safe or unsafe. We are proceeding to grant an appropriation to erect a superstructure, and then to inquire whether the foundation is safe or not. As I have said before, there is no department of the public service that would suffer by the delay of this appropriation; and if the accounts we have had here of the sufferings of the workmen be true, certainly they cannot find worse paymasters than the Government has been to them.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FLOYD.] The subject embraced in his resolution was freely and ably discussed at the last Congress, when they made the appropriation for the Capitol. I consider it unnecessary to discuss it at this time, and therefore call for the question.

The question was then taken upon Mr. FLOYD's amendment, and it was rejected.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to strike out three fourths of the sum. I desire to say a word or two in reference to my own particular position. I voted in the last Congress, if my recollection serves me correctly, against the appropriation of $100,000. I supposed then, that the cost of these two wings of the Capitol would amount to some several hundred thousands of dollars. I really did not suppose then that they were to cost some three or four millions of dollars, perhaps five millions. I rise now for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee, the House, and country, to the important fact, as it presents itself to my mind. It is this: We have a report made by a standing committee which authorizes and advises the House to pay $250,000 for the purchase of Winder's building, now in the occupancy of the Government. I would most respectfully suggest to the consideration of the committee, that instead of completing the wings of the Capitol, they should erect proper buildings for the Departments, so as to supersede the necessity of paying $250,000 to Mr. Winder for his building. This building, which has served all the purposes of Congress for the last thirty-odd years, will serve us a few years longer.

I think there is something in the suggestion of the sagacious gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CARTER,] that we know not how long the Capitol will remain here. But, long or short, I say that, according to my conceptions, there is no necessity for expending four or five millions of dollars to build the wings of the Capitol.

Let these gentlemen, from the cities of Philadelphia and Baltimore, who desire to quarter their constituents on the Government, make application directly, and I am willing, as one member of this House, limited as my means are, to assist these suffering ladies and gentlemen; but I object—I protest, in behalf of my constituents, against the quartering of any gentleman's constituents on this Government.

Mr. MOORE, of Pennsylvania. I had intended to say a word upon this subject; but, at the solicitation of gentlemen around me, I forbear to say more than that I am opposed to this amendment.

The question was then taken on Mr. McMULLIN's amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee, [Mr. STANTON,] it was put, and that amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBBINS moved that the committee do now rise and report the bill, as amended, to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass; which motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the joint resolution "to authorize the continuance of the work on the two wings of the Capitol," and had directed him to report the same to the House, with an amendment, with a recommendation that the amendment be concurred in, and that the joint resolution do pass.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, moved the previous question on the adoption of the amendment.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. FICKLIN called for the reading of the amendment, and it was read.

Mr. SCURRY demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. FICKLIN asked for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered; and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. FITCH moved to lay the joint resolution on the table; and on that motion he demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the question being put, it was decided in the negative—yeas 43, nays 124, as follow:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, John Appleton, Averett, Babcock, Beale, Brenton, Buell, Joseph Cable, Carter, Caskey, Churchill, Daniel, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dimmick, Dunham, Edgerton, Ficklin, Fitch, Floyd, Gamble, Green, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Howard, Thomas Y. How, Jackson, Andrew Johnson, John Johnson, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Morrison, Murray, Nabers, Orr, Andrew Parker, Scurry, George W. Thompson, Townsend, and Wildrick—43.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Allison, William Appleton, Ashe, Barreter, Bartlett, Bell, Bennett, Bibb, Breckinridge, Briggs, Brooks, Albert G. Brown, George H. Brown, Burrows, Busby, E. Carrington Cnbell, Lewis D. Campbell, Thompson Campbell, Chandler, Chapman, Clark, Cleveland, Clingman, Cobb, Colcock, Cottman, Cullom, Curtis, Dockery, Doty, Duncan, Durkee, Eastman, Evans, Ewing, Faulkner, Florence, Fowler, Henry M. Fuller, Gayles, Gentry, Giddings, Goodenow, Gorman, Grey, Grow, Hall, Hamilton, Harper, Isham G. Harris, Sampson W. Harris, Hays, Hascall, Haven, Hebard, Hibbard, Hillyer, Holladay, Horstford, Thomas M. Howe, Ives, Jenkins, James Johnson, Daniel P. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, George G. King, Kuhns, Kurtz, Letcher, Lockhart, Edward C. Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, McCorkle, McDonald, Mende, Miller, Molony, Henry D. Moore, Morehead, Olds, Samuel V. Parker, Penlee, Penniman, Perkins, Polk, Porter, Price, Riddle, Robbins, Sackett, Schoolcraft, Schomaker, David L. Seymour, Origen S. Seymour, Smart, Smith, Snow, Stanly, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Abraham P. Stevens, Thaddeus Stevens, Stone, Stratton, Stuart, Sutherland, Taylor, Benjamin Thompson, Thurston, Tuck, Wallace, Walsh, Ward, Washburn, Watkins, Welch, Wells, Addison White, Alexander White, Williams, Woodward, and Yates—124.

So the House refused to lay the joint resolution upon the table.

The question recurring on the adoption of the amendment, it was put and the amendment was agreed to.

The question then was ordering the joint resolution to a third reading; and, being put, it was so ordered.

The joint resolution having been read a third time,

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, moved the previous question on its passage.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put; and, being put, the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. POLK, the House then adjourned till Monday.

PETITIONS, &c.

The following petitions, memorials, &c., were presented under the rule, and referred to the appropriate committees.

By Mr. IVES: The petition of Smith Bartlet and 89 others, for an appropriation for a survey of the harbor at Cape Vincent, New York.

Mr. STOCKTON presented a petition of citizens of the State of New Jersey, praying Congress to pass a law to prohibit absolutely the deportation, banishment, or immigration from foreign countries to the United States, of any and all convicts, felons, and paupers, publicly recognized as such at home in their own countries; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a petition of citizens of Germantown, Pennsylvania, praying a modification of the bounty land law; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

COLLINS'S LINE OF STEAMERS.

Mr. RHETT. I have a petition, very numerously signed by some of the first merchants and ship-owners in the city of Charleston, praying for an appropriation in favor of Collins's line of steamers. As the petition is very brief, I beg leave to read it.

The petitioners state that it is not as residents of Charleston, South Carolina, but as patriotic citizens of the United States that they make this petition. The Collins line is not a local, but a national interest. New York, from its commercial position and relations with Europe and this continent, happens, indeed, to be the point to and from which these magnificent and unequalled steam-ships make their trips; but they do not regard them as, for that reason, any more properly belonging locally to that city, than the general Federal revenue, of which so large a proportion is collected at that point, can be regarded as belonging to New York. They say, whatever objections of private interest to the object for which they petition some of them might possibly entertain from the rivalries and competitions of commerce, they cannot but forget all such considerations in the larger and higher interest with which they contemplate the great national rivalry, the new Pacific naval warfare now in progress between the two leading maritime countries of the world—the English Monarchy as represented in the Cunard, and the Republic of the United States in the Collins line. This has risen, by general recognition in both continents, above the level of any personal interests, great or small, into the higher character of national contest, in which the national pride and honor, as well as the more substantial interests morally incident to national reputation, are more deeply involved. England sustains, and is always ready to sustain her line with whatever further Government support may be requisite for that purpose. The Collins line has thus far gained its honorable triumphs, those victories of peace "not less renowned than those of war," only at the expense of loss to its owners too ruinous, as is evident, to be further continued. Without the aid now asked for the American flag must cease to float over the noble line of Transatlantic steam-ships, which evinces so strongly the glorious triumphs of American mechanics, engineers, and navigators. They feel that this would be a national disaster and disappointment, as well as a national disgrace; and that it would be beheld with feelings of regret not less universal than those which pervaded the remotest border of the Union during the period when the fate of the pioneer vessel of the line, "the Atlantic," was the prominent subject of national anxiety and almost national mourning. They therefore petition that such amount of aid as, on satisfactory investigation may be found to be necessary for the purpose above stated, may be extended to the Collins line by Congress.

I will state that this petition is from the most respectable merchants and others in the city of Charleston. I have never voted for any appropriation of this kind, nor do I suppose that I shall vote for this; but it is due to the petitioners, as well as to myself, to state that during the last fall I was in Europe, and had occasion to see and know that the same feeling which actuates the petitioners here upon this subject, very largely actuates the English people on the other side of the water. I present the petition, and move that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The petition was so referred.
